Restoration of America's forests after logging operations will be safer and more efficient with this new system for igniting forest debris remotely. Developed by United Technology Center of Sunnyvale, Calif., the system includes a launcher and a self-propelled incendiary projectile that will ignite on impact, allowing Forest Service personnel to start controlled burns in logged-over areas quicker, simpler, and from a safe distance. With waste products cleared, fire hazard is reduced and reseeding facilitated.

Napalm

Imagine yourself living in a ghetto this summer, with the sky raining napalm. To quell racial riots, whole areas of cities may be destroyed by National Guard and Federal troops in their defense of "law and order". Someone may say, "We had to destroy Detroit to save it." With the substitute of Vietnam for Detroit, this phrase may be used as a future rationale for Johnson's policy.

American involvement in Vietnam has only extended the war there; if our governments had not decided to support the corruption of the rich, the local Viet Cong would have easily defeated the incompetence of South Vietnamese Benedict Arnolds with popular support. Now more than two and a half million peasants have been driven from their home by the war; and as Senator Edward Kennedy revealed from his recent trip to Vietnam most (about 80%) of these people fled in fear of American bombs, not the Viet Cong.

One of the most effective weapons of terror used by the American forces in Vietnam is napalm. Rather than spare troops to root out snipers in villages, napalm is used to drive the populace into government hands; these refugees are herded into decrepit camps which are supposed to replace their razed homes.

Napalm is used in so-called "free-firing zones" to pacify the peasants; it is a cruel weapon that executes those who happen to be in the way of American justice. American pilots, loaded with their 1,000 pound napalm bombs, are "given a square marked on a map and told to hit every hamlet within the area." (Washington Post, 3-13-68).

The American public has grown too insensitive to the war of attrition in which battle tolls are the bloody gauges to victory. Americans are more concerned with the mathematics than with the morality of the war; however, to each Vietnamese bombs are a very personal thing.

Civilians, mostly women and young children, who are killed and maimed as the result of our "self-defense" 10,000 miles overseas are effortlessly scratched off the conscience as the casualties of war. However, our Vietnamese victims will not forget us, easily as Americans forget them. The memory of our involvement in Vietnam is forever embedded in the war scars of Vietnamese whose napalm burns are stories of horror in them themselves.

Children are frequently the victims of napalm raids in hamlets where they often constitute 70% of the population. These casualties are not the accidents of war, but the result of the Johnson administration's policy of unrestricted bombing of the Vietnamese countryside. Thus the use of napalm takes a special character of its own because of its strategic value to Johnson's plans for a military victory. I protest the strategy and use of napalm; I do not favor the Vietnamese being killed with any weapons, but napalm seems to be especially used against civilian elements. Noncombatants suffer much more from napalm, than troops.

Glundersprung vs. Gelandersprung

To the editor:

I wish to inform your readers of several mistakes which appeared in an article on the sports page (Feb. 8) concerning a recent "Glundersprung" contest held at Glen Ellen on the 20th and 21st of January.

The author is mistaken in his spelling of "Glundersprung" and of the interpretation concerning the judging of a jump. The correct spelling is "Gelandesprung," the "spread" that is described in the picture's text is referred to as a "spread-eagle," and is not costly to good form points, but rather, such a jump enhances the competitor's score.

I feel that a little more research into similar articles would be appreciated by your readers.

Wayne Stark '71

Editor's Comment: The author called the German Department for the correct spelling of Glundersprung and at this particular event at Glen Ellen the jumper did lose points as it was not a "spread-eagle" contest, but a Glundersprung contest.

The Breeding We Bring With Us

To the editor:

We are the swell, educated people of UMass. Aren't we great? We study hard all week long. We get all tensed up and then we relax on weekends. How do we relax?

Well, we attack speakers in the dorm halls. We attack chairs and break them. And windows and bathroom shower partitions. We relax by collecting lamps from the lounges.

And we tear out phones from information desks. And we borrow stereos from lounge floors, along with televisions and furniture. Some of us don't like the furniture so we throw it off the twelfth and nineteenth stories of the Towers.

Oh well, a little celebration never hurt anybody. When we finish celebrating, some of us get sick—In the halls, on the floors, and in the elevators. And one ingenious soul defecated in a shower Stall, while his friend urinated out of a window.

They missed the other game, called "Set Fire to the Couches." That's all right, they could play Variations of the game later. All this is tiresome. That is why we can't reach the Ashtray to grind out cigarettes, and are forced to do this on tables and rugs. Too bad this isn't a funny story.

Don LeBlanc

"General George" Was Not of Dissenter Stock

To the editor:

The author of Friday's elastic editorial ("They Cannot Win") did a strenuous job of stretching an analogy—too far.

Taking the most obvious distortion first, General George (and Martha) were hardly of "dissenter stock"—fearing the imposition of Anglicanism. They were Anglicans, along with Gov. Jefferson, Rep. Madison and Lieut. Monroe.

Secondly, I wasn't aware that the U.S. was foisting a blue-eyed God on the Vietnamese—or that we even had such a God.

I strongly doubt that religion played a causal role in either war. I have the impression that the author's other "causes and motives" for the war in Vietnam are equally irrelevant.

Demonstrators Criticized

Campus demonstrators who disrupt speeches and obstruct employment interviews are "wholly incompatible with the basic tenets of a great university," University of Michigan president Robben Fleming told Michigan State University graduates at fall commencement, the MSU State News reported.

For years, Fleming said, universities have fought against restrictions on speakers and on, many campuses the fight has been won.

"How are we to explain," he asked, "that while all kinds of speakers may come to the campus, some of them will be so disrupted that their views may not be heard?"

He said some excuse interruptions on the grounds that there has always been heckling when the speech topic is of emotional interest to the audience. "This may explain, but it does not justify," he said. "For those of us who would defend the right of free inquiry within the university, there cannot be a double standard."

Some argue, and with merit, Fleming said, that employment interviews are not an integral part of campus life and therefore should be conducted off campus.

"Obstructive tactics, however, are not directed at all interviewing but only at selected interviewing," he said.

Others, he said, resolve the problem by invoking a 'higher morality' to determine who should be allowed to interview. "The trouble with this concept is that it is not at all clear who is to be in charge of judging the dictates of a higher morality," Fleming said.

He said the demonstrators fail to recognize the nature of the recruiting process—that a student who signs up for an interview does so as an "exercise of individual judgment."

The right to dissent vanishes, he said, when those who disagree with a given kind of employment can tell others that they may not exercise individual freedom of choice.

Going Dutch... A Stab at Pride or Pocket

by JANET CAROPRESE
Women's Page Writer

If it were left to tradition, the man would always be responsible for the expenses of a date, but with the increased prices of entertainment at UMass and in surrounding areas, it has become extremely difficult for a male to date frequently and still remain solvent.

Dutch treat dating has been suggested as a possible solution to the problem. In an attempt to find out the general consensus of opinion to this, several people were asked what their reaction would be to dating on this basis.

Rich Shaw, a junior at UMass had this to say: "Ordinarily I don't think it is right. If I were going out with a girl for a long period of time and we wanted to go to something like a play, and I didn't have enough money then it might be all right. But under ordinary circumstances I don't go for it."

This seems to be a common opinion of the male students interviewed. According to one sophomore, "The guy should pay if he asks the girl out," and one male student was quite firm in his belief when he said: "If a boy asks a girl out, it is his responsibility to pay for the expenses of the date. Even in a steady relationship I think the boy would be taking advantage of a girl if he asked her to go Dutch."

The one main exception found was a skiing date. Because this sport is so expensive, almost every one feit that each person should pay his own way. As a chemistry major put it: "You have to do it sometimes, especially in the case of skiing. If you go out quite often, I can't see why you can't go Dutch once in awhile."

Knowing a boy well was the main factor according to a sophomore zoology major. She said, "It's a very touchy situation. You have to know the boy well because boys have a lot of pride." She also thought that if you were in doubt as to whether you should offer to pay your own way, don't! Many girls agree with her as to the difficulty in offering to go Dutch.

Another variable which seemed to be quite important was that of a steady relationship. As an accounting major put it: "A steady relationship changes it a

From Orgy to Candy

by JUDI WERBY

The other night, for lack of doing anything better, I found myself in the great dark pit better known as Goodell's bound periodical room. There by coincidence you might say, I prefer to use the word fate though, I came upon an article on Valentine's Day.

Great you're saying to yourself, so she found a nice story about some guy named Saint Valetine and his groovy candy-filled life — right? Such is not the case, though.

NOW IS THE TIME TO REBEL! The new generation must overthrow their goody-goody illusions about that infamous patron Saint of lovers. We're now living in a society of hippies, revolutionists, dissenters, and "truth-niks". So it is time to find out that pagan fertility rites and the mating of birds in February is what Valetine's Day was all about.

The Romans celebrated the festival of Lupercalia which was in mid-February. No hearts and flowers for the Romans, though. Just good old pagen rites and all of the benefits that go with them.

Enter Medieval man with the "newest" scientific discovery birds only mate in the month of February. Add these two together and what have you got? The American "dream" of Valentine's Day — hearts, flowers, candy, and cards.

Alas, isn't it a grand disillusionment to find out that another of life's realities isn't. I mean from primitive sex practices to the familiar big red heart it's quite a blow to our sense of stability. Darn those Romans!

Happy Valentine's Day To All

Why College?

MRS. or B.S.

"Most UMass girls are hardly what you'd call dedicated students. They lack the ambition to do anything more than pass time here and shop around for a husband". This male opinion of the UM co-ed depicts a whole new batch of middle-class housewives, who at age 40 will be bored with their lives and with themselves.

While there are many women here who freely admit that UMass is a more comfortable place to "pass time" than a job, they do seem to realize the value of an education. Surprisingly enough, they do have valid reasons for trudging to classes aside from their ulterior motive of catching a man with a college degree.

Some of them even plan to utilize their educations for useful careers. Of course, these career women will delete the number of daytime soap opera fans and diaper changers, but the unambitious ones will be sure to find their niche in a comfortable chair in front of a color television set. Will it make any difference that they will watch television through educated eyes?

An English major from the class of 1969 has no career ambitions, wants an educated husband, but more importantly is using her education to broaden her outlook about everything, and consequently is learning to appreciate more in life.

On the other hand, a sociology major who wants a career, because through a career she will be doing something she wants and believes this will fulfill her as a human being, hopes to attract an educated man by her own self satisfaction. That is to say, because she will be happy with herself this will project to those around her.

There is a definite parallel between the career-minded and the marriage-minded UMass women. They are both striving to learn who and what they are through their educations.

Broad Viewpoint

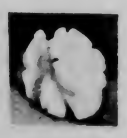
By simply wandering on the ground level of the Student Union, one is faced with the choice of two rooms—"Braves" and "Squaws". But lovers of Metawampee, you don't have to stop here. There is no discrimination on this page. We welcome your readership and invite your rebuttals.

"Squaw Talk" (many thanks to Bill Dickinson for coining the title and to Don Epstein and Bob Gorman who gave this page its impetus) is dedicated to the female population. But what is a squaw without a brave! Thus, although at times the page may appear slightly biased (and rightly so), it will also involve those facts and ideas of the male population which effect females.

"Gentlemen of the old regime in the South used to say: ' woman's name should appear in print twice—when she marries and when she dies' ". (Arthur Calhoun)

But we have come a long way since the Civil War — woman suffrage, equality in employment, the elimination of curfews on our campus . . . No longer does the woman remain seen and not heard.

"They talk about a woman's sphere as though it had a limit;
There's not a place on earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whispered "yes" or "no",
There's not a life, or death, or birth,
That has a feather's weight of worth
Without a woman in it."



(Kate Field, Woman's Sphere)

And this page aims to prove it.

Ear Piercing Demands Caution

With the steadily increasing trend toward wild earring designs, more and more are courageously boring holes in their earlobes. A few precautions are in order however.

Do-it-yourself ear-piercing is risky, warns the American Medical Association, increasing the chances of infection and the development of scar tissue. The medical group warns that the small, self-piercing earring loops now being widely promoted are not considered safe.

These devices have sharp points which are supposed to pierce the ears within a few days as they are worn. Infections requiring medical treatment have developed from the use of these devices.

Physicians will not pierce ears having any type of rash or infection or if small cysts are present in the lobe. Persons subject to keloids (scar overgrowth) or who have this tendency in the family, or those allergic to nickel or other metals should not have their ears pierced, the AMA warns.

But once one has taken this big step, there are still a few cautions. Person's with pierced ears, especially recently pierced ones, should wear earrings of known composition which do not contain nickel. Nickel can cause allergic skin reactions more often than other metals used for jewelry.

Piercing earlobes, reports "Today's Health", followed by close contact with nickel before being completely healed, can induce nickel sensitivity. Mechanical, physical, or chemical injury to the skin, followed by contact with sensitizing allergens, favors the development of allergic reactions.

Once a person becomes allergic to nickel, the sensitivity is usually permanent, and a skin reaction may develop whenever a person comes in contact with the nickel.

Sterling silver and 14K or heavier gold do not have any nickel and rarely cause reactions. White gold and German silver contain nickel and therefore can cause an allergic condition.

Go in style. Enjoy the bright and wild designs. But make sure the wire backings are safe and that the piercing is professionally executed.

The Art of UMass Ceramics

Ceramics is a relatively new course at the University. It was started about five years ago wih a couple of classes per week, and now has over 200 people per week. The course offers B.F.A. and Masters degrees. There are prerequisites for the course which were not included in the catalogue: Basic Design and Basic Drawing. The classes total about six hours a week. The emphasis of the course is on the aesthetic rather than the functional uses of ceramics. A completed piece of stoneware takes about four weeks and when done properly will turn out harder than steel, but extremely brittle.

YOUR FATHER'S MUSTACHE

STEP INTO THE PAST AT YOUR FATHER'S MUSTACHE

A visit to any one of the Your Father's Mustache banjo emporiums is like journeying to some of the golden eras of America's past. It is the Gay '90s, a prohibition speakeasy, a World War I recruiting center, the uninhibited atmosphere of the Roaring '20s, the splendor of Tiffany glass and what might have been John L. Sullivan's neighborhood bar, all rolled into one.

It is this nostalgia which in five years has made Your Father's Mustache the second largest night club chain in the world. Patrons singalong with "The World's Worst Banjo Band" in a setting which blots out the world of supersonic rockets and big beat music.

Format of the Your Father's Mustache banjo emporium is uninhibited fun and plenty of nostalgia.

lot because then a girl knows how much money her boyfriend has. She should offer to go Dutch once in awhile. But when it comes to regular dating, I don't expect anyone to pay for it but me."

What happens when your boyfriend is short of funds? Barbara Shewchuk, a sophomore majoring in fashion merchandising had this to say: "If we both want to go some place that is expensive, and I know he doesn't have the money to pay for it, I think it's all right for each of us to pay his own way."

This is how one senior felt about the same situation: "I don't believe in a Dutch treat date unless you know the guy is in definite financial difficulties. But you have to be careful how you go about doing it so you won't hurt him."

This is not the general consensus of opinion judging from these remarks made by another senior coed: "Fellows should always pay for the date. If he does not feel he has the funds, he shouldn't pick an expensive place. It would be enough just to go somewhere small or meet for coffee."

Big weekends are financial headaches according to one fraternity man. He expects Winter Carnival to cost him between $40 and $50. He said that Dutch treating is "good sometimes when the guy knows the girl. It gets expensive taking the same girl out all the time. It's bad enough having to pay for two when you get married."

Because there are so many differing opinions, it would seem that the advisability of going out Dutch can only be decided by the two persons involved. Sometimes this means going beyond the concept of Dutch treating.

One coed suggested, "If it's someone you care about and date frequently, the girl should treat him occasionally, rather than each pay his own way." In this way the offer to pay would be more a token of affection and would help take away some of the awkwardness of Dutch treating.

Like helping to unsnarl traffic jams in our cities, fighting air pollution or finding new ways to provide power for underdeveloped nations. It takes sociologists, meteorologists, astronomers, writers—in fact, it takes people with just about every kind of training. But, more than any of this, it takes people with nerve, gumption, intellectual curiosity—people who care about what happens to the world. So it's not only your major we're interested in. It's you. What Now for The Reserves?

NEW YORK (CP) — Many of the Reserve airmen summoned to active duty in the first flush of the USS Pueblo crisis are beginning to wonder when, where and whether they will be sent to a combat zone.

Some of the 14,600 suspect now that if they engage in any fighting it will be in Vietnam, not North Korea.

There is speculation that a main reason for the Jan. 25 call-up was to free home-based active duty units for use overseas.

The Pentagon declines to provide any hint of what is to come.

A newsman asked the Defense Department whether any of the Reservists have been deployed overseas; if so, which units and if not, what the units are doing.

A Pentagon spokesman replied: "We do not discuss deployment of men, aircraft, vessels or units."

A survey of the bases where the Reservists are serving indicated, however, that so far none has received foreign shipping orders.

In general, the units appear to be training on a daily basis as they used to, only on weekends.

Many of the Reservists spend their nights on their assigned bases and then hurry off to after-hours moonlighting jobs to help support their families. Most of those interviewed insisted that morale was good, but quite a number said it was fraying around the edges.

Lt. Charles Harrison, a 33-year-old commercial airlines pilot in civilian life, whose unit is at New York's Floyd Bennett Field, told a reporter Tuesday:

"We've just been coming out here to work every day. I finally flew my first flight yesterday. They don't quite know what to do with us. I find it quite frustrating. There seems to be a feeling we'll be used to supplement forces in Vietnam."

More cheerful was Lt. Cmdr. Robert Hogan, commander of a Reserve squadron station at the Willow Grove Naval Air Station in Pennsylvania.

"The morale of my men is great," he declared. "We're working hard, flying and conducting normal daily and squadron operations. Everybody took the call-up well. After all, it's what we had to expect as Reservists."

S. Sgt. Jerry Psenka, called up with the 445th Military Airlife Wing of the Air Force, said "the attitude of most of the guys is that they have a job to do."

Mass Hockey Team Hungry for Victory vs. UConn Tonight

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

It took the U.S. Olympic hockey team five games to record its first victory and UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff hopes that the same thing will happen to his squad tonight.

UConn will be the Redmen's opponent for a 7:30 encounter at Orr rink, the second meeting for the two clubs this season.

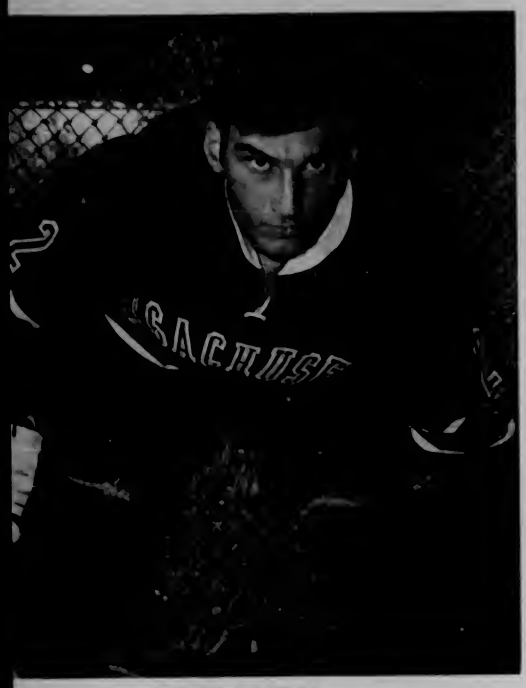
UMass has not won a game in 1968 dropping four straight to Colby, Williams, Vermont and Army. Their last win came in the consolation game of the Yankee Conference tourney at Vermont where the Redmen beat UConn, 4-2, late in December.

In that game, the Redmen jumped to a quick 2-0 lead in the first period only to see the Huskies bounce back to tie the game in the middle stanza.

UMass goalie Pete Scoville was instrumental in keeping the score tied as he stopped four UConn solo dashes during the first two periods.

The Redmen seemed to wake up and play good hockey in the third period and pulled out a 4-2 victory in a game which they could have easily lost

If the past few games between these two rivals mean anything, the game should be very close. Last season, UMass won twice 5-3 and 7-6.



The year before, UConn was victorious twice, both games going into overtime. The overall series between UConn and UMass stands at 15-4-1 in favor of the Redmen.

The Huskies have been on a hot tear recently, beating Babson 11-2 Holy Cross, 5-2, and Lehigh 6-1 within the past week.

Among common opponents, both UMass and UConn have lost twice to Vermont and both have beaten Amherst.

Canniff wants to use this game as a springboard for his team to reach a .500 record in Division II play. Currently, the Redmen are 3-8 in their division with five games remaining against Holy Cross (2), Amherst, Norwich and UConn.

Amherst has already fallen victim to the Redmen as has UConn while Holy Cross has been beaten twice by UConn. Norwich does not have a very powerful squad so Canniff's hopes for a five game sweep are not as difficult as they may seem.

rance's Goitschel Nips Gold Medal

CHAMROUSSE, France (AP)—Marielle Goitschel grabbed France's third Alpine l medal in the Winter Olympics Tuesday, but for one heady, breathtaking hour she s second to 16-year-old Judy Nagel of Enumclaw, Wash.

he 22-year-old ringleader of nce's feminine "fearsome some" had to uncork an exive second run to win the s slalom, barely edging ly determined Nancy Greene Canada by .29 of a second.

he final combined totals were Goitsche, 85.86 seconds, and Greene, 86.15. Another nch girl, Annie Famose, got bronze in 87.19.

owever, the Americans had three veteran racers and evne else shaking their heads mazement after the wild heat when the four United es girls placed in the top But there was one catch: e of them were disqualified missing gates.

he top six after the first run ugh 56 gates were Wendy n of San Pedro, Calif., 39.25; Nagel, 40.19; Miss Goitl, 40.27; Rosie Fortna of rren, Vt., 41.31; Miss Greene, 5, and Kiki Cutter of Bend, , 41.46. But after the gateers' reports were heard, Jutook the lead ahead of Marand Nancy while Misses Al- Fortna and Cutter were inated.

he stage was set, pitting the ear-old American school girl nst two of the best female rs in the world.

arielle started sixth through 57 gates of the second run owed by Judy and Nancy. Be- going back up the hill, the nch girl said: "I will go all It is either the title or ing for me."

he flashed over the 425-meter se, that dropped 156 meters, 45.59 seconds and all eyes ed to Judy, a 5-foot-4, 123nd brunette.

he shot out of the starting "a little too straight," acding to U.S. 1964 bronze medwinner Jean Saubert — and d through the first gates ly. Then she fell, taking with U.S. hopes for a first Alpine al in these Olympics.

.S. Coach Bob Beattie, watch- from the bottom, turned y and then said with tears is eyes, "we just never seem et a break. Everything goes nst us, but the kids keep t on fighting."

udy regained her feet, skied ugh more gates and fell in before finishing with a bla- zing burst but in a very slow 59.77.

Miss Greene, World Cup champion in 1967, followed with the fastest time of the heat—44.70—but it wasn't enough to catch Marielle, who exulted:

"This is the title I wanted to win the most. I was getting tired of being second."

She referred to her second-place finishes in the slalom at the 1962 and 1966 world championships and the 1964 Olympics. She won the giant slalom in 1964.

A third french girl, Isabelle Mir, finished fifth and the fourth, Florence Steurer, fell on the second run.

"I just don't know what happened," said Miss Nagel, smiling as she tried to mask her disappointment. "I just got off to a bad start."

I knew right away I missed it," Miss Allen said of the gate she failed to take. "I was going too fast. By the time I realized it, I couldn't have made it anyway. It was 25 or 30 gates below the start."

Beattie called the course extremely fast and difficult to attack because of the gate arrangement.

"But you couldn't take it easy; you had to go all out regardless of the conditions," he said.

Miss Goitschel and Miss Greene expressed sympathy for the Americans.

"They really didn't have any luck today," said the winner. "They are very strong, but I think they set up too fast a pace."

"I feel sorry for them because they are very good, but just don't have enough experience," said Miss Greene.

OLYMPIC SHOTS

Americans got off to a poor start in the men's figure skating as expected winner Emmerich Danzer of Austria took a narrow lead over countryman Wolfgang Schwarz after two of the five compulsory figures.

Tim Wood of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., was fourth, Gary Vivconti of Detroit sixth and John Petkevich of Great Falls, Mont., 13th.

Toini Gustafson of Sweden captured her second gold medal, winning the women's five kilometer cross-country ski race ahead of two Russians. No Americans were entered.

Training runs began on the four-man bobsled event after four days of weather delays.

Houston and St. Bonaventure Are Only Unbeaten Top Ten Teams

(AP)—It's 21 down and 7 to go for Houston and 17 down and 5 to go for St. Bonaventure, the only two all-conquering powers in the Associated Press' Top Ten rankings of major-college basketball teams.

Houston, led by the famed Big E, Elvin Hayes, maintained its grip on first place in the weekly poll with a 21-0 record while St. Bonaventure held onto fourth place with its 17-0 record.

Hayes' team plays Miami of Fla. Thursday and the Air Force on Saturday, both at home and then winds up its regular season schedule against U. of Tex.-Arlington, Valparaiso, Hardin-Simmons, Va. Tech and West Texas State.

St. Bonaventure, with the lesser-known but able Bob Lanier as its star, travels to Seton Hall Wednesday for its only game of the week and then finishes with Creighton, Niagara, Canisius, and Fairfield.

After that it's the tournaments for both teams.

In the weekly poll, announced Tuesday and based on games of last Saturday, Houston collected 28 of the 36 first place votes and 351 points in the balloting by a national panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

UCLA, 18-1, received the other 8 first place votes and 332 points. Behind the top two came No. Carolina, St. Bonaventure, New Mexico, Columbia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Vanderbilt and Duke. The Top Ten, with total votes, through games of Sat., Feb. 10.

Redmen Face Hot Holy Cross at Cage Tonight

By GLENN BRIERE
Sports Editor

In a rematch of the earlier game at Worcester which UMass won, a rampaging Hol Cross basketball team takes on the Redmen tonight at the Cage at 8 p.m. A frosh prelim between the two schools will start at 6.

ED SIUDUT

KEITH HOCHSTEIN

High scorers, rugged rebounders for Crusaders

The Crusaders lost to UMass, 71-65, on January 17, and at the time were 5-5. Now Jack Donohue's outfit is 11-6 and on a four-game win streak. And Holy Cross, which is a notoriously slow starter and fast finisher, is battling for a berth in a post-season tournament, probably the NIT.

The Crusaders, after that loss to the Redmen, have gone on to win six of their last seven game. The one loss was to UCLA, which explains itself. The last three wins have been especially impressive, over Boston College, Fordham and Syracuse.

Probably the main reason for the hot streak has been the play of 6'7 junior forward Ed Siudut.

Last year's leading scorer and rebounder, Siudut again leads the Crusaders in rebounding and is second on the team in scoring with a 24.2 average. In his last four games, Siudut has scored over 30 points in each.

Siudut, much to the amazement of those who see him for the first time, does not score the way most men his size do. He scores most of his points on long outside shots, usually from the corner. His shot is not really a jumper, but more of a one-handed push shot.

Holy Cross works most of its offensive formations around Siudut. Usually, the Crusaders will play a strong side formation with Siudut on the weak side. Thus, he often finds himself unguarded and more often than not puts the shot in.

His only weakness is on defense and that is improving, too. Needless to say, his size gives him a good advantage under the boards, which explains his leading the club in rebounds with 244 in 17 games.

But stopping Siudut is not the only order of the night for UMass. There's a guy named Keith Hochstein who's been good for some 24.3 points a game.

At 6'4, Hochstein is one of the smallest pivot men in New England but one of the best. A rugged and aggressive player, the senior captain of the Crusaders averages 10 rebounds a game.

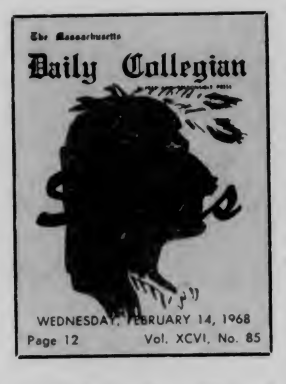
Because of his size, Hochstein is usually called upon to play bigger men, some as much as six or seven inches taller. But his aggressiveness under the boards (Donohue calls him "88 per cent animal") enables him to outplay many taller men.

Hochstein is a great driver, and his timing makes him formidable on offense. Defensively, he is rough to handle. One of the reasons that UMass beat Holy Cross was the job that Dick Samuelson did guarding him. If the Redmen can do it again tonight, it should be a other great game.

Hochstein and Siudut ra one-two in scoring among maj colleges in New England. T key to tonight's game will u doubtedly be how well the R men can contain them.

Ron Teixeira, the 6'9 junio would have been the other sta er up front, but he quit t team in December. Apparentl the Crusaders haven't miss him at all.

Donohue will probably sta 6'4 junior Gerry Foley, a loc boy from Worcester, at t other forward spot. He is good rebounder who shoots streaks. He averages 5.5. A other forward likely to see a tion is Joe Christof, another 6 junior.



In the backcourt, Holy Cros is led by 6'3 senior Al Stazinsk another Worcester product. St zinski is Holy Cross' best d sive player and is usually call upon to guard the opponent best scorer.

Stazinski can also score, s seen by his 12.1 average. H drives well and is a good shoo er. He'll also move inside to h the boards occasionally.

The other starter is 6'1 seni Jim Murray, a good ball-handl who shares the directing of t Holy Cross offense with St zinski. Murray doesn't sco much (7.3), but when he do shoot it is often in clutch sit ations.

The Crusaders' strategy night will be obvious- get t ball to Hochstein and Siudu Billy Tindall will undoubted be guarding Siudut, and Pet Gayeska will probably sta against Hochstein. Samuelso who did such a great job Hochstein at Worcester, w most likely see a lot of acti tonight.

The series between the tw schools is rather lopsided favor of Holy Cross, 18-5. La year, the Crusaders handed t Redmen two defeats, 78-65 Worcester and 64-54 at the Ca

Gymnasts Battle Springfield In One of Season's Big Meets

By STEVE BROWN
Tri-Captain Varsity Gymnastics Team

On Wednesday evening at 8:15, the UMass gymnasts will be at Springfield College to do battle with the Maroons in what may be the most crucial and closest meet of the season. Springfield comes into the meet riding high after a 175-173 victory over Navy last Saturday.

According to assistant gymnastics coach Jim Dusenbury, who scouted the meet at Springfield, both teams had an "off day" especially in the last two events (parallel bars and horizontal bar), when the pressure of a mere point or two caused several "broken" or missed routines.

On a good day, either team could hover around 178 points —the highest score for the Redmen this year has been 180 against Army two weeks ago.

Dick Del Gallo, number one still ring and number two floor exercise man who has been sidelined for several days with a hand injury, notes quite earnestly that he will be ready to compete come Wednesday night. All-around man Joe Reed has been resting an ailing wrist in order that he too may compete in the meet.

The rest of the squad is in good shape and enthusiasm is running sky high this week down at "The Workshop" in Boyden Auxiliary gym.

For those planning to attend this meet, tickets can be purchased at the Memorial Field House in Springfield for $1.00. It is advised to arrive early—Springfield College is noted for packing its 3500 seat Field House.

Frosh Cagers Oppose Tall Crusaders

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

A Holy Cross freshman basketball team that is 11-1 and has five players 6'5 and bigger obviously presents a large problem to any opponent. It will be the tall order of the UMass frosh to defeat this young Crusader five tonight in the Cage, at 6 p.m.

This Holy Cross team is reputed to be one of the finest freshman teams in the school's history. The one blemish on its record was a 4-point, overtime loss to the Boston College frosh, a B.C. team that has defeated the Little Redmen. Ironically enough the other three teams that have been defeated by the Crusaders, they being, Yale, by a score of 75-67, St. Anselm's, 96-67 and Springfield, by 87-72, all defeated the UM frosh.

With all the height on the H.C. team, the leading scorer on the squad is a 6'1 guard. He is Jack Adams, a deadly outside shooter and fine driver, who hails from Trenton, N.J. and Trenton Catholic. The other guard spot has been manned by two different players. They are 6'1 Neil Ryan from St. Edwards Prep, Philadelphia, Pa. and 6'5 Joe Phelan of Union Catholic, Clark, N. J.

Up front is where H. C. has won their 11 games. In one starting forward slot is 6'8 Bob Kissane. Kissane, the younger brother of B.C. varsity captain, Jim Kissane, hails from Chaminade H.S., New Hyde Park, N.Y. He is a fine shooter and also excels as a defensive specialist.

In the other corner, two players have seen a lot of action. They are 6'7 Pete Knapp from Catholic Central H.S., Watervliet, N.Y. and John Harlin 6'7 out of No. Bergen (N.J.) H.S.. Knapp has been the better scorer of the two, while Harlin is more of a defensive player. Both are strong rebounders.

At center for the Crusaders is 6'8 Don Sasso. Sasso is from Waterbury, Conn. and Sacred Heart H. S. Sasso besides, averaging close to 17 points a game, is the leading rebounder on the squad.

The Little Redmen, meanwhile are coming off their most decisive victory of the season, walloping Franklin Pierce, 95-53, Saturday night. However, Franklin Pierce, with their biggest player being only 6'3, little resembles the tall, talented Crusaders.

Coach Broaca is undecided as to his fifth starter to go along with Bob Dempsey, Bill Greeley, Frank Schaffeld and Kan Mathias. Broaca started Tom Nally for the first time Saturday and Nally led U M scoring with 19 points. However, Broaca may go with the taller and more experienced Jim Ryan.

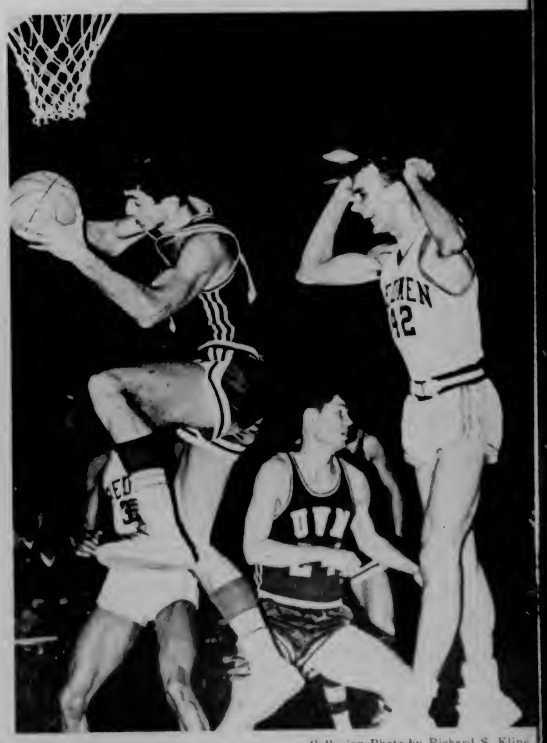
Varsity Lacrosse Team Initiates Preparations for 1968 Season



By RICHARD MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

Approximately forty-nine members of the varsity lacrosse team reported to room 251, Boyden Building, four o'clock Monday afternoon, as preparations for the 1968 season begin.

Coach Dick Garber expects to work with a team composed of eight seniors, twenty-three juniors and eighteen sophomores. Led by co-captains Walter Alessi and Bill Sinclair, this year's team is similar to, but stronger than the 1967 club which posted an 8-4 record.

Strength at goal and defense is anticipated by Coach Garber. The attack will remain about the same as that of last year, with the big question mark this year being midfield positions.

Vacancies were caused by the graduation of Kevin O'Brian, Bob Murphy, Don Rana, and Fred Mollander—all midfielders. Also, Howie Goffman (attack), Fred Foley and Ira Yauner (defense).

Lederle Addresses Senate On Problems of University

By RICHARD S. KLINE
News Editor

UMass President John W. Lederle, addressing the Student Senate last night, explained the problems of the University—the place that, according to Lederle, some "Legislators view as 'Lederle's Empire'."

The chief executive of the University said that UM is building "interesting and fine dorms" and that the University is "getting the finest architects." He further emphasized that our "faculty is recruiting nationally," bringing the finest academicians to the campus.

Stating the main problems of the University, the President emphasized the need for good relations with the State Legislature. "We must go to the Legislature...we want a good physical plant, and it does not help our goals to see poor headlines in the Boston paper.

"A major problem," stated the President, is that not every applicant is admitted." He said that there are 17,000 applications for 3,000 places. "We accept 7,000 for the 3,000 places, but there are 5,000 more fully qualified." This creates misunderstanding and resentment among some of the state's residents, he explained.

The President noted that the University is expanding at a rate of 1,500 per year. The message we should carry back to the state is that we are the peoples' University, wanting to accept everyone; but we physically can't.

"We are thought of by some state residents to be the University of western, Mass.," he stated. "When will we be recognized as the University of Massachusetts? When will we be the statewide University of Massachusetts?" Directing a quip toward Beacon Hill, Lederle said, "There are legislators who literally believe that there are Indians in the Valley!"

New Hampshire Primary: Anything Can Happen

By ALAN MATISOFF
Staff Reporter

CONCORD, N.H.—Late last fall most political experts felt that the New Hampshire Primary would offer little excitement despite the glamour of its first-in-the-nation status. The outcome seemed relatively cut and dried. That is not the situation today.

An early November Gallup Poll of rank and file Republicans listed former Vice-President Richard Nixon as holding a 3-to-1 lead over Gov. Rockefeller of New York and Gov. George Romney of Michigan.

Exclusive MDC News Analysis

However, with Rockefeller's backing, Romney has been making great strides forward in an attempt to recover the support he lost following his September 5 "brainwash" statement. When he entered New Hampshire, his popularity was a low 13%, Nixon's at the time was as high as 65%.

As of February 3 Romney's meet-the-people "grass roots" campaign has increased his standing, and though Nixon still leads, the number of undecided voters has risen to a staggering 52%, a figure that has forced Mr. Nixon to alter his campaign itinerary.

Nixon must prove that he is a vote getter, something he failed to do in the 1960 election. The only way he can possibly accomplish this is with a plurality of at least 55%-60%, anything less would constitute a major setback and could conceivably eliminate Nixon as a choice for many Republican delegates.

A Nixon defeat is improbable, but not impossible. His campaign directors seem unworried and complacent. This coupled with Romney's everything-to-gain-nothing-to-lose attitude and New Hampshire's predictably unpredictable voters (remember the Lodge write-in four years ago) could produce some interesting developments in future primaries.

On the Democratic side, the point of interest centers upon Senator Eugene McCarthy. McCarthy is challenging President Johnson as a peace candidate, a move designed to test the popularity of Johnson's foreign policy. It is felt that McCarthy realizes he will not wrest the nomination from the President, nor does he expect to win in New Hampshire. What he does

AFL-CIO Pledges Support For Model Cities Program

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—President Johnson, in a move to meet the threat of rioting in the nation's cities, will ask Congress for $2 billion to clear slums and build low-income housing, an informed AFL-CIO labor source said Wednesday.

"It's going to be a terrific housing message," said one source. Johnson will probably send the housing message to Congress next week, or by the end of the month at the latest, he added.

Top AFL-CIO officials meeting here, including President George Meany, knew of the President's plans in pledging labor's cooperation Tuesday in the federal model cities program, it was learned.

Johnson will ask Congress for $1 billion to expand the new largely experimental model cities program into large-scale rebuilding of big city slums, the sources said.

The President will propose another $1 billion to immediately expand construction of low-income units from about 50,000 a year now to 250,000.

In the second year, construction would rise to 500,000 low-income units a year and to 700,000 in the third year under Johnson's proposal, the sources added.

The presidents of 18 AFL-CIO building trades unions Tuesday pideged their help in solving labor problems stemming from the proposed federal housing program. They also promised to work actively with civil rights groups to recruit Negro youths into their 8,500 union locals across the nation.

This was a sharp turnabout for the building trades, which for years have been the target of racial discrimination complaints. In the past, while denying racial bias, the unions have largely lapsed into a defensive silence in the face of such charges.

The expectation of a big federal housing program that would sharply increase jobs for union members lies in part behind the pledge against discrimination.

The law creating the model cities program requires maximum hiring of slum residents.

The unions in Tuesday's action pledge to help unskilled slum youths train for jobs under the federal program.

"This was meant to remove any idea that the building trades are a roadblock" to a housing program, a source said.

University Concert Association Presents Cellist Janos Starker

As part of the concert series being presented by the University Concert Association, Mr. Janos Starker, well-known cellist, will perform on Friday, February 16 at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union ballroom. An open reception for the artist will follow in the Colonial Lounge.

Spectrum Has New Role: General Interest Medium

Spectrum, after long-delay, has finally hit the UMass campus and a second issue is already being prepared according to editor Barbara Ditkoff.

The magazine, which began almost three years ago as a handbook guide for Freshmen, previewed its newest role as a general interest medium last month when distribution to dormitories was completed.

According to co-editor Barbara Ditkoff, the magazine has been received well by most members of the campus community. "There are errors and problems that have to be worked out but the general campus opinion has been favorable to Spectrum," she said.

One of the problems is the unresolved question of campus versus off-campus contributions. The question has been raised by the Administration and the student Senate in their initial reaction to the magazine.

"Soliciting on campus for the first issue was more than difficult and the staff made a good attempt to reap the local literary harvest despite the end result," Miss Ditkoff said, adding, "The fact is that the UMass community was quite unreceptive to Spectrum. We hope that by establishing ourselves as a publishable, literary magazine both the quantity and quality of campus contributions will increase."

Some members of the Administration have made it clear that they are opposed to Spectrum using Student Senate funds if it is not going to present campus contributions to fiction, poetry art and photography.

In reply, Miss Ditkoff said that the next issue of Spectrum, scheduled to appear in April, will have a good deal more local material.

"Besides providing a media for campus expression, Spectrum also serves to entertain and, possibly enlighten, the campus. The first issue certainly accomplished this," she said, noting that another essential function of Spectrum, to provide practical experience in magazine production, was also carried out.

"We are encouraging not only greater student contributions, but greater student participation in the production of the magazine," Miss Ditkoff said. A number of positions on the layout, fiction and non-fiction staffs were open as well as a few vacancies in other areas of production including business and advertising.

"The organization is stronger now than it was last semester," she said, adding that the next issue of Spectrum would reflect the growth with a larger more co-ordinated magazine.

She said that the press run of 8,000 would be maintained but that the size of the magazine would be up in the area of 60 pages.

A new system of distribution is also being worked out to insure faster, more equitable circulation. Along these lines, Miss Ditkoff advised commuters that copies of Spectrum would be available in the office on the second floor of the Union between 2:30 and 4:30 Mon., Wed., Fri. Persons seeking staff positions should also apply at that time.

How to interview 130 companies in half an hour.

Talk to the man from General Electric. He represents 130 separate GE "companies" that deal in everything from space research to electric toothbrushes. We call them product departments. Each one is autonomous with its own management and business objectives. That's why a job at General Electric offers the kind of immediate responsibility you might expect to find only in a small business. Right from the start you get a chance to demonstrate your initiative and individual capabilities. And the more you show us, the faster you will move ahead. As you do, you'll find that you don't necessarily have to spend a lifetime working on the same job in the same place. We have operations all over the world. Chances are you'll get to try your hand at more than one of them. Our interviewer will be on campus soon. If you're wondering whether it's possible to find challenging work in big business, please arrange to see him. He speaks for 130 "companies."

Johnny Carson to Highlight Winter Carnival Concerts

Comedian Johnny Carson will head the list of favorite entertainers who will help celebrate the University of Massachusetts 1968 Winter Carnival Feb. 21-25.

Carson will host two shows on Saturday, Feb. 24. Doc Severinsen and the NBC Orchestra, singer CeCe Grant, and dancers Bud and CiCi Robinson will be featured in the two-hour romp with Carson.

A sprinkle of stardust, a quirk of fate and a timely wit enabled Carson to jump aboard NBC's The Tonight Show which has enjoyed top ratings since Carson took over the show in 1962.

Carson started out in show business as a young magician billed as The Great Carsoni. Following graduation from the University of Nebraska, he soon had his own West Coast radio show and later his own network show from California.

While working for Red Skelton as a comedy writer, Carson filled in when Skelton had an accident. After his appearance there, he was signed to host the network show "Who Do You Trust?" from New York for five seasons.

Since 1964 Carson has entertained in major cities across the country, including Las Vegas where he made his first major night club engagement. He has returned there for four record-breaking appearances.

His appearance at UMass will highlight Winter Carnival Weekend. On Friday, Feb. 23, Your Father's Mustache Banjo Band will entertain at two shows in the Student Union ballroom. The Great Friendship, a popular singing group, will also favor the audience with some of their hit songs the same night.

The Righteous Brothers, The Byrds and Glen Campbell will be featured in a Sunday afternoon concert, Feb. 25 at 5:30 p.m.

The five-day festival will officially begin with the crowning of the Winter Carnival Queen at a rally outside the Student Union Wednesday night, Feb. 21. The queen will reign over the scheduled events of the carnival which include tobogganing, sleigh rides, an old and new fashion show, silent movies, a basketball game, and the winter olympic games.

An old fashioned country store is now open in the Student Union to provide carni favors and cheese and cracker delectables. Tickets for all the concerts are on sale now in the Student Union box office.

Fort Lauderdale Issues Policy on Student Conduct

The Dean of students has recently received a memorandum from the city of Fort Lauderdale, Fla. informing students of city policy regarding their conduct during spring vacation.

1. Do not come to Fort Lauderdale unless you definitely have a confirmed housing reservation. Our policies and ordinances prohibit sleeping in cars and/or sleeping in the open. Campers or trailers are not permitted to park on the beach. If this type vehicle is to be used as living quarters it must be parked in a trailer park specifically licensed for this purpose.
2. All the laws that govern the conduct of the individual will be enforced. A person must be 21 years of age in order to purchase or consume alcohol. Persons guilty of intoxication, (it should be noted that drinking in the open is not permitted) narcotics, use of false identification, creating unnecessary noise or any other form of disorderly conduct and any other unlawful act will be arrested and prosecuted. Violations of the traffic code will result in apprehension and prosecution of the offender.
3. Parents and school officials of any and all students arrested during this period will be officially notified.

Students should be aware of the fact that persons who are arrested and convicted on any charge will have established a permanent, and sometimes criminal record against themselves which could have a detrimental influence later in life.

Ladies and Gentlemen . . .

Is chivalry dead at UMass.? And if it is, then who is to blame?

The other day a coed strolled through the halls of the Engineering Building with Professor Marcus. They were deeply engrossed in a discussion of the lack of friendliness and consideration among the people of our impersonal world, especially the general lack of male respect for the female sex. Two boys walked ahead of them, opened the double doors and passed through, then absent-mindedly let them shut in the girl's face. Professor Marcus and the coed had to laugh—it was such a perfect and timely example of what they were discussing.

Such incidents are not rare. It seems that the era of the gentleman, like the age of chivalry, has passed us by. The loss, however, should not come as a surprise; for the era of the lady is also long-gone.

If the goal of modern woman is the eradication of that double standard, then she cannot expect to keep her feminine identity intact. If the girl of today wants to dress like the boys, talk like the boys, and act like the boys, then she should not be offended when she is ultimately treated like "one of the guys." In her striving for equality, contemporary woman is no longer a paragon of femininity. She cannot, therefore, expect to be treated as one.

Those girls who are awaiting anxiously the arrival of "knights in shining armor" should take a few moments out for objective self-examination. If they themselves are not acting like "gentle maidens in ivory towers," then they can forget about those knights and start being realistic. There are still gentlemen around, but most often they are around the ladies. It is a question of values: does modern woman want rights, or does she want respect?

Chivalry, then, is not really dead. He is merely hiding, sleeping somewhere in the past with femininity. Let's wake them up!

What every campus needs is a good 5-minute dialogue.

For that's the trouble with the college world today . . . everybody seems to be talking to himself.

That means students.

Sometimes administrators.

But especially faculty. For we lecture at seas of placid faces which scarcely nod, even in wide-eyed slumber.

And the real tragedy of our academic times is that the highly vocal minority should create the image of youth on the American campus as being more willing to live for nothing, than to die for something.

"Workingman" Urges State Law Change

W. J. Van Orden came up to UMass last Thursday from Fitchburg to get a little publicity in the student newspaper. On that same day his letter to the editor arrived, and, when he culminated his persistency by walking into the Amherst store where the editorial chairman works, the letter had been read and somewhat dismissed.

With a handwritten cover letter on pink paper referring to himself as a "working man"—later he said he was a teacher—the candidate to challenge the slate picked by the party bosses introduced himself.

His two-page letter containing the observation that he was contemptuous of "our youth, who want so much and work so little," was by and large rhetoric and only slightly informative as regards the reasons he had to run to be a delegate.

In person, Van Orden was more successful in expressing himself. He explained his reason for running as actually a campaign to change this law which gives priority to party members selected by the State Committee. It is debatable whether his or any candidacy is the best method of public education—but undeniably it makes a contribution.

Unfortunately, Van Orden's statements, very deliberately submitted in print, cannot exert much pressure on the legislature and makes one think twice about electing him a delegate to a national convention even as a protest vote.

What kind of a state is it, that in order to positively express the view that delegates to national Presidential conventions should be elected directly by the people, you must vote for a man who asserts: "The social legislation changing the fabric of the family is wrong. . ."?

For the fact of the matter is, unless the voters find better candidates for delegates, there is little reason to insist on changing the law—ours is not a pure Democracy.

Won't You Stand Up?

To the editor:

Our hour of national trial in 1788, here in the Commonwealth, was due to our forefathers' resiliency of resolve, a decency of determination, the strength of will and courage to stand out so that Massachusetts could stand up and be a leader among states . . .

Our sense of values in politics is anything goes!

The demand for pot and pills, among a world of hate and hunger is wrong . . .

The social legislation changing the fabric of the family is wrong . . .

The confidence, approaching smugness of the Democratic State Committee is like Cinderella in the pumpkin. (Is a pinched shoe better than no shoes at all?)

Our presidential primary on April 30, has long been discussed and it is a case of the inevitable coming to pass. The Senate Committee knows the voters don't give a dam and only the establishment will care to vote.

But our Republican and Democratic politicans from Massachusetts were elected to deal with the state's problems in a modern, urbanized, technological society. Some of them have become bogged down in the past.

Certainly the Democratic State Committee (average age over 55) is a tragic consequence of being governed by politicians whose minds were formed and fresh during the sneak attack of 1941. Are they now trying again?

Bad enough that 150,000 will vote in the Democratic primary April 30, out of 1.1 million registered voters in the party.

However, as a Democrat, I protest the delegates to our National Convention in August not being on the ballot April 30. Do they think that only the 'vested interests' pay taxes or know the issues?

We've reached the point where we must do more than speak strong language. We need more than tired, old politicians with their tired ways. We must use the richness of the past to build the future for our children. These are my reasons for becoming a candidate for concerned Democrats, as a delegate to our Democratic National Convention.

We will chart a course humane and noble. Won't you stand up so that our state will stand out once again.

W. J. Van Orden,
Candidate for Delegate to the Democratic Presidential Convention

A Feasible Alternative

To the editor:

Some of you may be wondering why the fuss about another petition. We initiated this petition in the belief that it has immediate relevance for us as students.

Because of the military achievements of the Viet Cong since January 29, it is apparent that the war has become a military stalemate. The Administration must now redirect its efforts toward a political rather than military solution. A negotiated settlement remains an impossibility as long as the Administration's policy continues to be one of escalation, bombing, and refusal to recognize the National Liberation Front.

Several weeks ago a petition, calling on the Administration to re-evaluate its policy in Vietnam and proposing a feasible alternative, was signed by 51% of the faculty and students at Harvard and Radcliffe. This action was cited in an editorial in the NEW YORK TIMES as an example of a "reasoned case for a new Vietnam policy by a distinguished and responsible group."

We feel that the Harvard-Radcliffe statement should not stand as an isolated case. A follow-up to this petition by other academic communities can emphasize and substantiate the fact that alternatives to the present policy are advocated by respectable bodies. As members of such a community we now have the opportunity to contribute in this effort. It is important that we join Harvard and Radcliffe in the articulation of realistic alternatives to the Administration's present policy.

Delay and Frustration

Between the idea
And the reality
Between the motion
And the act
Falls the Shadow

--T. S. Eliot,
THE HOLLOW MEN

Overburdened facilities in the creative arts are most sorely manifested (above) by the trailers used to temporarily house the offices of members of the music department. The model below shows the north side of the proposed College of Arts Center designed by Kevin Roche. In the foreground are classroom, office and library sections, with the 2200-seat symphony hall in the center and the 700-seat theater to the right. An art gallery will be located between them. A 680-foot "flying bridge" studio runs across the top, with the north-facing studio skylights making a grill-like effect. The 200,000 gross square foot building will house the art, music and theater departments and will cost an estimated $12½ million.

"Delay" a Byword

DELAY, which has oftentimes been frustrating to many, has been the byword of the proposed Classroom-Laboratory-Auditorium Building-College of Arts Center.

Serious planning of what was then called "The Fine Arts Building" began some seven years ago. The architectural firm of I.M. Pei and Associates of New York City was originally awarded the contract for designing the structure. However, A lack of communication with the architect due to appropriation delays forced the architects to cancel the University contract in favor of a number of other immediate contracts being offered to them.

The contract was then given to the present architect, Kevin Roche of the Hamden Connecticut firm of Eero Saarinen and Associates. (With the death of Mr. Saarinen in 1967 the firm is now known as Roche, Dinkeloo and Associates.)

Projected enrollment and needs of the University for the future necessitated t change in plans for the building. Inadvertent delays between the Governor and a University Fine Arts Commission coupled with legal problems concerning appropriation statutes caused an added hiatus.

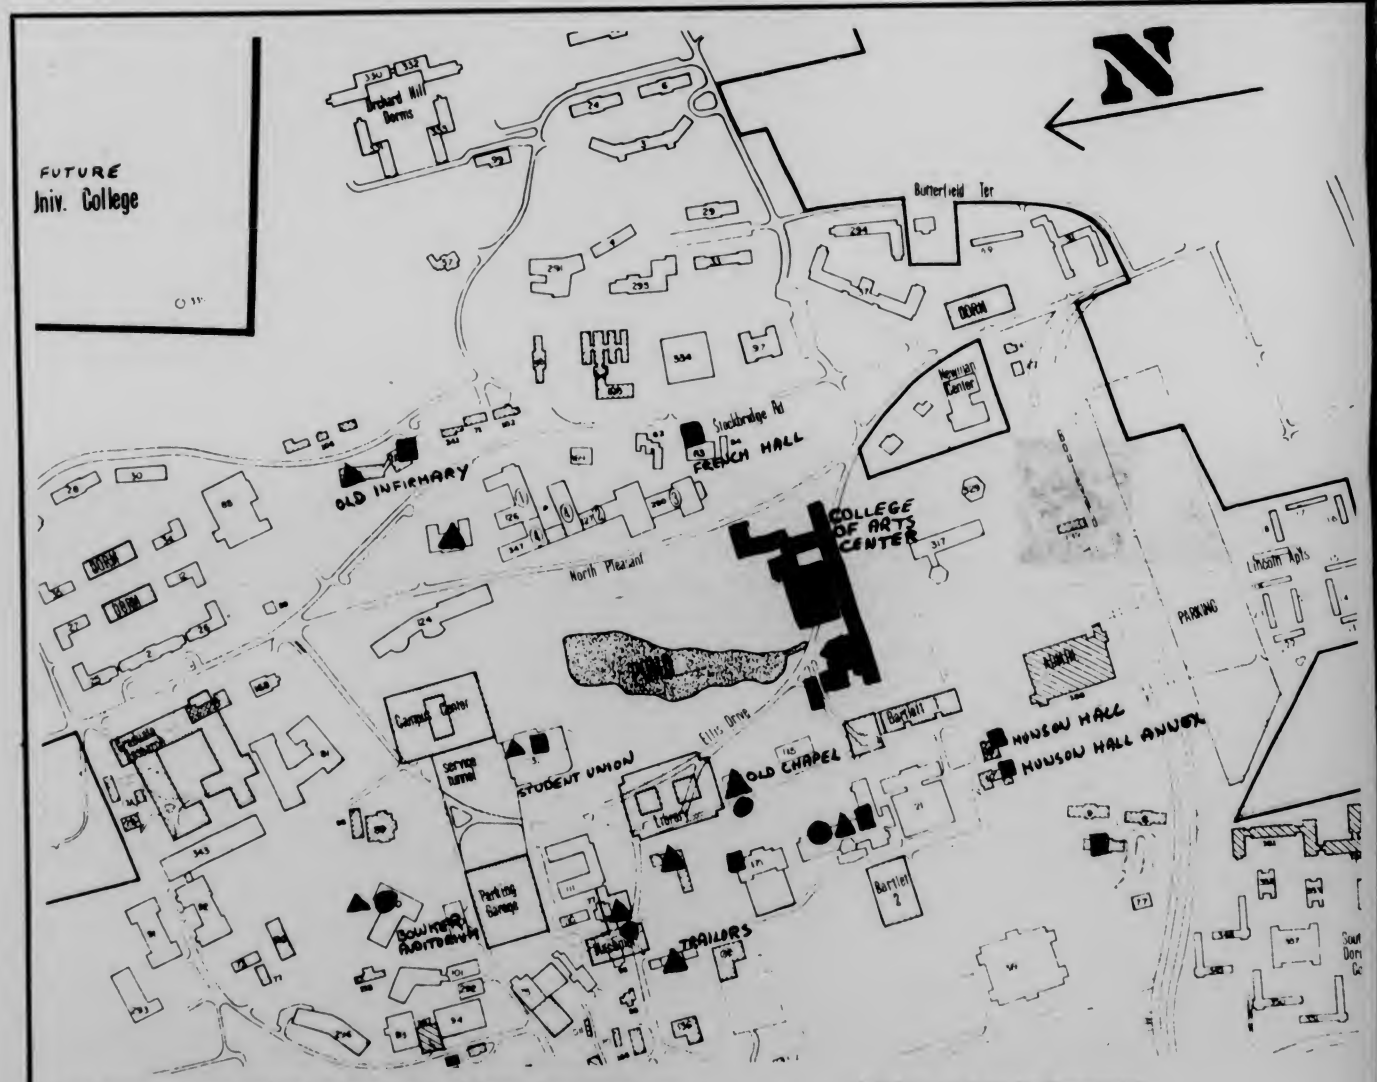
In 1966 preliminary plans were completed for a ten million dollar building. In budgets for both fiscal 1967 and fiscal 1968 additional planning money for the building was cut. $260,000 in planning money hal up to this time been appropriated and an additional $160,000 was needed to finalize plans. The monies for the proposed building was second to the new library on a priority list in the capital budget for 1968.

Although approved by the University and receiving the recommendation of the Governor, both the House and the Senate of the State Legislature did not approve the appropriation for fiscal 1968.

Having received the money needed for the new library, the University has now placed the College of Arts Center as "top priority" for fiscal 1969.

The architects have stated that "the more it (College of Arts center) is delayed the more it costs." Rising costs of construction labor and materials have brought the 10 million dollar estimate up to a present estimate of 12½ million dollars. Mr. Dinkeloo added that "getting back into it is hard" with a lull of over two years without work on the plans. He said that some changes would be necessary.

ARCHITECT KEVIN ROCHE



When the budget for fiscal 1969 is presented to the legislature $300,000 in planning money will be requested.

THE COLLEGE of Arts Center has been termed "of vital necessity to the future of the University." The 200,000 gross square foot building will include classroom and office space for the art, music and theatre departments, plus a 2200-seat symphony hall, 700 seat theater, art gallery and fine arts library.

University Provost Oswald Tippo has said that there is no doubt of the need for such a building. He explained that "we are perhaps one of the few educational institutions that has neglected the creative arts." He added that "in a university one hundred years old it seems we would have an adequate auditorium and a place for a fine theater."

PRESIDENT John W. Lederle stated that we "are seriously handicapped in the quality of education of the arts by a lack of buildings."

The three major departments which will use the building — the music, art, and theater area of the Speech department — are currently pressured by a constant rise in enrollment which is burdening present facilities, many of which have been termed "inadequate" and are being rendered even less functional as a result of overlapping needs by different departments.

Two major problems confront the music, art and theater departments concerning the building space allocated to them. Being spread all over campus, departmental unity is virtually impossible with faculty offices oftentimes in as many as three buildings, classrooms in another and studio or practice areas in still another. Coupled with the wide dispersal of the various departments is the inadequacy of the facilities.

FUJI MICRO SAFETY

"It is a desperate need"

—Philip T. Bezanson,
Chairman of UMass' Music Department

THE PLANNING of the College of Arts Center has endured a long history.

With each passing year the need for such a building becomes more urgent. Aside from the needs of the three major departments which will occupy the building, proof has also been given of an ever-increasing need for a cultural center serving the entire campus.

Plays, art shows, concerts, lectures, and numerous other events requiring an assembly area are hindered by inadequate facilities. If a particular creative group is given the materials to do a better job, the results of their efforts benefit the entire community. The three major creative groups on campus, however, do not have the necessary materials to produce art forms of the highest quality.

Music Department

PROFESSOR Philip T. Bezanson, Chairman of the music department, has said of the proposed center that "as far as we are concerned it is a desperate need."

BEZANSON

Of primary importance is the music curriculum. Classes are now held in Old Chapel, temporary trailers by Dickinson Hall, and Machmer. In addition, the old infirmary, South College, and Skinner Hall are utilized. None of the buildings were constructed with acoustics in mind and according to Bezanson do not have "the kind of rooms music should be taught in."

Old Chapel now houses a band practice room, some faculty offices and part of the music library. The temporary trailers are used for faculty offices and some classes. Heating problems currently plague the construction-surrounded edifices. An attic room in South College is utilized as a practice room; Skinner Hall is used for choral practices. Conflicts with the classroom needs of the Home Economics Department in Skinner Hall often require sacrifices on the part of both that department and the music department.

According to Richard Dubois, choral director, there is a need for flexibility in chorus rehearsal scheduling. Complications arise when rehearsals for five groups must be arranged and there is a definite lack of available rehearsal space.

OLD CHAPEL — PART OF UMASS' MUSIC DEPARTMENT

At the present time there are 49 undergraduate music majors and 11 graduate students. In addition, 478 students are currently enrolled in introductory music courses. With the department constantly growing, Bezanson stated that present facilities will not accommodate projected enrollments. He went on to say that if music department facilities do not improve, it is possible that this could hinder recruitment of faculty.

The products of the College of Arts in terms of extra-curricular activities are consumed in the form of public performances, and at present there is no place on campus to present a large choral and instrumental performance. According to Dubois "we can't even get into Bartlett, and Bowker is too small." The College of Arts center would house a 2,200 seat symphony hall especially designed for such performances.

According to Professor Bezanson the music department is attempting a major step forward by applying for membership in the National Association of Schools of Music (NASM). He said that if membership were based solely on curriculum and faculty there would be no problem, but facilities may be a deciding factor against membership. Membership would rank the University highly among the nation's schools of music.

The music department is a growing part of the college of Arts, but it may be headed for a period of stagnation due to overcrowded and inadequate facilities.

NORTON

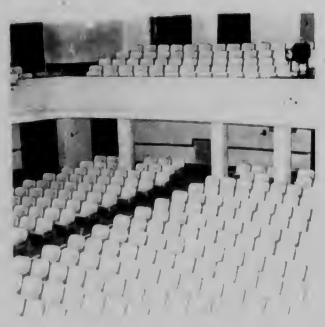
Art

THE PROBLEMS of the Art Department parallel those of the Music Department. A growing interest in the curriculum on both the major and introductory level has put a burden on present facilities.

At present there are 250 undergraduate art majors and 45 students in the graduate department. Paul F. Norton, chairman of the Department, said that many of the buildings are fine for space but constitute a dangerous fire hazard. He cited as an example the Old Conservation Building fire last year which resulted in the loss of many of the theater department's materials.

Norton stated the Art Department became a reality in the fall of 1968 when there was an initial enrollment of 96 students. The enrollment has gradually increased to this semester's figure of 1,358. He explained that the department can no longer expand as all available space has been exhausted, and if projected enrollments are to be met the only solution is the construction of The College of Arts Center.

Studios and classrooms are scattered across campus as are faculty offices causing a problem of unity within the department. In almost all introductory courses, a number of students are not allowed to enroll due to the limited capacity of art facilities. Many students are being deprived of enlarging their liberal education.



More More

With limited facilities being of primary importance, gallery space becomes the second vital need of the art department. The only gallery available is the Student Union Art Hall which is practical neither in terms of size nor aesthetics. The proposed Center will have offices, a large art gallery and a number of sun-roofed studios along with other facilities which will unify the department and afford students the opportunity to take art courses under the best possible conditions.

Theater Area of the Speech Department

THE THEATER Area of the Speech Department serves a twofold purpose—the teaching of the theater course curriculum and the production of Thespian activities.

Overcrowded conditions, inadequate facilities, and overlapping needs of different departments are also present in the Theater area.

It has been stated that Bowker auditorium is both aesthetically and functionally inadequate for the uses of the theater department although it is the only area available for such productions.

There is no real theater on campus that can adequately be used for the type of drama which has been brought into our culture since 1945. Mark J. Young, Director of the Theater Area has stated that the two areas presently used as theaters are not completely functional. According to Young, Bartlett Hall and Bowker Auditorium present a tremendous physical barrier. He explained that neither was designed to create an atmosphere and there is a noticeable separation between stage and audience. This communication between actor and audience is vital to the success of a play.

In terms of practical function Young explained that Bowker's main drawback is its complete lack of atmosphere and lighting and stage facilities. Bartlett,

The theater department's scene shop has been said to be one tenth the size it should be to be relatively functional in serving the theater department.

he went on, has much too small a stage area, limiting the amount of work that can be put into set design.

The separation between the workshop and stage presents a serious problem. Sets must be transported, an extremely difficult process, and since there is no storage space available at either auditorium or at the workshop, a third area must be used necessitating the moving of sets several times.

Total enrollment for the four introductory courses for the current semester is 550. Approximately 10% of the University students take one of these courses every year and enrollment is constantly rising. There are approximately 75 undergraduate and 10 graduate majors in the Theater Department.

Total attendance at last year's five major productions totaled close to 9000. Plays presented during the summer were attended by nearly 5000 people.

Ronald F. Reed, chairman of the Speech Department, in a report published last year stated that "The department of speech does not wish to train actors for the commercial theater. Rather, it wishes to continue to educate students in the liberal arts tradition by offering courses for non-majors and by preparing theater majors to broaden their intellectual and artistic interests."

If this goal is to be achieved, new facilities are needed to accomodate ever-increasing demands. Needed are areas for classes in acting and directing and for rehearsals. Bartlett and Bowker are not always available and classes oftentimes conflict with play rehearsals. A costume shop and storage for classes in costuming and costume construction is also needed, since storage space is severely limited.

A design studio for classes in scene design and for designing productions is also necessary. The current design studio is almost totally inadequate.

More storage space for scenery, stage furniture, stage props and miscellaneous equipment is desperately needed.

Both a functional studio theater and main theater to replace the "converted auditoriums" now used must be built.

The College of Arts Center will provide a solution to all facility problems of the Theater Department.

OVERBURDENED departments, programs stagnating for lack of space, disunity within the departments, and an overlapping need for already overtaxed facilities tell the story of the creative arts at the University of Massachusetts.

Editorial

A RECENT Sunday Boston Herald feature on the University was headlined "UMass Bursting at the Seams". No segment of the campus illustrates this expansion concept as vividly as the departments of the creative arts. The music, art, and theater departments have for nearly ten years increased steadily in enrollment putting an ever increasing burden on their facilities.

The problem of coping with this expansion has reached crisis proportions. There is simply nowhere else to expand.

Present facilities are overcrowded and inadequate.

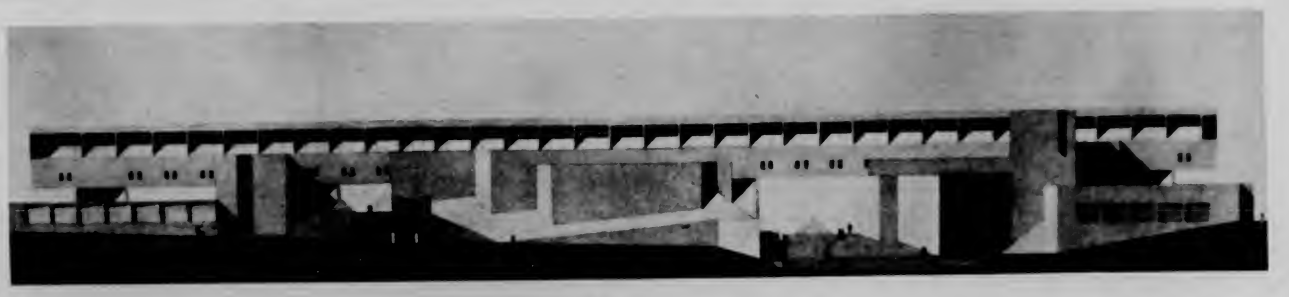
The amount of available space is a problem confronting the three departments and manifests itself in the use of temporary trailers as offices by the music department, the restricted enrollment of introductory art courses, and a serious shortage of work area hindering all phases of play production.

The idea of a so-called "fine arts building," now titled The Classroom-Laboratory-Audtorium Building-College of Arts Center, has been discussed for over seven years. There can no longer be any doubt concerning the need for such a building on campus.

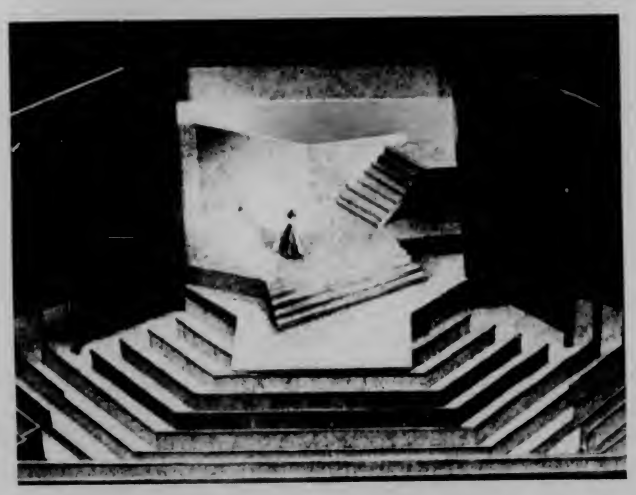
If one believes in a liberal education the creative arts cannot be ignored. Deriving benefit from one of the three departments does not necessitate taking a course in one of them, but merely results from attending a concert, play or art exhibit.

It has been stated that we are perhaps one of the largest Universities without a center for the creative arts. What this means right now is that the university does not have an adequate theater, art gallery, or concert hall.

Aside from not having any facility in which they may exhibit the fruits of their labors, the three departments are forced to spread themselves literally from one end of the campus to the other. There is no centralization.



The College of Arts Center would unify departments besides providing the University with a magnificent showplace for its work in the creative arts.



THE CENTER should be of vital interest to anyone who has attended a production at Bowker and been "turned-off" by its unique "un-aesthetic" quality, or has attended a concert in the Cage, or viewed an art showing in the "atmosphere-less" Student Union Hallway. Anyone who has taken or would be interested in taking an introductory course in any of the creative arts departments should take note of the problem.

The best is just not being offered to us. It has been delayed and may be continued to be delayed in favor of other projects which seem of more immediate value to those deciding how the University's budget should be spent.

IF THE College of Arts Center is to become a reality student interest is a necessity. When the Massachusetts Legislature discusses the University budget, student interest could be the deciding factor concerning the appropriation of monies for the center. The News Project has listed the names and addresses of members of the Massachusetts Legislature. Any form of communication with your representatives can only enhance the chances of bringing the College of Arts Center out of the planning stages and make it a reality.

A BUILDING to accommodate the fine arts is not unknown to New England State Universities. Above is the striking Fine Arts Center of the University of Rhode Island. Architect Henry Millman is shown at right in that building's recital hall. Said the Providence Sunday Journal: "It will have its own resident group of artists, musicians and students creating the things that will fill its spaces. There ought to be some sound and fury coming from it in the years ahead."

Fitchburg Dem. Challenges Party Presidential Slate

by PAT PETOW
Editorial Chairman

A Democrat from Fitchburg is challenging the Democratic Party's slate of delegates for the national Presidential convention and has already made one trip to UMass in an effort to get support in this area.

As a result of an act passed by the Legislature in 1966, a slate of delegates for the national conventions of both parties is selected by the State Committees. If the slates are not challenged by individuals or by other slates, the members do not go on the ballot of the Presidential Preference Primary of April 30 and are automatically elected.

W. J. Van Orden, a school teacher and a member of the Fitchburg City Committee of the Democratic Party, expressed his feeling that this method of selecting delegates is wrong. He feels that the delegates to the national conventions (there are 55 for the Democrats) should be elected directly by the people.

For Van Orden to be elected a delegate, an event he indicated he did not expect, he first has to secure 2,500 signatures throughout the state (with no more than 500 from any one county), to be given a place on the April 30 ballot. The Democrat said he thought he would meet the certification requirement and told the Daily Collegian that he has between 1,600 to 1,700 valid signatures now. The deadline for nomination papers is Feb. 27.

If Van Orden is successful in securing his name on the ballot, the names of the slate selected by the State Committee will also be listed. According to Ester Dimock, the Amherst Town Clerk, the names and addresses of the slate members would probably appear as they were listed when the slate was submitted to the office of the Secretary of State: hence, not necessarily alphabetically or by electoral districts.

She indicated that in this result, Democratic party members (or Independents taking a Democratic ballot for the Primary) would get to vote for any 55 to be elected as the delegates. Thus, Van Orden, after gathering 2,500 signatures, would be placed on an equal footing with the other candidates before the voters. What the Fitchburg Democrat offers as his reason for running is that he should not have to go through special procedure to get on equal footing with candidates designated by the State Committee—but rather all individuals should go to the voters directly.

Van Orden, who visited the campus last week, has received the help of Chet Wronski, '68 Kennedy Upper, to coordinate efforts to obtain signatures in this area. Anyone interested in participating in a local effort is requested by the candidate to get in touch with Wronski.

CORRECTION

UMass coeds were inadvertently stated in yesterday's Collegian to have appeared in Glamour magazine. Actually they appeared in the February issue of Mademoiselle magazine.

STUDENT SENATE VACANCIES

A special election will be held Feb. 20 to fill vacancies in the Student Senate for the following constituencies.

Coolidge Upper, Brooks, Butterfield, Chadbourne, Field, Hamlin, Hills South, James, Leach, Mills, Thoreau, At Large Class of '71, Commuters (10 seats).

Nomination papers will be available to Feb. 16 in the RSO office.

LEDERLE . . .

"All our State schools," said Lederle, "are underappropriated." He stated that "Massachusetts citizens don't believe public higher education can be excellent." It is important for our provincial people to see excellent higher education."

Speaking on the money problems of the University, Lederle emphasized that "Some Legislators don't like fiscal autonomy, he noted, but added that fiscal autonomy is necessary for a top university. "Through fiscal autonomy," he continued, "we are able at least to compete in the national marketplace for professors. Were it not for fiscal autonomy, I would have left this place long ago," he said.

"We are still accountable" he stated, "and auditable for everything we do. Fiscal autonomy is not a blank check. We still live in a goldfish bowl."

Concerning UMass Boston, Lederle was candid in making his views known. "We have in mind a commuter urban university for students coming to the university by MBHA—not by automobile. We want to make Boston a living laboratory for students who cannot afford a residential college."

"Yet," he continued, "Boston couldn't care less whether public UMass has a school there. Students are viewed as lepers, not students. Bostonians are afraid students will be floating around the Back Bay. This is not the case with UMass Boston commuters.

Another competition in the development of UMass Boston arose out of the retirement of Mayor Collins. "Now we have to deal with the new mayor, which further delays the progress. But contrary to some criticism he added, we are not trying to hold Boston back while we build an empire at Amherst.

Returning to the monetary problems, Lederle said that "I would be willing to debate with any senator at any time, 'Resolved; That public education should be tuition free,' not have the tuition increased." "But money is needed," he stated flatly, and it is becoming progressively harder to extract money from the Legislature."

Lederle closed his address asking the support as well as criticisms of the students of UMass.

CLARIFICATION

The Daily Collegian wishes to clarify the headline "Birth Control Advocated by Drum in Botany 101 Class Lecture" as appeared in the Tuesday, February 13, 1967 issue.

Dr. Drum did not "advocate" birth control, but rather stated the pros and cons of birth control and expressed his personal views on the use of birth control devices, which tended to favor the use of birth control devices.

DOW SHALL NOT KILL!!

Tens of thousands of Vietnamese children have been killed and burned by American napalm. Those children who can get to hospitals are gradually dying in agony from hopelessly inadequate treatment.

CAN YOU SUPPORT THE USE OF NAPALM ON THESE CHILDREN BY YOUR GOVERNMENT?

If not, join us in our protest against the Dow Chemical Company, the major producer of napalm, which will be recruiting at the Whitmore administration center Thursday and Friday of this week.

SCHEDULE

THURSDAY:

–Demonstration at Whitmore from 10-12 noon
–Welcome Dow parade leaving Southwest at 1:00 P.M.
–Bonfire at the Student Union at the conclusion of the parade at 4:00 P.M.
–Anti-Dow rally with faculty speakers at Bartlett auditorium at 7:00 P.M.

FRIDAY:

–Demonstration at Whitmore from 12-2 P.M.

HERBERT DOAN (President of Dow:)
"Our company will continue to produce napalm as long as it is needed by our government."

DR. LOUIS FIESER (inventor of napalm):
"I have no right to judge the morality of napalm just because I invented it."

LT. COL. W. C. HAMMOND (Chemical Officer, U.S. Army):
"The Air Force loves napalm."

ADOLF EICHMANN:
"I was only following orders."

WE CHALLENGE THE DOW CHEMICAL RECRUITERS TO AN OPEN DEBATE AT THE RALLY ON THURSDAY NIGHT!

MORNINGS AT SEVEN... AND THERE'S NOTHING YOU CAN DO ABOUT IT

Any man who says morning is the best time of day is either a liar or a meadow lark.

There is only one way to make morning enjoyable: sleep till noon. Failing that, the very best you can do is to make morning tolerable. This, I am pleased to report, is possible if you will follow three simple rules:

1. Shave properly.

By shaving properly I mean shaving quietly. Don't use a blade that whines and complains. Morning being a time of clanger and anger, use a blade that neither clangs nor angs. Use a blade that makes no din on your chin, no squeak on your cheek, no howl on your jowl, no rip on your lip, no waves while it shaves. Use, in short, Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades.

I have been shaving for 71 years (not too impressive until one considers that I am 49 years old) and I am here to tell you that the quietest blade I know is Personna. I not only shave with Personna, but I also admire it. Old virtues reappear in Personna; old values are reborn. Personna is a modest blade, an undemanding blade. Personna does not rasp and tug, yelling, "Hey, lookit me!" No, sir, not Personna! Silently, respectfully, unobtrusively, Personna whisks your whiskers with nary a whisper. It shucks your soil and stubble without toil and trouble. Why, you hardly know it's there, this well-bred Personna blade, this paragon of punctilio.

Moreover, this crown of the blade-maker's art, this epitome of epidermal efficacy, is available both in Double-edge style and Injector style. Do your kisser a favor: get some.

2. Breakfast properly.

I assert that a Personna shave is the best of all possible shaves. But I do not assert that a Personna shave, bracing though it may be, is enough to prepare you for the hideous forenoon ahead. After shaving you must eat an ample breakfast.

Take, for example, the case of Basil Metabolism, a sophomore at V.M.I. Basil, knowing there was to be an inspection by the Commandant one morning, prepared by storing up energy. He recognized that coffee and juice would not sustain him, so he had a flitch of bacon, a clutch of eggs, a batch of bagels, a notch of ham, a bunch of butter, a swatch of grits, a hutch of honey, a patch of jelly, a thatch of jam, a twitch of pepper, and a pinch of salt.

The idea was right; the quantities, alas, were not. When the Commandant arrived, Basil, alas, was so torpid that he could not raise his bloated arm in a proper salute. He was, of course, immediately shot by a firing squad. Today, a perforated man, he earns a meagre living as a collander in Cleveland.

3. Read properly.

Always read the paper at breakfast. It inhibits bolting. But do not read the front page. That is full of bad, acid-making news. Read a more pleasant part of the paper—the Home and Garden section, for example.

For instance, in my local paper, The Westport Peasant, there is a delightful column called "Ask Harry Homespun" which fairly bristles with bucolic wisdom and many an earthy chuckle. I quote some questions and answers:

Q: I am thinking of buying some power tools. What should I get first?
A: Hospitalization.
Q: How do you get rid of moles?
A: Pave the lawn.
Q: What is the best way to put a wide car in a narrow garage?
A: Butter it.
Q: What do you do for elm blight?
A: Salt water gargle and bed rest.
Q: What can I do for dry hair?
A: Get a wet hat.

Personna's partner in shaving comfort is Burma-Shave, regular or menthol. Together, Personna and Burma-Shave make a considerable contribution toward forenoon survival.

U.S. Signs A-Weapons Protocol

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States announced Wednesday it will sign one section of a treaty aimed at barring nuclear weapons from Latin America—but it also will spell out this country's interpretation of any restraints on U.S. nuclear power.

A White House announcement said the United States will sign protocol II of the treaty signed exactly a year ago at Tlatelelco, Mexico, aimed at making Latin America a nuclear-free zone.

The United States will not sign protocol I, because it is unwilling to give up the deployment of nuclear weapons on any U.S. territory covered by the treaty. This includes Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

A presidential announcement said the United States will sign protocol II in Mexico "with an appropriate statement" and that the international agreement then will go to the Senate with a request that it be ratified.

Sources said that the statement will make it clear that the United States reserves the right to land nuclear-armed warplanes, overfly hemisphere countries with such planes, and arrange port calls for nuclear-armed submarines and surface ships—provided the nation or nations directly involved in each case are agreeable.

Mexico was a prime mover in initiating the treaty. Communist Cuba was asked to sign it but declined. The only other Latin nations which have not signed are Barbades and Guyana.

The only nuclear power to sign the treaty is the United Kingdom. Government sources said they did not know whether the Soviet Union, France or Communist China might do so at a later date.

Machmer West 4 Weeks Ahead Of Schedule

The construction of Macher West is four weeks ahead of schedule because of the use of plastic. The project superintendent said Friday that 32,000 square feet of sturdy plastic covered the building.

The plastic cocoon was put on December 15, and removed to be used on the new Machmer lecture hall February 1. Heaters were used in the building during construction enabling workmen to work at sub-zero temperatures.

Penetration of heat from the sun's rays into the new Machmer Tower will be reduced because of the special reflecting windows.

According to the construction superintendent, vision is possible only from the inside to the outside of the windows.

The temperature of the building will be mechanically controlled. Since the sun's heat would upset the controls, the windows will prevent disturbance. These windows, which are now opened for cleaning purposes, will soon be permanently fastened.

Hoopsters Lose 70-69 Squeaker to Holy Cross

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

Ice cool foul shooting by Keith Hochstein preserved a 70-69 win for the Holy Cross Crusaders at the Cage before a disappointed 2300 last night. This may have been the finest game by the Redmen this season.

The first half was tight from tap to buzzer. Holy Cross relied heavily on the outside shooting of Jim Murray and Ed Siudet. Between them they had 21 of the Crusader points. Murray consistently fired from an area at the top of the key, while Siudet made most of his points on 15 foot push shots from either side. Amazingly enough, Hochstein was held scoreless and took but one shot.

For the Redmen, Gary Gasperack and Billy Tindall shared the lead with eight points each. Joe DiSarcina contributed six points. However, DiSarcina was immense with his ball hawking and set up five Redman buckets. Holy Cross jumped out to a 23-18 lead, mostly on the strength of Siudet and Murray, but a nine point string by the Redmen gave them the lead. Tindall contributed two buckets within 28 seconds to give the Redmen an intermission lead of 29-27.

Hochstein's first bucket with 14:16 to go in the second half gave the juggernaut from the top of Mt. St. James the lead. Two minutes later, Holy Cross ran a seven point foray and led 46-42. They were never headed.

Hoops by DiSarcina and Ellerbrook were constantly matched by Hochstein and Murray. In fact, with 9:15 left, the communicants from down the Pike built their largest lead of the night, 54-46.

But the Redmen would not quit. By this time Holy Cross was foul shooting one and one. An endless stream of purple jerseys travelled to the south foul line where the Crusaders weren't missing. Nevertheless, the outside shooting of DiSarcina and Ellerbrook brought the Redmen to within two, 62-60 with 3:19 left.

At this point the Redmen played a full court press, but Murray hit a driving hoop followed by another 18 footer that gave the Crusaders some breathing room. DiSarcina and sub center John Dreyer brought the Redmen back to within two with 1:16 left.

Fifteen seconds later Hochstein hit a layup and Tindall hit a single foul to make it 68-65. Holy Cross then slowed the action down and with 16 seconds left Ellerbrook hit a 15 footer. At this juncture Holy Cross called time out to work their strategy. After breaking the press, the ball went to Hochstein who was immediately fouled by DiSarcina. He deliberated for 13 seconds and sank the first foul shot. Another charity toss and it was out of reach. DiSarcina added a field goal at the buzzer and Holy Cross had a 70-69 win.

REDMAN RANTINGS . . .

Contrary to the rumor, referee Jerry Lorber was not the Archbishop of Worcester. It seems as if all the Redman basketball games are played on the road. This is not an alibi, just one man's opinion. Joey DiSarcina set a new UMass career assist record of 282. The second half Holy Cross went to the foul line 23 times, UMass went six times.

Jack Leaman, not disappointed, said, "We played very hard and deserved to win. We just didn't get the breaks." Joe DiSarcina was amazed at Murray's outside shooting. Commented Joe, "I didn't believe he was that good." Good was not the word for Murray. He hit 10 of 12 from the field. None were less than 15 footers. He led all scorers with 21 points. Holy Cross coach Jack Donahue remarked, "We played better than the Worcester game and so did UMass. We consider ourselves quite fortunate." And well he should.

Little Redmen Edged, 72-71, by Holy Cross

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

Surviving a last half UMass upset bid, the Holy Cross freshman basketball team finally edged the Little Redmen, 72-71, last night at the Cage. The loss, the first at home for the UMass frosh, dropped their record to 8-5, while boosting the Crusaders' to 21-1.

The UMass frosh played probably their finest game last night against the taller Holy Cross team. The Little Redmen fell behind late in the first half and trailed by as much as 10 with only seven minutes left in the ballgame. However, they were far from being through.

Rallying behind the scoring of Tom Nally, Jim Ryan, who started at guard for the first time, and a great all-around performance by Ken Mathias, UMass came back to within four points with 3:16 left. Following a bucket by Bob Kissane, of the Cross, Ryan and Holy Cross guard, Jack Adams furiously traded points for the next two and a half minutes.

A free throw by Kissane at 24 seconds put the Crusaders up by five, 72-67. UMass still rallied with two hoops by Mathias, but it all fell short by one thin point.

The first half was a nip and tuck one all the way. The score was tied eight times. Mathias and Nally did the bulk of the scoring for the Little Redmen, with Mathias more than holding his own against the tall timber of the Cross.

Kissane and center, Don Sasso, both of whom are 6'8, meanwhile led the Crusaders. Kissane scored four quick points near the end of the half which gave Holy Cross a 32-27.

At 18:29 of the second half, the possible turning point occurred when Frank Schaffeld picked up his fourth foul and subsequently fouled out two minutes left. The absence of Schaffeld's size was a big blow to the Little Redmen in the half.

The final UMass thrust was finally put down, but this performance by UMass was their finest of the season. Nally in only his second starting role is coming on as the big surprise of the team. As the Little Redmen left the court, the near-capacity crowd gave them a standing ovation for a great game.

Mathias led all scorers with 24, with Ryan having 22, and Nally coming through with 19. For the Crusaders, Sasso and Adams had 23 and 22 respectively, with Kissane chipping in 12 and guard Joe Phelan chipping in 11.

Puckmen Put On Ice by UConn Huskies, 7-4

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Four first period goals paced UConn to a 7-4 triumph over UMass last night before a small crowd at Orr Rink.

UMass had a very sloppy period, especially in their passing, and the Huskies took advantage of the poor teamwork to explode to a 4-0 lead at the end of the period.

Art Estrada put the Huskies in front when he batted in a rebound under UMass goalie Pete Scoville's pads at the seven minute mark.

Tom O'Keefe and Kevin Burke scored two minutes apart late in the period to give UConn a three goal lead. Al Lyons goal with four seconds left in the period ended a disappointing period for the Redmen.

Late in the period, Jim O'Brien and O'Keefe squared off at center ice and started tossing punches at each other. Both drew major penalties and match disqualifications despite landing no punches.

Second period action was uneventful until the 15:48 when Dave Goldberg put the Redmen on the scoreboard with an unassisted goal skating through half the UConn team and putting a short shot into the net.

UMass hopes were quickly dampened when goals by Frank Capizzo and Kevin Burke gave the Huskies a 6-1 bulge late in the period.

Jeff Sanborn tallied the prettiest goal of the night at 16:22 splitting the UConn defense and breaking in alone to tuck the puck past a sliding Sprague.

Charlie Hanifan slapped home the final goal of the night from a wide angle after Billy Fallon had brought the puck into the UConn zone.

UConn hiked its record to 10-8 overall while the Redmen fell to 3-12 overall and 3-9 in Division II action.

IT'S OVER—Redman Charlie Hanifan scores the final goal of the game.

BLUELINE BANTER

Besides the two major penalties, seven minors were called in the rough game . . . Charlie Hanifan received a rare double minor call late in the third period . . .

Everett Bray took the place of winger O'Brien on the third line and the Redmen were forced to play with three defensemen the rest of the way . . . Several near flareups occurred near the end of the game but no penalties resulted from the action.

Best Redmen scoring thrusts came in the last five minutes of the game when they scored twice and forced Sprague to make several fine saves . . . Scoville had a total of 30 saves for the game while Sprague came up with 27 stops.

Art Estrada and Kevin Burke paced the scoring parade for the Huskies with Estrada having one goal and four assists while Burke had two goals and an assist . . . Jeff Sanborn topped UMass with two goals . . . Next home game for the Redmen is Saturday at 4:00 against Holy Cross.

80 Students Stage Union Sit-In; Lederle Agrees to 'Open Meeting'

By JIM FOUDY
City Editor

UMass peace demonstrators and a crowd of onlookers yesterday crowded the Student Union lobby, blocked passage, defied UMass administrators attempts to disband the group and protested issues from the war to UMass open house policy and core curriculum requirements.

What began as a demonstration against the Dow Chemical Co. outside the Student Union, turned into an indoor sit-down demonstration with a crowd of as many as 500 persons at one point.

The indoor affair, which lasted for nearly five hours, began at 3 p.m. when the outdoor rally against the makers of napalm disbanded. Proceeding through the Union, the group stopped at the table of a Navy recruiter. One of the demonstrators pulled a toy gun and aimed it at the recruiter. The demonstrators began shouting about the war and the recruiter shouted "clear out".

The demonstrators then began shouting back. About 75 of them sat down in the middle of the lobby chanting "Get the army out". The crowd built as the word passed and soon a crowd of at least 200 had gathered around the 100 or so students sitting in the middle.

Dr. Mark Noffsinger, associate dean of students and director of the Union, arrived shortly thereafter. "I ask your cooperation in having each others beliefs respected, no matter how they differ," Noffsinger said, speaking slowly and clearly to those on the floor and to the crowd that was four deep along the balcony that runs three sides of the lobby.

Noffsinger's main point and the one he was to stick with throughout the demonstration was, "We must show tolerance to each other". Noffsinger continued to stress during the afternoon that a balance must be struck between individual liberty and the liberty of a minority and the liberties and rights of the majority. Noffsinger stressed community cohesion.

The crowd applauded, booed, pamphlets were thrown. Noffsinger continued, "If UM is to exist and grow, common faith in each others concerns must be maintained."

The administrator said, "My presence here is the manifestation of the University's picketing policy. A dialogue must be kept open and a minimum of personal interest must be maintained."

"I don't want to take the next step," Noffsinger said. This was taken to mean the calling of police to disband the crowd. A UM police car with three officers was stationed across the street during the demonstration. The cruiser left about 4:45 p.m.

The UM security guard for the Union also wandered around, finally taking up a position near the front door.

As the afternoon drew on a number of lesser demonstrators floated along the outskirts of the crowd. The attitude was restrained, but tense.

On the floor, Noffsinger was joined by Student Sen. Pres. James Collins. Hardly audible, Collins also asked the crowd to disband, but received a negative response.

The Navy recruiter then stepped into the crowd. Shouting, he said, "I am not the policy maker for this war. I am here to give information about the O. C. S. program, not to answer your questions about Vietnam or Southeast Asia. It is your friends and neighbors, voting in elections, that make policy." His last comment was heartily booed.

Demonstrators in Southwest

A number of the students on the fringe and above began shouting to the demonstrators to move out. Cries of "kick them" came from the balcony addressed to students closer to those sitting on the floor.

Some of the students on the fringe then began to walk through those seated in order to defy the demonstrators. The tension built, but Noffsinger managed to keep the group in check.

Faculty Senate Submits Amendments; Approves Ten Open Houses Per Month

By PETE WARD
Senate Reporter

Last night, the Faculty Senate approved measures that will considerably alter the University's Open House regulations when and if they are approved by the Board of Trustees. Although the Senate did not complete action on the entire Open House proposal, it did deal with the important issues of the frequency of open houses and the condition of individual room doors.

The measures passed were a compromise between the majority report of the Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate, and read as follows:

A. Ultimate authority for open houses resides in the Board of Trustees or their designated officials.

B. The University policy as of September, 1967 will remain in force until each residence unit—here and hereafter defined as residence halls, fraternities, and sororities—has presented its proposals for implementing the recommendations contained in this document to the Student Life Committee.

C. Each residence unit government shall be permitted to determine its own policy on the frequency and duration of Open houses within established University-wide limits.

By a majority vote, and by secret ballot, residence unit governments may establish open houses and shall establish policies relating to the invitation and registration of guests.

D. A residence unit may schedule up to ten open houses per month.

Open houses may be conducted Monday through Thursday from 3:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.; Friday and Saturday from 12:00 noon to 1:00 a.m.; Sunday from 12:00 noon to 12:00 midnight.

Consistent with existing University security policies, residence halls, fraternities, and sororities will be locked Sundays through Thursdays from 12:00 midnight to 7:00 a.m., and Friday and Saturday nights from 1:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m. There may be no visitation by members of the opposite sex during these hours.

E. 1. Residents must meet a guest of the opposite sex, sign his or her name and the room number in a guest book and state the time of the guests arrival and departure.

2. Doors to rooms of residents who are participants must be open.

3. Entertainment of guests is limited to those activities which would be acceptable in the lounge areas of the residence unit.

Other aspects of the proposed policy dealing with the residence unit procedure for instituting open houses and with procedures for evaluating the results of any new policy were tabled until the next Faculty Senate meeting.

The compromise policy was pieced together by the Faculty Senate from three proposals: The majority report of the Student Affairs Committee, the minority report, and a substitute open house proposal presented by Faculty Senator Sidney F. Wexler.

Early in the meeting, the Senate rejected both the Wexler report and the majority report as main motions. However, in the course of the meeting, elements of both were combined with the minority report to form the passed measures.

Of the three, the student viewpoint was expressed primarily in the majority report which included provision for unlimited frequency in open houses and was defended by President James Collins of the Student Senate.

Although his defense on this point failed, the final figure of 10 per month, to be held on any day of the week, was quite different from the minority proposal of 4 per full month, to be held only on weekends.

Commenting on the actions of the Faculty Senate and the possibility of future action, President Collins said, "I intend to bring the results of the Faculty Senate action on Open House to the Student Senate at a special meeting on Sunday evening at 8:30 P.M. I believe there is time, and a need for further discussion on the policy."

The Senate meeting will be open to the public and all members of the University community are invited to attend.

An effigy burning of South Carolina Gov. Robert McNair highlighted many of the demonstrations. Negroes in Greensboro and Charlotte chanted, "Burn, baby, burn" during the effigy hanging.

U.S. Base Target Of Viet Attack

North Vietnamese troops ringing Khe Sanh, the U.S. Marine combat base in the northwest corner of South Vietnam, lobbed in 78 rounds of rocket and mortar fire. American pilots and artillerymen responded with heavy counterfire. B52 bombers made three more raids in the aerial campaign around Khe Sanh.

Associated Press correspondent John Lengel reported Marine intelligence officers believe the North Vietnamese troops around Khe Sanh are the best equipped of any enemy force so far in the war. Hanoi is believed to have 20,000 regulars to deploy against the 5,000-man garrison.

In all U.S. squadrons executed 95 missions that day, a relatively high number during the generally cloudy winter monsoon.

In its weekly summary, the U.S. Command announced 400 U.S. servicemen were killed and 1,494 wounded in combat last week. This was a decline in each case from the record highs of the previous week—416 dead and 2,757 wounded—but still greater than in any earlier seven-day period in the war.

American losses in combat since 1961 rose to 17,696 dead and 109,922 wounded and about 1,000 missing or captured. There was no precise figure on the latter since a report for the week of Jan. 28-Feb. 3 listed 997 missing or captured.

Israeli, Jordanian Forces Clash Along Jordan River

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli and Jordanian forces battled into the night Thursday along the Jordan River cease-fire line in the fiercest fighting since the Middle East war ended in June. The battle extended from the southern end of the Sea of Galilee 60 miles south to Jericho.

"Both sides are using everything they have," said one Israeli military source.

Artillery and tank guns exchanged fire and Israeli jets roared in to bomb, strafe and fire rockets at Jordanian positions along a 16-mile sector in the Beisan Valley near the Sea of Galilee. Israeli army spokesmen said Jericho was being shelled by long-range Jordanian guns.

The Israelis said their planes attacked for three hours, striking at dug-in Jordanian artillery on the sandy bank of the Jordan River.

For the first time in the recent series of clashes, the battle continued after nightfall. Israeli planes dropped flares over Jordanian positions.

Jordan claimed six Israeli jets were shot down by anti-aircraft fire, but Israel denied it had lost any planes.

Israeli spokesmen said four Israeli soldiers and one civilian were wounded and the casualty toll was expected to rise because several collective farms came under heavy Jordanian mortar and artillery fire.

The fighting erupted shortly after noon and then spread along a front south of the Sea of Galilee in the Beisan Valley and to Jericho. Israelis in at least seven farming communities west of the Jordan River were plastered by Jordanian artillery and mortars, the army said.

At Bet Shean, the largest city in the valley, residents gathered in the streets and on rooftops to watch the night sky flame with flares and explosions. At each explosion over the Jordanian positions the Israelis cheered.

Each side blamed the other for starting the clash.

Israeli army spokesman said the fighting opened when Jordanian troops lobbed mortar shells at collective farms and that Israeli troops returned the fire and silenced the Arab guns.

A new outbreak then flared to the north and the Israeli army said both artillery and tanks were engaged in the exchanges.

A Jordanian spokesman in Amman said the Israelis opened fire with medium arms and tank guns against Skeikh Mohammed village and that Israeli reinforcements moved in and began an artillery and mortar barrage.

Intern Training Program Is Offered In Journalism

Qualified senior class journalists are being given the opportunity to participate in an intern training program working with regional news media.

The program, under the auspices of Professor William Musgrave of the Journalism department, is open to students taking Journalism 392, the Freedom of the Press seminar. Participation in the program is completely voluntary and carries no weight in course outcome.

Mr. Al Oickle, Editor of the Greenfield Recorder, is acting as placement coordinator for the program. He is placing students in jobs which correspond to their interests.

The primary purpose of the intern program is to provide field training in an atmosphere where actual deadline schedules must be maintained. Despite the voluntary nature of the program, students are required to keep regular hours with the employer.

According to Mr. Oickle, participating media will include radio and television stations in the Springfield area as well as newspapers in these communities. The Holyoke Transcript and the Greenfield Recorder will also take part in the program.

Because of the educational nature of the program, students will receive no monetary compensation for their efforts. One day a week is involved.

Students assigned as reporters will cover city activities such as the district court, the city hall, and the law enforcement agencies. Reporters will be rotated throughout the news room, experiencing the various aspects of news writing.

Photographers will be given experience in news photo and film departments.

Mr. Musgrave actively encourages his students to avail themselves of the opportunity and emphasizes that the previous year's programs have proven invaluable in training students in the professional aspects of the journalism profession.

Army, Guard To Practice Riot Control

Army and National Guard officials say that they have made extensive preparations for dealing more swiftly with disorders.

The Army has stockpiled special equipment in half a dozen depots around the country and has developed plans for air delivery to trouble spots.

Special riot control training courses have been held at Ft. Gordon, Ga., for Army, National Guard and police officers. And detailed riot training plans, based upon lessons learned last summer, have been given to National Guard units.

North Korea Eyes Vance's Report

SEOUL (AP) — Communist North Korea will weigh carefully the results of talks between South Korean leaders and Cyrus R. Vance, President Johnson's trouble shooter. One result may be that the Communists will be far from in a hurry to release the captive USS Pueblo and her crew.

The Communists are likely to conclude that Vance's promise of "immediate consultations" between the United States and South Korea in the event of new North Korean aggressive thrusts is far short of what the Seoul government had been demanding of Washington.

Those who know the ways of the Korean Communists say that they will want to watch and wait now, to see just how much damage they have done and might yet do to U.S.-South Korean relations.

It would seem logical for the North Koreans to take part in more secret meetings with the Americans on the fate of the Pueblo. Such secret meetings—there have been five since the ship was captured—exclude the South Koreans and this has been a touchy matter in Seoul. While the anxiety of the Americans to get back their ship and men is understood by the South Koreans, the secret two-way meetings have had an abrasive effect on their nerves.

The final communique issued after Vance's talks with President Chung Hee Park and other high South Korean officials says the two countries reaffirmed a commitment "to undertake immediate consultations whenever the security of the Republic of Korea is threatened."

B52s Drop Tons of Bombs By Mistake

By PETER ARNETT
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — More than 40 persons were killed Tuesday when high-flying B52 Stratefortresses mistakenly dropped 50 tons of bombs outside a target zone only 10.5 miles north of Saigon, the U.S. Air Force announced Thursday.

It was the first such error attributed to the B52s

The Air Force did not indicate who the killed and injured were. Other reports said women and children were among them.

The target was a suspected concentration of Communist troops alongside the Saigon River. Clearance for the raid had come from the Vietnamese commander of the Saigon military district and the deputy senior American adviser for the 3rd Corps area.

The target restrictions apparently were not observed in the strike.

The Air Force spokesman said the entire target area had been declared free of friendly forces and civilians before the bombing.

Hanoi Rejects Johnson's Terms For Peace Talks

LONDON (AP)—Hanoi's top diplomat in Europe told U.N. Secretary-General U Thant in Paris that North Vietnam is standing firm in rejecting President Johnson's terms for peace talks, British sources said Thursday night.

Word of this development reached the British government from Paris where Thant met with Mai Van Bo, head of North Vietnam's delegation in France.

Bo relayed to Thant the Hanoi government's message—which replied to a questionnaire submitted last week by the secretary-general through a North Vietnamese diplomat in New Delhi.

The substance of the reply, reported by the sources, was: Peace talks with the Americans will begin "at an appropriate time" after the United States unconditionally stops bombing.

Student Rights

A Responsible Approach

Not since the YAHOO Free Press movement two years ago has the Student Union lobby been the scene of such fervor and emotion as was exhibited at yesterday's sit-in demonstration.

As usual there were the extremists and hecklers who managed from time to time to agitate the crowd, but the large majority of students—both demonstrators and onlookers—must be commended for the responsible manner in which they behaved. It was undoubtedly this mature attitude which dissuaded the administration from calling in police to disperse the gathering. Especially articulate and empathetic in his role of mediator was Dr. Mark Noffsinger, associate dean of students, who at one point took off his shoes so that he wouldn't step on any of those students seated on the floor.

The demonstration was obviously spontaneous, since no situation on campus is so critical as to necessitate a sit-in. What started out as an anti-Dow, anti-military protest soon became a vehicle through which students expressed their confusion and dissatisfaction on issues ranging from Vietnam to academics to dining commons food.

Perhaps a more central issue, however, is an apparent lack of faith in established student government channels on the part of the participants. Are "the proper channels" working and are students being represented effectively by their elected representatives?

A good example of responsible work being done by the Student Senate is the open house proposal which was being debated in a Faculty Senate meeting while the sit-in was going on. In this and other areas, the "established" channels have been functioning quite well. And if students have any faith in the system they should try to work through it rather than around it. If, however, students doubt the legitimacy of the present governmental structure, then it should be by-passed in favor of more expeditious means.

It is now the duty of each member of student government to re-examine the legitimacy of the present structure, his role within it, and the wants and needs of his constituents—something which has not been happening. And if the faculty and administration recognize the existing student government to be legitimate then they should deal with it fairly and expeditiously.

Hopefully, those students who meet with President John Lederle Monday evening will formulate a concise list of grievances beforehand and will agree to try working on them through the existing structure. Any vague or irrelevant demands will only weaken the strong bargaining position won in yesterday's protest. And hopefully both sides will maintain the same attitude of mutual respect which predominated at yesterday's gathering.

The question of student rights has been thrust into the limelight at UMass as never before, and only responsible, rational action on the part of the student body can make the goals discussed yesterday attainable.

It Was a Great Farce

All I got out of the great anti-Dow rally which congregated on the patio of the Southwest Dining Commons #7 were two chocolate kisses and a green lollipop.

In the earlier part of the day, students had passed out pictures of a child whose back had been severely burned by Napalm. If you refused the hand-out literature, the army jacketed distributor added this message, "Don't you want to know the truth."

From Tower windows, residents looked down on a small band surrounded by curious students and mingled here and there with people carrying signs stating "Dow shall not kill", "Napalm saves face" and "UMass students don't sell your souls to Dow." The flower power routine was provided by a girl dressed in what looked like a Gordon service sheet and carrying a basket of flowers. Another moved through the crowd dressed in black and with a whitened face. Demonstrators passed out candy to the spectators.

Then, what appeared to be the Green Beret division came racing across the courtyard brandishing toy machine guns. The leader got on the stage and shouted, "Hey you sons of bitches. Have you seen a little yellow man dressed in black pajamas?"

The students gathered around were smiling, laughing, apathetic or just watching the presentation no doubt considering the whole thing very funny, which it was. It was a great farce. What had previously been considered an appeal for the truth and to oppose Dow Chemical turned into one of the most amusing occurences of the year—on the order of the theatre of the absurd.

If this fiasco was an attempt to convince the student body, the US government or Lyndon Baines Johnson of the atrocity of war and its needless consequences then they failed. The image projected was one of poor taste as well as an insult to and a defeat of their cause.

This was part of the UMass demonstration to show the horrors of the Napalm being used in the war. The seared child is the terror of Napalm but he deserves a quite different emotional reaction.

Napalm II

According to William F. Pepper, who spent five-six weeks of 1966 in Vietnam as a freelance correspondent, a quarter of a million children had been killed in this war. In addition, from other official figures, he estimates that 415,000 civilians had been killed in the war from 1961 to the spring of 1966. The battle fury of 1967 and this year has only added to those figures. American bombs are overwhelmingly responsible for these casualties; the civilian wounded amount to more than a million.

A reporter, Peter Arnett wrote that "at least 500 civilians and possibly 1000 were killed in the city of Ben Tre by our attacks which included the use of napalm and anti - personnel weapons (Boston Globe 2/8/68). As Maj. Chester L. Brown, who directed the attacks, revealed: "Some of the weapons we use are area weapons, spraying a general area instead of a specific target." Thus, casualties in a city of 35,000 are bound to be high. Enemy dead totaled 451; allied forces only 70. The civilians lost this battle which is only a small part of the present escalation.

"Body counts" of civilian dead are difficult to obtain from the American government; it has a lot to hide. As Sen. Kennedy has revealed too; the tragedy is even greater because the medical facilities are not adequate to treat the civilian wounded. There are only 150 Vietnamese doctors to care for the wounded; it is small consolation to Vietnamese peasants to be administered to by A-1 army medics after being grotesquely burned by their napalm. The survivors of American napalm attacks are an embarrassment to our government. We just bury the dead; the wounded must be cared for. There is evidence that napalm victims are hidden from the public by the South Vietnamese government to prevent the indignation the condition deserves.

Our government denounced the use of poison gas by Nasser's troops in Yemen this year, so officially it has declared that it makes a difference how a person is killed. Geneva Conventions aside, poison gas like napalm is a very indiscriminate weapon which leaves civilians at its mercy. All bombs are indiscriminate, but unlike napalm (and anti - personnel weapons) they are usually directed at military targets. Napalm is remolding the physiognomy of Vietnamese youth. Our war arsenal is creating a nation of mutants. We are not only defoliating Vietnam's land, but deflowering its youth in our misguided effort to enforce conformity to our culture and heritage.

Napalm and its accompaniment, white phosphorous only compound the barbarous nature of this war. The killing of women and children should be above political consideration. I certainly condemn Viet Cong's atrocities too, but I am more concerned about America's crimes in Vietnam as a person is more concerned about the conduct of his family than someone else's. Napalm covers a strip of almost 600 feet long and strikes my conscience as immoral because it is especially used as a terror weapon against civilians who suffer more from its use than military forces. Louis F. Fieser, the inventor of napalm, has said "napalm was originally developed to be used against military targets. No one ever thought it would be used against humans."

Dow claims to be manufacturing napalm in the line of duty to its country. Meanwhile, the selling price of napalm has doubled and increased in demand. I guess patriotism has its price, too.

The effects of a nuclear bomb dropped on a population center would certainly horrify Americans but they don't seem to mind attaining that casualty potential accumulatively. American tax dollars are behind the manufacture and use of napalm so all taxpayers are responsible for its mutilated victims. We all enjoy complicity for allowing such a government as ours to exist. So when the jelly is searing someone's flesh this week, remember you put it there just as if you had dropped it from an airplane yourself.

Justice?

To the editor:

The time is 10:00 a.m., February 10, 1968—the place, the Northampton District Court, the Honorable Judge Ryan presiding. Chief Blasko of the University of Massachusetts police department approaches the bench and whispers a few words in the Judge's ear. The Judge glances in the direction of the 18 year old defendant and the bailiff reads the verdict of the court: $50.00 fine and 35 days internment in the State Mental Hospital. Total elapsed time 3 minutes and 22 seconds. The charge? Drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

To many, this would not appear extraordinary except for the circumstances which the Judge refused to consider. The defendant is subject to deep depression and had come under the care of a psychiatrist and two staff members of the University. The boy had been living in Amherst for six weeks, had a job at which he arrived at 6:00 a.m and left at 5 p.m. or later and lived in a room behind the Amherst Bowling Alley.

Both University staff members were present at the trial but were not allowed to approach the Judge either before or after the case was heard. And while the Judge seemed quite willing to listen to the opinions of the police, he categorically refused to listen to the professional opinions of the staff members.

Upon conclusion of the days proceedings, Judge Ryan quickly withdrew to his chambers and once again refused to discuss the matter with those who could give perspective to the case. In my opinion the Judge considered the boy a dangerous criminal; someone to be put away. Neither compassion nor understanding was apparent.

What will be the result of this summary justice? Can an understaffed, overworked hospital staff give the same attention he was receiving from the psychiatrist and staff members directly concerned with his welfare? Will the hospital, unable to give him that attention, keep him in a state of semi-awareness with "medication"? And upon his release what will have been accomplished? Nothing?

Is this the manner in which justice is administered? Can this be considered responsible judgment from the bench? Has not, in fact, Judge Ryan displayed a closed mind, unwilling and unable to consider any opinions other than his own biased point of view?

Participate in Your Student Senate

To the editor:

On February 22, 1968, the Student Senate will conduct elections in Coolidge Upper, Brooks, Butterfield, Chadbourne, Field, Hamlin, Hills South, James, Leach, Mills, and Thoreau. As is usual, the residents of these dormitories are expected to fail to contribute the minimum show of participation in their student government association—VOTE!! The call for voters has occurred and reoccurred at every election for the Student Senate. Many students will say why should I vote; the Student Senate does nothing for me nor does it care too.

This attitude, unfortunately, is self-generating and those in the Senate have a similar feeling for their constituents which is exemplified by their failure to visit and discuss issues with them. It is just possible that if the residents would question their candidates and demand consultation with their respective senators, the senators in turn would realize their obligation to keep their constituents informed and interested in their student government.

Even more flagrant non-participation is exemplified by commuters. Commuters have 15 seats—the most powerful voting bloc in the Senate and they continually fail to vote or even to put up candidates. There are ten commuter seats available and the election will be held on Tuesday, February 20, in the Student Union Lobby from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. If the commuters were to lose these seats, they would probably stage some form of demonstration. Every fall commuters cry for recognition. Why have you failed to use the Senate and your ten votes as a means for this. My strong feelings are that if in this election the votes are less than 5% of the total 1966 students, ten of the fifteen seats should be permanently removed.

I can only conclude that if students continue to not vote, then student government should dissolve—for without at least voter support what sort of legitimacy can a democratically based government claim? I doubt if anyone would seriously hold that we can successfully get along without student government. So VOTE!!

"Completely Biased Editorials"

To the editor:

How many anti-Vietnam, anti-napalm and anti-Johnson editorials must the Daily Collegian spit up each week. I'm not for escalating the war senselessly, burning civilians with napalm or even pro-Johnson, but I'm sick of your one-sided, completely biased editorials.

If I don't like the editorial opinion of the Globe or Herald, I don't have to buy them anymore. But I, like every other student on this campus, have paid (without choice) for the Daily Collegian's publication—in advance. Why do I have to read only one side of every issue? Why do I have to read little blurbs that are always, but always, so biased.

Perhaps the Daily Collegian's editors don't realize it, but every issue, including the ones listed above, have at least two sides which can be argued fairly. Isn't it time now to hear the other side?

Confessions of a Jilted Liberal

A funny thing happened to me on my way to the Hatch. Upon entering the Union yesterday afternoon, I was shoved in the direction of my local army recruiter and immediately everyone around me began to sit down. Not wanting to stand out in the crowd, I sat down with them.

After about a half hour of sitting, I casually nudged the young lass next to me. "Why are we sitting?" I asked.

"Listen, baby, when you've marched and sung and lighted bonfires for two solid hours, you're too tired to stand."

That answer satisfied me for awhile but as a jeering crowd of anti-anti-demonstrators gathered and urge us to go home, I realized that failure to remain seated would be tantamount to sacrificing my belief in something.

After another two hours of sitting, I asked the girl next to me if we'd ever be able to get up and still save face. She nodded solemnly and agreed that saving face was of primary importance. "If we can only create an issue and have the administration back down, then maybe we can leave with our heads held high."

Just then, Dr. Noffsinger announced to the demonstrators that the President and the Provost would meet with a group of 25 demonstrators. "That sounds fair to me," I whispered to the girl next to me.

"That may be fair but how will it look if we knuckle under to the administration again." And then she yelled out, "We want an open meeting!" Soon everyone was chanting, "We want an open meeting!"

The lines were drawn. The demonstrators wouldn't leave until they got an open meeting. Suddenly, the sit-in took on a new spirit. If only the administration would grant them an open meeting to air their grievances, they would get up off the floor.

Scores of demonstrators sat breathless, sweat cascading down foreheads, as they prayed that the administration would agree to their demands. And Dr. Noffsinger spoke. "The Administration agrees to hold an open meeting to air your grievances."

The throng leaped to its feet and I suavely asked the young lady next to me if she would care to burn some incense with me in the Hatch.

"Sorry," she said. "My mother told me not to associate with pinkos like you."

The DAILY COLLEGIAN has printed below a list of individuals who, according to Bart Kaplan, have agreed to serve on the committee which will speak with University policy-makers on Monday night. Kaplan has requested that these students, and any others who desire to take part, meet Sunday, Feb. 18, at 7:00 p.m. in the Plymouth Room, Student Union.

To the editor:

He fidgeted nervously in his place in the line, his mind trying to envision the dense jungles of distant Pacific isles with thousands of men scattered within their thicknesses. He tried again and again to figure how the men were arranged, where the lieutenants commanded from, the position the sergeants took in the line of descending command, even where he would have been in his own capacity as a new Marine officer. Military reality dictated to him that order was indispensable, yet now he could only struggle in vain to make some order out of the battle which his father had spoken of on those two rare occasions.

The line shifted forward slightly and he moved slowly in its close ranks, still finding himself uneasy in the almost daily routine of lines and marches after a year. Those two occasions, he now thought of often, recalling the vision of pain reflected in his father's eyes. Clearly he remembered the long moment when words lost the security of sentences, the still silences between father and son engulfed in the stronger reality of an earlier moment's emotion. He had thought often of what it would be like to know what his father felt then—each time his own mind's dense geometry leading him back to attempts at giving order to the men in such battles as his father mentioned.

The line moved on quickly now, interrupting his thoughts, as they approached the cavernous opening of the air transport. His memory reactively clutched back again to grasp those foreign syllables of his destination. Searching for the third time through the papers in the front pocket of his clean uniform, he recalled the smugness of his fellow officers at his being assigned a soft command post. He envied their more exciting commands and cursed his own bad luck at not drawing a region of greater action.

As he opened his destination order paper of November 18, 1967 he felt he would never understand what his father could not find words for. He just knew as he followed the line into the transport that his last chances for ever understanding that enigma of pain left him with his unlucky assignment to the secure Marine stronghold of Khe Sahn.

Reciprocate And Integrate

To the editor:

I recently talked to an Amherst College student who feels that four-college social life is virtually non - existent in relation to UMass. Although, it was pointed out to me, UMies are welcomed at Amherst fraternity parties, it is difficult to reciprocate this practice due to the closed social practices at UMass. Do we perhaps feel inferior to our prestigious neighbors, and thus think it necessary to be socially contained within the University population?

Couldn't we at least publicize our dorm. and other social activities, and really create a four-college community? I'm for integration.

A Brief Clarification

To the editor:

In reply to William Gilbert's letter of Feb. 14, I think Mr. Gilbert ought to realize that while Washington was not of Dissenter stock most Colonial Americans were and they were the "us" referred to in my editorial. If Mr. Gilbert would read a little about our revolution he'd find that the celrgy, fearing an Anglican takeover of American religion, were the most fervent revolutionaries — so much for History 151.

If Mr. Gilbert doubts that we are foisting a western religion on Vietnam, he need only check the religion of the rules as opposed to that of the majority of the people, or read the late Cardinal Spellman's address to American troops in Vietnam.

Lastly, the purpose of the editorial was not to show "causes and motives" for the war in Vietnam but to illustrate the similarities between the Continental army's and the Viet Cong's positions and the similarities between the two revolutions in relation to the people's wishes.

PROTEST STRAYS . . .

The tenor of the crowd then changed. The concern of the speakers shifted to a protest of University policies and the war became a secondary issue.

Bart Kaplan, grad studnt at UM and editor of the Mother of Voices began speaking against University policies, specifically criticizing the lack of dialogue between the administration and the students.

Kaplan asked that all present abandon political differences and unite on the common ground of defiance of University policies. He asked that all stay for an open dialogue and requested that Lederle appear to answer some questions. The crowd approved and some leaders indicated that if Lederle were to come to the Union they would move into the S.U. Ballroom for a discussion of issues.

Noffsinger asked for a guarantee that the group would move if Lederle came. He said he would try to call the President.

Taking off his shoes in order not to injure anyone and as a sign of his sincerety, he made his way through the crowd, and the associate dean of students left the lobby to call Lederle.

After the statement had been read by Noffsinger, Kaplan and others continued to hammer away at the UM issue.

The crowd diminished somewhat around 5:30 while many took a supper break, but the hard core stayed on and the jumbled dialogue continued. About 6:30 the group swelled again partly with people trying to get into the film in the ballroom and partly with the curious and the hostile.

With the exit of Noffsinger, the protestors returned to the debate on the demands made to the University. The dialogue shifted back and fourth between the demonstrators until one of the protestors called for five minutes of silence for meditation. One of the group, Larry Mazel, fostered the silence by blowing taps on a trumpet.

The meditation, interrupted by grad student - protestor, Fred Dicker, yielded the mike to a representative of the Student Senate. The student government representative, Sue Tracey, reported that a delegation from the Senate had met with the Board of Trustees and a faculty group on the open housing proposal, which had been a key point of discussion during the afternoon.

The Board of Trustees, she told the crowd, were sympathetic to the proposal and the students, but the legislators and the electorate were not. If the students wanted the present policy changed, she stated, they should go to their legislators and their parents to persuade them.

In both answer and protest, a demonstrator shouted, "The University belongs to us." And, with the crowd beginning to become uneasy, Bart Kaplan questioned "Dr. Noffsinger has been gone for 15 minutes. Where is he?"

Noffsinger, shortly returning to the group, said that the President "cannot and will not come into clear violation of University policy," but had sent a message to the group. He said that following the reading of the message there would be time allotted for discussion.

Lederle's statement was as follows:

"I support the principle of peaceful demonstration. The actions of your group this morning and early afternoon were in accordance with my interpretation of an expressive and informative demonstration, and were consistent with the policies of the Faculty Senate and the Board of Trustees in this matter.

"I am convinced that your activities are in accord with your interests and I ask you to express your sense of responsibility now by conforming to the spirit and letter of the law."

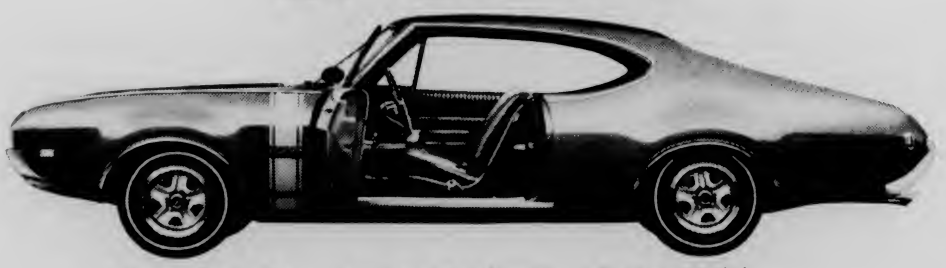
Two fraternities made an offer that they would be willing to clear the Union out if so requested. Others in the crowd, particularly along the balcony, mocked the demonstrators and made it difficult to hear. WMUA engineers wandered through the crowd with mikes picking up the statements.

Finally, the demands for action on the part of the University became more vociferous. "We don't want to be treated like children. We demand action now."

Then in the midst of the chaos, one voice hit on an idea that made sense to the majority. "We have to articulate and back our demands and we must have an open meeting so we won't be double crossed again."

The open meeting idea caught on. Kaplan talked to Noffsinger about the idea and he put in a call to the President. The message came back.

Lederle said he would sit in a closed meeting with five grad students, ten undergrads and ten members of student government. The answer did not satisfy the demonstrators and the debate continued for an open meeting.



Noffsinger urged the group to take the offer. "You have shared with me the confusion of all men trying to talk at the same time. We have had comment and dialogue and this proposal is a vehicle for progress. Select your leaders."

The demonstrators persisted with their plea for an open meeting. One voice sounded, "Let's unify. We're all students, we have to get together and ask for an open meeting. We won't move until we are guaranteed an open meeting with Lederle."

Noffsinger then disappeared again from the crowd. The noise increased and shouting, flying objects and general confusion persisted for about 15 minutes. The anti-protest group was most vicious at this time and obscenities flew about the Union.

Finally Noffsinger returned, said he would meet in an open meeting with 25 students bringing their complaints. The meeting will be open to the public and Noffsinger urged all students to attend. The 25 students will be in the same ratio as the first proposal from the President.

Concert to Be Dedicated To Late UMass Pianist

A concert of music for voice and instruments by University of Massachusetts music department faculty members Feb. 21 will be dedicated to the memory of Howard Lebow, UMass pianist and assistant professor of music, who died last month at the age of 32 after an Amherst auto accident.

Soprano Dorothy Ornest of the music faculty will sing three works, two of them prepared especially for her by composers of the UMass faculty. The works will receive their first performances at the Lebow memorial concert, to be held at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. The concert is open to the public without charge.

Henry Purcell's "Aria of the Blessed Virgin," a scene for soprano and small orchestra, will open the program with a new instrumentation by Charles Fussell of the UMass music department. Alessandro Scarlatti's solo cantata, "Sue Le sponde del Tebro" (On the Banks of the Tiber), featuring faculty member Walter Chesnut on trumpet, will complete the first half of the recital. Mr. Fussell will conduct both the Purcell and Scarlatti works.

The second half of the program will be devoted to the premiere of a new work by faculty composer Robert Stern. The work is a song cycle for soprano, cello and piano titled "Terezin," based on children's poems and drawings from the Terezin Ghetto, 1942-1944. Terezin, located not far from Prague, was a way station to the point of no return—Auschwitz—for approximately 15,000 children. Joel Krosnick will be the cellist with the composer at the piano.

Other department members who will perform include Julian Olevsky and Ronald Steele, violin; Joseph Contino, clarinet; and Mariam Whaples, harpsichord.

Alpha Zeta Delegates to Meet at UMass

The first annual New England Regional Conclave of Alpha Zeta Fraternity will be held at the University of Massachusetts Feb. 16-17, according to Stuart E. Denton, chairman of the conclave committee.

About 50 student delegates are expected to attend from the New England area. UMass associate dean of the College of Agriculture Fred P. Jeffrey will deliver a welcoming address to the delegates Saturday morning, Feb. 17. Mr. J. H. Litner, general secretary of Alpha Zeta, will be the principal speaker.

The delegates will atend a series of workshops during the day concerning fraternity pledging and initiation, group living and establishment of an alumni association. They will also discuss the philosophy of Alpha Zeta and the problem of chapter apathy.

The conclave will conclude Saturday night with a banquet in the Student Union.

WINTER CARNIVAL '68 presents THE BUCKINGHAMS

There is today in the United States a rather large city called Chicago, which has kept the bulk of its musical talent imprisoned for many years. The reasons for this are too numerous to mention now. What is really important is that The Buckinghams have also unlocked a door, and have emerged as one of the top musical groups in this country. Their struggle for recognition is not an uncommon story in the music business today, but their talent and backgrounds are.

THE BUCKINGHAMS

from chicago they came all five a new group they had all been through though very young all the musical games one must play in chicago.

the games were the same, but the rules often changed only one presence was felt the need just to belt the beat.

of howlin' wolf, the wrigley building and marshall field & co.
majestic, windy, the thriving junction in the heart of the nation there throbs the sounds and the unheralded players with musical visions unique in themselves
all were innovators
all dared to try a few often changed the world they lived in their musical environment a sign of the times their musical statement a comment
it was seldom applauded on time until rather too late for their personal recognition here is jon-jon, dennis, carl, nick and martin all speaking freely
hopefully some will listen it is not that the contrasts within authentically differ realization of self and the world can only be multifaceted and multidirected
the edges of an enigma can only shed more light on the intrinsic controversy this is not an epitaph . . . only a beginning the doors have been bolted, sealed and have yet to swing open maybe we have perhaps started to turn the key. —james william guercio

Gymnastics Team Takes On Navy As Last Obstacle to Third Place

By JAN CURLEY
Sports Day Editor

Tomorrow night the varsity gymnastics team faces probably their last major hurdle on the way to winning third place in the Eastern League when they meet Navy in the Cage at 8:15 p.m.

Navy sports a record of 2-3, having lost to Penn, Temple and Springfield, while defeating Syracuse and Pitt. Navy has the potential of scoring in the high 170's and Coach Erik Kjeldsen expects a close meet after UMass's Wednesday night victory over Springfield.

Navy's outstanding man is Jay Long on the side horse. He has the highest average in Eastern League competition. Bob LeClair should provide some stiff opposition though, as he is third in the league with an average of 9.15.

Coach Kjeldsen expects to go with the same lineup that he has used successfully against Springfield and Army. If UMass should win this one, their only remaining competition is Syracuse. Syracuse scores only in the 120 area, and this should just about clinch a third place for the Redmen.

On the floor exercises, Toby Kasavana, Joe Reed, Joe Godwin and Dick DelGallo will represent UMass. Reed, LaClair, Clarence Frazer and Fred Babakian, one of the tri-captains, will compete on the side horse.

George Siebert, Reed, Dave March and DelGallo will be on the rings. UMass will be represented on the trampoline by the Kasavana brothers, Toby and Mike, Godwin and Tom Adams.

Hockey Team Seeks First Win Of 1968 Season Against H. C.

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Still seeking their first win of 1968, the UMass hockey team will meet Holy Cross tomorrow afternoon at 4 at Orr Rink.

The Redmen skaters have seen their 1968 record fall to 0-5 after Wednesday night's 7-4 loss to UConn. The team has been in a prolonged slump since their third game of the season losing 11 of 12, during that time.

Hockey coach Jack Canniff was not at all pleased with the performance of his squad against the Huskies. He regarded the game as one of the worst played by the Redmen this season.

"The team did no forechecking, had no defense, and no passing," said Canniff in his summation of the team's performance Wednesday.

Canniff is looking for a much better effort from his skaters against the Crusaders tomorrow afternoon. The team had played a solid all around game against Army a week ago and Canniff hopes that they will play the same against the Crusaders.

Holy Cross has a 10-6 record for this season. Babson, Wesleyan, WPI and MIT are among the victims of the Crusaders, but they have been beaten twice by UConn, the most recent a 5-2 game last week.

Last year's two meetings between the Redmen and the Crusaders resulted in a split, the Redmen winning, 8-4, and Holy Cross coming back ten days later to pin a 6-4 loss on UMass.

The overall series between the two clubs stands at 8-5 in favor of the Redmen. Competition between the two schools started back in 1914.

The Redmen have fared slightly better at Orr Rink than they have on the road. UMass has a 1-7 road record while at Orr Rink the record is a fair 2-5.

Jeff Sanborn continues to lead the Redmen in scoring when he picked up a pair of goals against UConn. The goals gave him a total of 14 for the season.

Weekend Practice Slated for Skiers

Currently leading in the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference, the UMass ski team will practice this weekend at Thunder Mountain in Charlemont. Coach MacConnell plans to work his skiers hard to maintain their position.

Coach MacConnell explained, "Ski racing is a two fisted operation. The skiers need competition to approach their respective levels of ability. Without competitive experience, a fine skier will often choke under the pressure on race day."

"On the other hand, practicing helps to extend each individual's ability," he went on to say. "There are no short cuts to success; to improve, many hours have to be spent on the hill. We've had three weekends of racing experience, and now we have to work on technique and correct each other's mistakes."

Ned Kelly, the number two skier on the team, is still nursing a bad ankle, but it is anticipated that he will be ready to go when competition resumes March 2.

UMass felt Kelly's absence at Bromley last Saturday when they dropped behind Amherst in the slalom. Kelly, a fine slalom skier, was second only to Collin Garstang in the season's earier slalom at Middlebury.

The rest of the squad is in fine health and looking forward the practice sessions. The Coach will be watching, John Hurd and Wilkie Ward in practice. Both skiers caught fire last weekend at Bromley. They may play an increasingly important role in the final meets.

There are three more races this season and the best effort will be required if UMass is to emerge the conference champions.

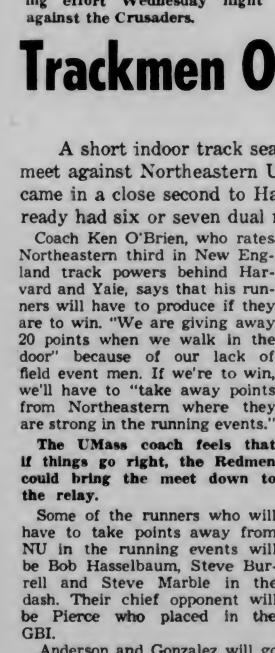
What the interviewers won't tell you about General Electric.



They won't tell you about all the job opportunities we have for college graduates—engineers, science, business and liberal arts majors. Not that they wouldn't like to. It's just that there are too many jobs and too little time. In a half-hour interview our man would barely have time to outline the scope and diversity of the opportunities we offer. That's why we published a brochure called "Starting Points at General Electric." In plain language it will tell you exactly how and where a person with your qualifications can start a career with General Electric. Pick up a copy at your Placement Office. Hoopsters Meet Huskies on Jinxed Storrs Court

TWO POINTS — Sanderson scores two for the Redman losing effort Wednesday night against the Crusaders.

UConn Looking to Avenge Tindall's Buzzer Win

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

It was a wintry January 15 in Storrs, Connecticut. The year was 1936. UMass had just soundly defeated the UConn Huskies 58-32 in an insignificant interstate basketball game, at least insignificant then.

Now 32 long years later, this 58-32 win remains the last Redman win at the infamous pit at Storrs. Tomorrow night, UMass hopes to break this woeful jinx on the Huskies' home court when the Redmen travel to Storrs to meet Connecticut in a key Yankee Conference game for both teams. Gametime will be 8 p.m. and the battle will be broadcast live on WMUA 91.1 F.M.

Besides a 32-year jinx, the Redmen will be fighting a revenge-minded UConn squad. The first meeting between the two teams was, of course, the unforgettable 65-63 UMass victory won on Bill Tindall's last second basket. The UMass win snapped a UConn win streak and dropped the Huskies into a second place conference tie with UMass, two losses behind Rhode Island.

The UConn team will again be led by big Bill Corley. The 6'7 Williston Park, N. Y. senior is averaging over 22 points per game and also pulling down 15 rebounds a game. UConn's offense revolves greatly around the performance of Corley. UMass, led by Peter Gayeska, did a great defensive job on the center in the first meeting holding Corley to a mere eight points. A comparable job tomorrow is necessary for the Redmen.

In one of the corners for UConn will be 6'4 senior Tim Smith. It was Smith who almost single-handedly sank the Redmen in the first game with his deadly long-range shooting. The Glens Falls, N. Y. native is averaging almost 12 points a game, but as he demonstrated in the Cage, Smith is capable of having some red-hot shooting.

Supporting Smith up front will be 6'4 sophomore John Crisp, from Lexington. Crisp, a varsity football flanker back for the Huskies, is averaging a little over nine points, but as he has demonstrated, he can score in the double figures and is a strong rebounder.

Starting in the backcourt for UConn will be two juniors, Fred Malan and Jack Melen. Malan, from Waterford, Conn. is a good outside shooter and quarterbacks the Huskie offense with fine ballhandling. Melen, who is from Hackensack, N. J., is a fine defensive player who did a fine job of guarding high scoring Ray Ellerbrook in the first game. Melen also can shoot fairly well from outside.

Also seeing action for the UConn team, whose disappointing 8-9 record underlines the relative inexperience of the squad which is conveyed all the way to rookie coach Burr Carlson, are 6'5 forward Karl Niederwerfer, a senior, who has played little in his first couple of years, senior guard Tom McNeece, who played behind Wes Bialosuknia, for most of his varsity career and sophomore forward Dave Storrs.

By winning tomorrow, UMass could gain sole ownership of second place and also bring their record to .500. The Redmen can still gain a piece of the conference title, as can the Huskies, so that game is a big one. A loss for either will eliminate them from the conference title.

SWIMMING MEET
The swimming meet against Holy Cross College has been changed to a HOME MEET in the Boyden Gym at 2 p.m. tomorrow.

CONNECTICUT STARTERS

TIM SMITH

Coming off one of their best performances of the year against Holy Cross, the Redmen will probably go with their usual starting five of Joe DiSarcina, Peter Gayeska, Bill Tindall, Gary Gasperack, who had one of his finest games, in the first UConn battle, and Ray Ellerbrook.

Applications for all forms of financial assistance for the 1968 — Summer Sessions and the 1968-69 academic year are now available in the Placement and Financial Aid office, Room 239, Whitmore Administration Building. All students including those now receiving assistance, who are seeking financial aid must apply before March 1.

Frosh Oppose Lanky UConn Cagers

After facing a tall Holy Cross team and playing their finest game of the season, the UMass freshman basketball team takes on another group of tall timber in the person of the Connecticut frosh tomorrow night at Storrs at 6 p.m.

The UConn frosh presently have a 2-4 record, but they feature several fine players. Probably the finest of the Huskies stands only 5' 11. He is Bob Boyd, a soph shooting star from Worcester. Boyd has paced the UConn scoring and is a fine ball handler.

Up front the Huskies have five ball players 6'5 or taller. Seeing the most playing time to date is 6'7 Ken Augenstein from Warwick, R. I. Steve Enright, who hails from Union City, N. J., and 6'5 Bob Taylor from Bridgeport, Conn. Also playing is 6'5 Phil Hoagland from Braintree, Mass.

In the backcourt, supporting Boyd, have been 6'1 Leo Charron from Attleboro, and 6'1 Fran Horwath out of Bethlehem, Pa. The young Huskies have had three common opponents with UMass. Both teams have dropped all three contests to Yale, Boston College and Holy Cross.

UMass' performance against Holy Cross, though a losing one, was a great one for the Little Redmen. Playing at a great height disadvantage, compounded by the early loss to fouls of 6'6 Frank Shaffeld, UMass put on a scrappy performance that fell just one point short.

Two consecutive 19 point performances by previously little-used Tom Lally have been the surprises of the season for UMass. Lally played the big Holy Cross forwards to a standstill as he displayed fine outside shooting.

Frosh Coach Peter Broaca said of his team's performance against Holy Cross, "I'd have to say that it was our best performance, considering our opposition."

Broaca is undecided as to his starting lineup tomorrow night. He started Jim Ryan at guard, a position Ryan had not previously played, and the Somerville product came through with 22 points and complemented well the play of Bill Greeley at the other guard position. However, Broaca may go with Bob Dempsey in the back court to capitalize on his fine ball handling.

Trackmen Open Indoor Season at NU

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

A short indoor track season opens for the UMass track men tomorrow with a dual meet against Northeastern University in Boston. The strong Northeastern team, which came in a close second to Harvard in the recent Greater Boston Invitational Meet, has already had six or seven dual meets and is at the height of their indoor season.

Coach Ken O'Brien, who rates Northeastern third in New England track powers behind Harvard and Yale, says that his runners will have to produce if they are to win. "We are giving away 20 points when we walk in the door" because of our lack of field event men. If we're to win, we'll have to "take away points from Northeastern where they are strong in the running events."

The UMass coach feels that if things go right, the Redmen could bring the meet down to the relay.

Some of the runners who will have to take points away from NU in the running events will be Bob Hasselbaum, Steve Burrell and Steve Marble in the dash. Their chief opponent will be Pierce who placed in the GBI.

Anderson and Gonzalez will go against GBI point scorer Foley in the 600. Dave Evans will try his first 1000 in competition against Cantanza of Northeastern.

Senior Greg Bowman faces a tough opponent in the mile in Sheehan of NU who placed second behind Royce Shaw of Harvard who broke the Northeastern Cage record in the GBI with a 4:15 mile.

Paul Hoss will double in the one and two mile. Along with Hoss in the two mile will be UMass ace Charlie Lang.

By giving up a fifth of the points, the Redmen will have to turn in strong performances to beat Northeastern on the tough NU track.

Along with the varsity, the Little Redmen track squad also travels to NU to open their season. Coach O'Brien feels they will be a little better off than the varsity because the UMass frosh have a stronger field event team than the varsity.

Buzz Hiller, holder of the UMass frosh pole vault record, will go against NU's Klim who is having a good season.

In the high jump, Cal Carpenter will go for the UMass team. Weight men Austin and Ball also have excellent chances of picking up points for the frosh in the field events.

In the running events, the UMass coach feels that the Little Redmen can match the NU frosh, "man for man."

Frosh star Ron Wayne will double in the mile and 1000 and will be competing against Larry Josephs in both races. Josephs won the frosh GBI mile and was second in the 1000.

Along with Wayne in the 1000 will be Elliott Stevens who also has a good chance of beating Josephs to the wire. Clarence Gaynor will man the 600 for UMass against Whitten of NU and Leo Duart and Tom Dedarian will compete in a fast two mile against Fallon and Alexander from Northeastern.

As in the varsity meet, Coach O'Brien feels that the frosh will come down to the relay. Joe Burrell and Ed Heywood who run the dash might run the relay along with Gaynor and hurdler Gerry Spellman. As of now, the coach is undecided about who will run the varsity and frosh relays, the event that could mean a win or loss in both meets.

Academics claimed the only two freshman heavyweights, and the wrestling team is looking for an athlete over 200 pounds. Candidates please report to the wrestling room in Boyden.

BIG BROTHERS NEEDED

Most of us know that as a child grows up he needs people in his life to give him guidance and to act as a model.

Currently in Northampton there are a number of fatherless boys. The Welfare Department of Northampton thinks that responsible male students on this campus could make a significant contribution by acting as "big brothers" to these fatherless boys.

They would like students to devote a few hours each week on a regular basis, but at the student's convenience, to work with individual boys. Alpha Phi Omega asks students interested in participating in this project to sign up for this tomorow night or Wednesday or to contact Mike (6-8932) or Pete (6-8977).

Senate Rejects Faculty 'Open House' Proposals

By JIM FOUDY
City Editor

The Student Senate in a special session last night voted its refusal to accept last Thursday's Faculty Senate open house proposal and turned down two other motions that stressed immediate student action on the open house issue.

The refusal to support the Faculty Senate was based on last Thursday's meeting when the faculty voted to permit only ten open houses a month. Other aspects of the proposal will be brought up in two weeks and the motion then goes for a final OK to the Trustees.

The Senate felt, however, that by limiting the number of open houses, by requiring open doors and by delineating the behavior expected during open houses, the faculty senate was dealing a serious blow to student self-government,

Although the feeling was strong on this motion other proposals to force the open house debate to a head were defeated.

The only other stand was to re-affirm its belief in civil-disobedience if no action is taken. The Senate refused to set a date however, on when the civil disobedience should be initiated.

Working in the shadow of tomorrow's open meeting with President Lederle, the Senate scratched a proposal by Senator Larry Marcus that called for violation of the existing open house restriction if no action was taken by the University by 2 p.m. this Thursday. Marcus repeatedly declared that the Senate and the students had waited long enough and that now was the time for action.

He stressed this same point earlier in the evening when Senator Fred Hartwell proposed that S-46, the original open house proposal be sent directly to the Board of Trustees for approval. This original proposal made by the Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate left frequency of open house, to the dormitories.

Hartwell said he was fed up with delays by the Faculty Senate and wanted to by-pass the body. Hartwell said, "I saw ludicrous debate in the Faculty Senate last week and it is not the way a University should be run."

Hartwell said he was particularly incensed when the secre-

Open Meeting Format Planned By Ad Hoc Student Committee

By RICHARD LANE and WAYNE SOINI
Staff Reporters

A self-proclaimed University students Ad Hoc Committee last night planned a format for tonight's open meeting with President Lederle and declared itself in favor of open houses for all dormitories by 2 p.m. Thursday regardless of the administration's response tonight.

Meeting in the Council Chambers of the Union with an overflow crowd of more than 100, the meeting picked up on the demands for student's rights were Thursday's sit down demonstration in the Union left off.

Called to organize a format for tonight's confrontation with the Administration and to institute a new student power movement, the committee endorsed civil disobedience of the existing University rules regarding open houses as of 2 p.m. this Thursday.

"We are not going to ask, we are not going to demand, we are going to proclaim a fiat," said Barton Kapplan, UMass graduate student and main speaker at the meeting, which was unchaired.

"The function of this meeting is to decide who we are, what we want, and know we are going to go about getting it," Kaplan said in the course of the hectic two-hour meeting.

The first student to speak suggested the abolition of the student senate, saying, "The senate does not represent anything except the apathetic majority of students on this campus." Discussion following these lines indicated that members of the Committee believe the Ad Hoc Committee to be the legitimate representative body of students.

"It can't be us versus the university, it has got to be the whole student body. We must have student unity," said one student. A publicity committee was formed to interest students in attending the Cage meeting. A speakers'

The Demonstrators

By CHET WEINERMAN
Editor-in-Chief

At 7:30 p.m. tonight, the dissatisfied demonstrators of last Thursday will gather in the Cage to air their grievances to the alleged Phantom, John W. Lederle. Philosopher Eric Hoffer points out that hatred is the quality that unites pressure groups, and the UMass dissenters will be united through a hatred directed against recognizable devil—the inhibitive University administration.

A pertinent question to ask at this point might be: "For what are these students pressuring?" It appeared that at least a good minority of the sit-inners were sitting in either because they couldn't get up, or because it was the beautiful thing to do. If the demonstration had been against Dow (as it was supposed to have been) or against the war, then it would be much easier to attach sincerity to the cause of the demonstrators. But the demonstration was unintended and directionless. Complaints bounded from one issue to the next and seemed to be against everything from languages to food.

The demonstrators broke up only when they were guaranteed an open meeting with the President. Their goal apparently is to achieve immediate action which they say cannot be done through the Student Senate. The sensationally destructive La Resistance seemed to verbalize this point most dramatically.

But one is forced to wonder that if every single demand of the demonstrators were met and all the grievances were satisfied, if the demonstrators would be satisfied. Or is this a kind of adolescent rebellion against all regulations and requirements.

No person likes all the rules society imposes upon him; yet law is mandatory for the maintenance of an ordered society. For the University administration to cast aside rules merely because some students do not like those rules would be for them to lead us down a blind path away from our supposed goal of a total education.

There is something that the "total students rights—student power" faction seems to ignore when it discusses the uselessness and inertia of administrators. These students lose sight of the fact that they are students, here to accept teaching from more educated persons than they. The University is not an equal tri-partite community, because the entire basis of the student-teacher relationship is an unequal one. The administration is part of that teaching apparatus.

Yet, the demonstrators want to pressure the administration into submitting to a set of immediate goals. The demonstrators are saying they know better what consitutes a good education than do their educators. Then what function should be reassigned to teachers and administrators?

Many students seem to be clamoring for a total democracy. But should the university situation be a total democracy? Or should we instead concede that an adult administrator with a doctorate degree might have an edge in wisdom and foresight over a nineteen year-old student. This is not to say that students should not have a large say in what their requirements and regulations should be, but rather asks if their voices should be equal to, or superior, to those who are supposed to be teaching us, to those who have more experience and wisdom.

No state university in the nation has made greater progress in the last five years than the University of Massachusetts. If nothing were being done, if this administration were dictatorial and stagnant, then mass discontentment might be in order. But records will clearly indicate that UMass is far more liberal than any state school in the East.

While our situation is far from ideal, what should be recognized is that we are progressing at a steady rate.

Is this then a protest against poor conditions or is it a display on the part of eighty frustrated students to gather mass support to remove the shackles of all authority, to find a devil?

Extra-legal methods become justifiable when all legitimate channels are exhausted. For example, Dick Gregory dramatically outlined the justification for the future violent course of the American Negro. But the eighty people involved Thursday did not begin to exhaust the legitimate channels open to them.

When one of the demonstrators was asked why he didn't join the Student Senate or at least attempt to work from the existing legitimate structures, his answer was, "Who's got time to spend twelve hours a week in the Senate?" If indeed the President is a phantom, is the fault with the President, who holds regular office hours, or is it the fault of students who, suddenly last Thursday when Dow was on campus, impulsively and promptly decided upon a myriad of faults in the University which had to be corrected immediately.

Is the atmosphere that has been created this week constructive—or rebellious and possibly contrary to what should be our goals. Did the dissenting students first try to understand what has been done and what is being done before they decided the only alternative left was extra-legal action.

A thoughtful re-examination on the part of each student at the University, regarding what should be his role as a student and what he should expect from his professors and administrators, should precede any sharp and hopefully constructive criticism tonight.

Draft Deferments Abolished for Some Grad Students

The Johnson Administration last Friday abolished deferments for most grad students effective this coming June.

The National Security Council with Pres. Johnson as chairman, suspended indefinitely the administrative basis for occupational deferments presently granted to about 170,000 men.

Grad students who had completed a year of grad study by last Oct. 2 will continue to be deferred for a total of 5 years including any years of grad study prior to Oct. 1, 1967.

Grad students in medicine and dentistry and allied fields of osteopathy, optometry, and veterinary medicine will continue to be deferred. About half of these students will eventually enter the special doctor's draft.

As the basis for deferment, local draft boards will retain the right to defer in the cases of community hardships.

Administration officials said they expected from 100,000 to 150,000 men to be drafted during the fiscal year 1969, beginning July 1. About 75,000 are expected to volunteer.

Those drafted will include June grads of four-year colleges, current first-year grad students and men who will receive their master's degree this June.

In congressional testimony earlier this week, Dr. Nathan M. Pusey, Pres. of Harvard Univ., contended "that the severe effect on the first two years of grad classes would create a two-year hiatus in the production of college teachers."

Pusey had suggested a draft system whereby each age group from 19 through 25 would provide a given proportion of men. White House sources said this proposal was rejected for two reasons. First, it would be unfair to draft registrants who would face increasing danger as they progressed through the age groups. Second, it would be unworkable for the nation's 4,100 local draft boards.

Pres. Lederle Says Deferments Will Have 'Destructive Impact'

By ALISSA GREENBERG
Staff Reporter

UM Pres. John W. Lederle said that the new national draft policy will have a "destructive impact" on higher education throughout the state, and that the new system "is not very fair" to students already in graduate study.

He also stated that "the flow of grad students is being broken and that Massachusetts needs all the Ph.D. and master's people it can turn out. I am afraid the results of the new draft policy will be detrimental to many areas other than the universities."

Grad School Dean Edward C. Moore stated that he expected that the new draft policy will result in a 25% reduction in the number of students attending grad school this fall.

The effect of the new draft policy on U M will be a decrease in the number of grad students teaching undergrad courses with the result that many classes will have to be doubled up or eliminated.

Both Dean Moore and Pres. Lederle are in the process of writing to organizations such as The Massachusetts Council of Education, The Council of Graduate Schools, and the Massachusetts Congressional Delegation in protest of the new policy.

Dean Moore stated that he favored a random selection of all those eligible for the draft between the ages of 19-26.

Trustees to Hear Opposition To Hi-Riser in Northeast Quad

By PAULA SWENSON
Staff Reporter

Today the trustees will hear the opposition of two student representatives from the Northeast Quadrangle Presidents' council with regard to the building of a 14-story dorm in the center of the quad's grassy area.

A plan for the construction of housing for approximately 1,400 students, a dorm with a 4-story base with 3 nine story towers arising from this base.

Carol Michelenko and Edward Bertucci, co-chairmen of the council's subcommittee on housing, will present a letter to the trustees containing statistics on high density living. The main purpose of this letter, according to Walter Silva, assistant Northeast Area Coordinator, is to present to the board of trustees an alternative—off-campus housing.

It was found that there is a higher flunk-out rate among Southwest Residential Area students, a high density living area, than there was in the other parts of the campus. In Southwest the flunk-our rate averaged 6.2% per 100 students, whereas in the Orchard Hill and the central-quad area combined representative of moderate and low density living respectively, the flunk-out rate was 4.6% per 100 students, according to Bertucci.

Damages in Southwest averaged about $1.96 per male student and in the Central and Quadrangle Areas about 33¢ per male student, and in Orchard Hill 69¢ per male student.

Plans for this dorm indicate that it must be ready for occupancy by the Fall of 1970. "Every consideration will be given to the views of the students," said board of trustees secretary Robert McCartney.

Open Meeting Format—

committee was formed to unify committee views for presentation. The ten topics were eventually decided upon during the heated speakers' committee meeting.

According to one student the student body at the University must "demand now what you want—not what the administration and the Massachusetts legislature think you want."

While disunity flared over the relative importance of open house, curriculum and the war, there was agreement on one point: A challenge of the administrative power structure.

One student stated that the Monday night meeting must "scare Lederle" with a "sufficient display of power."

Student Senate president James Collins countered that "Students must wield their power effectively. We must leave the administration a way out."

"Tonight's meeting will be opened by a student and students will follow in order discussing: the definition of a university, definition of student power, elimination of campus ties with "the military-industrial complex", open housing (the statement of fiat), freedom of choice in living off campus beginning in sophomore year, elimination of administrative rights of search and seizure, elimination of grading, revision of core curriculum requirements, and a statement of defiance. The faculty members and administrative officials will then be allowed to speak.

Two meetings are planned for the Curry Hicks Cage, one tonight at 7:30 and one at 2:00 Thursday to note administration reaction to ultimatum.

UMass to Hold Observation Of Engineers' Week Tomorrow

Dr. Hugh Miser, authority on operations and systems research, will be the speaker for a convocation to be held in observance of Engineer's Week at UMass tomorrow, in the Engineering Building East auditorium at 11:15 a.m.

Dr. Miser, Vice-President and Director of Environmental Systems Management Studies at the Travelers Research Center in Hartford, Connecticut, will speak on "Man and His Environment: An Engineering Opportunity." The theme of his speech will be that neither technology nor the social sciences can any longer work separately to solve the problems which face our society.

Dr. Miser has staffed and managed an interdisciplinary research program at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and in 1959-60, he established the new Operational Science Laboratory at the Research Triangle Institute at Durham, North Carolina. A founding member of the Operations Research Society of America, he has served as the organization's secretary, vice-president and president.

Dr. Miser received his B.A., and Ph.D. degrees in mathematics, and has published many classified and unclassified scientific papers both in mathematics and operations research. In the immediate post-war period, he was responsible for designing and operating an operations research program for the U.S. Air Force.

Communist China to Be Discussed At Great Decisions Symposium

"Upheaval in Communist China" will be the subject of the Great Decisions 1968 symposium tonight at 7:30 in Noah Webster House at UMass.

WFCR-FM (88.5 mg.) radio will broadcast the discussion of commentators Jean Grossholtz of Mount Holyoke's political science department, Franklin Houn of the UMass government department, and Ray Moore of Amherst's history department. Dr. Luther Allen of the UMass department of government will moderate the discussion.

Communist China is presently undergoing a "cultural revolution" within its own borders that is now in its second year. The Foreign Policy Magazine says that "the stakes are enormous."

"Whoever wins the struggle now raging in Communist China will command one-fourth of the world's people."

Peking's newspaper, the People's Daily, has made it quite plain that they want to "sieze power" on their march to superpower status, says the magazine.

The Great Decisions panel will evaluate and comment on the several aspects of this power struggle and the influence it is having on the Western world.

The program will be broadcast live from the lounge of Noah Webster House at 7:30 p.m. A question and discussion period will be taped by WFCR for rebroadcast at 11:30 the same night.

Members of the neighboring community are invited to participate in the discussion at Noah Webster House. Background material has been prepared by the Foreign Policy Association and is available in the dormitory's library.

Freshman Class Appoints Three Interim Officers

The Freshman class once again has its full slate of officers and class president Joe Tobacco said that class programs would be "moving ahead as planned".

Three interim officers were approved by the Freshman class executive council on Friday. The interim officers are: Betty Pugh, vice-president; Bonnie Jackson, secretary; and Ben Greenberg, treasurer.

Tobacco noted that both Greenberg and Miss Jackson had run for office in last October's election. All were members of the executive council.

The president also pointed out that the procedure for filling the positions was approved by the Student Senate and that the interim officers will not be able to call themselves incumbents in the April Class of '71 election.

The positions were vacated early this semester for academic reasons, according to Tobacco.

Tobacco said, "With the help of the Student Senate we are able to regain our class government to full capacity and will be able to proceed with full potential for the class."

The major program being scheduled is the Freshmen Weekend March 15 and 16. Tobacco said that the program would include a four-college mixer on Friday evening and a nightclub program in the ballroom on Saturday. The nightclub would be on a "Roaring Twenties" theme he said.

Senate Rejects—

tary of the Faculty Senate said "And here's the one you students really aren't going to like," when referring to one of the Senate's changes in the open house proposal.

Marcus agreed with Hartwell and discounted the notion of tripartite rule at UMass, "People on top are giving the orders and that's it." Marcus added, "We have been dealt with in bad faith by the Faculty Senate and we in turn have not adequately represented the students."

Senate President Jim Collins objected to by-passing the Faculty Senate on the grounds that it would defeat all the previous ground-work to the bill. Collins said, "We haven't reached the point yet where we have to discard existing channels. We should wait until after the open meeting and then go back to the Faculty Senate."

Collins also stressed that the faculty is often "the student's best friend" and suggested that the Senate attempt to build up its Faculty counterpart.

Senator Lee Gurwitz also stressed the theme of building the Faculty Senate into a valuable ally rather than alienating them with a bypass procedure.

A proposal by Senator Chris MaGahon that the by-pass motion be tabled until after the next Faculty Senate on March 2 was defeated and the Senate then approved a motion by Hartwell withdrawing the motion.

The Senate considered Marcus' motion to set a time limit of this Thursday on how long the students would wait for an answer. This was the final decision of the University Students Ad Hoc Committee that met in the Council Chambers just before the special session.

The committee, headed by Bart Kaplan, voted to declare open houses for all UMass beginning this Thursday regardless of the outcome of tomorrow's meeting. The committee is a result of the confrontation between University-policy protestors and administration that took place in the Union on Thursday.

The five hour sit down, which resulted in a calling of the open meeting tonight, began as a Dow Chemical protest and ended as a denouncement of University policies, specifically the open house rulings. The sit down led to the establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Earlier in the session the Senate voted its support of the open meeting tonight between students and administrators and pledged its support in getting as many students to attend as possible. The meeting is at 7:30 in the Cage.

NO MORE WAR

Whose War, Mr. Thieu?

On Monday, South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu said the war could end soon only if more United States troops were committed to the effort. The U.S. already has over half a million men in Vietnam.

Is this merely an expensive war game for the United States (whose losses approach 17,000 men) or is it a conflict for South Vietnam's freedom? Rather than an increase in Americans, the South Vietnamese Army should assume a larger burden of their own war, allowing a decrease in the United States' commitment.

If more fighting is called for, possibly the South Vietnamese soldiers who stop fighting at sundown each Friday (refusing to fight on weekends), should stay and help in their war: a seven-day war the Americans are fighting.

If a larger fighting force is needed, why should the United States supply additional troops? Eighteen and nineteen-year-old Americans are fighting South Vietnam's war while their counterparts in South Vietnam are exempt; South Vietnam's draft age is 24. Before President Thieu begins requesting more military aid, he should revaluate his own country's commitment.

Because America handed you the Presidency, Mr. Thieu, does not mean it will also hand you the country.

Whose war is it?

More importantly, whose country is it?

Housing Unit for Quad Needs Further Study Students Urge

Today the Board of Trustees is meeting with students who object to placing a new housing unit in the center of the North Quad. According to the Board's secretary, the Trustees will not make the final decision until after hearing these objections. We do not necessarily oppose the proposed site; but we endorse further investigation.

Although architects have made an intensive study of the site in the center of the Quad, we feel that two questions should be answered before the go-ahead is given on this site. Should the University continue with high density housing units — or should this decision to continue be made only after analysis of the Southwest experience? Secondly, should a high density housing unit be placed in the center of a low density living area ?

We also feel that greater consideration should be given to the alternative ideas — those suggesting other sites and those suggesting off-campus housing as a substitute.

Eighty - eight percent of the present Quad residents and the Student Senate, unanimously, oppose centering the complex approximately 30 to 40 feet from the other Quad dorms.

We commend the Board of Trustees for delaying their decision today. We hope, although the cost of the new housing unit for 1,400 students entering in the fall of 1970 by delay may increase, that the University will carefully consider the question of what kind of residence unit to build and where to place it. It seems the students have made this effort although they entered the discussion at a late date.

Landscapes

We have received a letter from a friend of ours, who wrote: "I've been reading a lot about Marcel Proust lately. Proust, you know, hated daylight. He used to sit in his room, with the curtains drawn, and would never let an ounce of light in if he could help it. He couldn't stand flowers, either, and once, when he sensed a flower in the hand of someone who was about to visit him, he rushed out on the landing and yelled, 'Get rid of that flower before you come up here!' Yet his novels, as you know, are filled with the most extensive, sensitive, descriptions of flowers, landscapes, and natural things in all literature."

Proust's youth involved the outside world alone. He went for long walks, absorbed the trees, flowers, and all of the "natural world" that he could, and loved the wind and the stars. But later, Proust discovered that the landscape of the outside world was ruefully transient, and that to hold the transient venerable was against the more live landscape of his mind. He set to build his world around himself alone. He sat in his study, in the midst of all his artworks, books, and papers, cutting off daylight and people, fashioning universes with his pen. The people were himself, the flowers eternal, and, although the relationships of his later years became purely subjective (our letter continues, "...the time when talk is useless, the day your wife dies..."), he was no worse off for it.

Proust used up a lot of paper, and, despite the fact that many of the ideas inscribed on his imagination never saw daylight ("I had hoped to suffer peacefully without writing a single letter. . You know perfectly well that I see nobody, that except for going to one soiree about which I told you, I have not seen a living human being for months..."), he was able to define himself having "reaped for myself a fairly abundant, at times quite sonorous harvest" in a letter just before his death.

Sam Spark Speaks Out

Behind Closed Doors

Assuming the tripartite concept of having students, faculty, and administration jointly making decisions on all aspects of campus life is realised, matters pertaining to the faculty may be discussed in the Student Senate. Imagine a future Student Senate discussing faculty office hours with the same irrefutable logic that the faculty used in discussing open houses.

PRESIDENT: Fellow students. The faculty has given me a recommendation for self-determination of office hours. The faculty feels that they alone should determine the number and frequency of their office hours. How does this Senate feel about that proposal? Yes. Senator A.

SENATOR A: That's ridiculous. Let's face it, if we pass this policy, then the faculty will start having office hours fifteen hours a day, seven days a week. Soon, they wouldn't have time to go to their own classes.

SENATOR B: And another thing, just how responsible is a 27 year old professor fresh out of grad school. Give him the temptation of unlimited office hours and he'll neglect all his other academic pursuits.

PRESIDENT: It is clear then, for the faculty's own good, we must restrict their number of office hours a month. But on another point, the faculty has suggested to me that they would prefer us to allow them to have their doors closed during an office hour. How do you students feel about this? Yes, Senator C.

SENATOR C: Doors closed? Let's not kid ourselves. We all know why they want their doors closed. The faculty at this University is a group of lechers. You've all seen how some of the male profs eye those girls in miniskirts.

SENATOR D: Senator C is right. Why, I like faculty as much as anyone else. As a matter of fact, some of my best friends are faculty. But do you realise what the temptation will be like if they get behind a closed door with a student of the opposite sex.

PRESIDENT: The consensus is clear. We must protect the faculty from one moment of intimacy that they may regret for the rest of their lives.

All the Senators agreed. So the students approved a measure to allow the faculty two office hours a week, with their doors left wide open. The Senators agreed these provisions were necessary to protect the integrity and general welfare of the faculty.

What Is the Quad's Future?

To the editor:

How many people actually know what's going on on this campus? While the Massachusetts Daily Collegian was covering the Napalm demonstration and the Faculty Senate's consideration of the Open House policy, another small, but determined group of students sat in the basement of Leach House and struggled to save the life of the Northeast Quadrangle.

The Quad, in two years, may not be what it is now. By the year 1970 it is proposed that the central area of the Quad be covered—not with grass and a pine tree for Christmas lights—but by a concrete structure, towering fourteen stories above the ground. This building is to be a dormitory, and its presence is rapidly becoming a reality to which residents of the Quad are going to have to adjust.

Residents of the Quad have protested that such a structure as this will completely eradicate the traditional spirit of the area. This dormitory is not to be a single tower of fourteen stories; it will consist of a basic four-story unit from which will rise three towers. Alterations which have been proposed to make this structure "fit in" with the remainder of the Quad are to slant the roofs on the units, and, as the dormitories in the Southwest Complex are constructed, to cover the structure with brick.

Many students may have heard about this proposal; many may have shrugged it off as a rumor. But it is not a rumor: the feasibility study has been drawn up, and is being considered now by the Board of Trustees for their approval. There is a strong possibility that in five months the center of the Quad may be nothing more than a grim pit reminding the residents of that area that Progress is made only through the destruction of Tradition.

Thanks

To the editor:

We wish to express our thanks to the organizers of the Student Demands Sit-Down. It opened our eyes to the need for personal morality. Our hearts hungered for a rebirth of responsibility. Had not the unwashed multitude taken their position in the Student Union, we would never have found the New Guard. Because of the disturbance in the building, we were forced to walk by the New Guard table. Upon seeing the clean-cut gentlemen flanked by the American Flag, we saw the light. The New Guard was there and fed our mind.

As I See It

The Last of the Pueblos

By J. GUIDO GRAIFF

In the past several weeks the U.S. has been getting itself into more trouble, but as a Conrad cartoon said "It could have been worse Mr. President, we could have lost the Pueblo to Iceland and the North Koreans could have captured four of our H-bombs." The bombs have supposedly been found, but the Pueblo incident lingers on. I was fortunate enough to get a contact to a secret government advisor in South Korea and question him on what the situation really is.

"Tell me Mr. XY&Z, the USS Pueblo has been accused of being in North Korean waters, is this true?"

"No, definitely not. We don't like to make waves."

"Well, what was it doing so close to North Korea?"

"It was fishing for crabs, for research on their environment. The Pueblo's an environmental research vessel you know."

"Come on now, who's going to believe the Pueblo was fishing for crabs?"

"Why our loyal American people. After all the U.S. is always right."

"Yes, so I've been told. Why did the North Koreans capture the Pueblo?"

"This can be answered in several different ways; first, the North Koreans have been itchy for a fight ever since we beat the snot out of them in '53, second, the North Koreans think the Pueblo was in their territory, crazy devils, and thirdly, it is a conspiracy with South Korea, so it can demand U.S. troops for protection, and if those demands aren't met, then South Korea pulls its troop out of South Vietnam."

"That's very interesting. I never thought of it that way. Why didn't the Pueblo retaliate when boarded?"

"The crew was too busy trying to blow up the Pueblo, no time to fight off intruders. If the crew did fight then we would be called aggressors. That we aren't."

"If the Pueblo wasn't a spy ship why did the crew try to blow it up?"

"Simple, we didn't want North Korea to capture the crab market, hell, it would ruin our economy."

"Do you think the U.N. will be able to find a solution to the crisis?"

"That's a difficult question to answer, the North Koreans are unpredictable, tricky devils. What's the U.N.?"

"United Nations."

"I thought that plan of President Wilson's was defeated?"

"That was the League of Nations."

"Oh?"

"What do you see in the future? A settlement I hope."

"I can't guarantee anything. I don't want to put myself in a spot. With the President calling up the reserves though, we're ready to blow the little devils off the earth if they mess around with us. Got to get back to my radio and tune in South Vietnam."

"South Vietnam!!?"

"All my info comes through S. Vietnam, got to get all the facts you know. Who says there's a credibility gap?"

"Are there any last statements you would like to make?"

"Yes, I would like to echo Secretary Rusk's forceful warning to North Korea. Cool it!"

Statement from James G. Collins

Thursday afternoon's sit-in illustrated how students who believe in numerous propositions, such as academic reform or the quest for more student rights, can be divided because some wore beards, some had three Greek letters sewn on a jackets, and others, notably some "student leaders," couldn't differentiate between rebellion and needed questioning. If such shallow criteria divide the student body this evening, concentration and dialogue on needed reform will take a second place to name-calling and narrowness of mind. Student unity must be complemented by a maturity of purpose by all in attendance.

Those who wish only to embarrass others and exhale thoughtless slogans should aid the University by their non-attendance at the meeting. Whether they be students, faculty, or administrators, such "mediators" or "leaders" should respect the intelligence of those present by neither seeking to pacify legitimate anger nor promoting demagogic excess.

The individual student, faculty, and administrator should demand honesty from himself and for all others this evening. I believe that a critical atmosphere will insure the success of our University meeting.

Summer Study in Japan Offered

Last week, posters went on campus announcing a summer session in Tokyo for undergraduates of UMass. The program is planned for 20 to 30 students. The class work will be offered at Sophia University "Jochi Gakain," the Catholic mission university. After courses are completed, there will be two weeks of study-travel to the Kyoto area, before the group flies home at the end of August.

SUMMER STUDY IN JAPAN — UMass will sponsor a summer study program in Japan this summer for undergraduates. For more information, see the posters around campus.

The group is scheduled to leave Oakland, Calif. on July 1. Students must make their own arrangements for getting to and from the West Coast; but the fee of $1300 covers all expenses for the intervening eight weeks of food, room, tuition, and travel. While Massachusetts students will comprise the majority of the group, an invitation has been extended to undergraduates of the other Five College group. The leaders of the group will be Mr. and Mrs. Walter Silva. Both they and Prof. Varley can supply further information.

All class work will be taught in English. All students will be expected to take two courses, for the core of the program is academic, and upon this understanding is the sponsorship of the Council on International Educational Exchange and the Japan Society of New York made possible. Thirteen courses will be offered, four in Japanese Language and Literature, four comparative courses on history, government, sociology and religion of the East, two on contemporary Japanese arts and culture and three surveys of India, China, and Japanese Economics.

Besides giving these courses, Sophia will accommodate students in dormitories and dining rooms, and offer each week-end day trips to Tokyo's industries, craft centers, theatres and museums.

Following the five weeks of class work, there will be a two week study-travel tour by bus and train into the Kansai area: Nara, Kyoto, and Wakayama. Most of the accommodations will be in Japanese inns, and for this as well as earlier Mr. and Mrs. Silva will serve as directors.

Communist Assault Eases Across South Vietnam

SAIGON (AP)—The Communist second-wave assault, a series of rocket and mortar barrages on Saigon and 46 other cities and military installations across South Vietnam, eased Sunday and field reports indicated it lacked the manpower and punch of the Jan. 31 lunar New Year offensive.

The shelling was followed by ground attacks in a few places and the operations chief at Gen. William C. Westmoreland's headquarters said the enemy's "intentions are not clear at this point."

There was some sharp fighting in the Saigon area and U.S. paratroopers were rushed to the provincial capital of Phan Thiet, on the coast 90 miles east of Saigon, to battle 500 guerrillas who shot their way into the town and seized the hospital and jail, releasing about 500 prisoners.

The jail was reported retaken and some of the prisoners captured, but the guerrillas still held the hospital.

Lt. Col. Malcolm A. Sussel of Monterey, Calif., Westmoreland's operations chief, noted that in most cases the Communists did not follow up with ground attacks as in the lunar new year offensive when an estimated 60,000 Communist troops swept into 35 urban centers.

The shellings are "a manpower saving device," he said. "This is an economic way to do something without a significant loss of life on their part," According to U.S. count, the Communists lost more than 30,000 dead since their biggest offensive opened Jan. 31.

Westmoreland's headquarters said in a communique, "This second Communist offensive appeared to be enemy retaliation for the failure of the Vietnamese people to rally to their cause during the recent Tet lunar new year offensive."

Incomplete reports from headquarters listed six Americans killed and 190 wounded in Sunday's precision rocket and mortar barrages that hit at least half a dozen American airfields, including the major bases at Tan Son Nhut in Saigon and Blein Hoa 18 miles north of the capital.

At least six American planes, including four F4C Phantom fighter-bombers, were destroyed and the loss of planes was estimated at $14 million.

Angel Flight to Hold Two Days of Rushing

Angel Flight, a service and social organization of girls, began its rush period last night in Dickinson.

With its objective to assist AFROTC, and to aid the cause of the Air Force, the United States, and UMass, the Flight has initiated several new awards presented annually to its members. These include an engraved charm given to the girl who best exemplifies the qualities for which the Flight stands. This award was last given to Jann Perkins. Another such award was given to Cheryl Bogle, a senior, for her morale-boosting efforts.

Angel Flight annually sponsors the Best Dressed Girl on Campus award, and adds a feminine touch to football games by ushering and working in concession booths.

Rush tonight will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union from 7-9 p.m. Tomorrow night it will be held at Dickinson Hall at the same time.

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—The old bromide, "Shave and a haircut—two bits," was a fresh saying when Carmeno Melo broke into the barbering business 73 years ago.

Actually, the price was 25¢ for a haircut and a nickel extra for a shave, says Melo, who still operates his own shop from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. daily.

"As long as I'm able to work, I will. It keeps me going and gives me something to do," he explains.

Gymnasts Edged, 174.55-172.80

Failing to gain a top finish in the final event, the UMass gymnastics team was edged by the Naval Academy team 174.55-172.80 at the Cage, Saturday.

The meet, the closest of the year for UMass, was witnessed by a shivering crowd of about 1000. They saw an exciting battle that went down to the last event.

UMass took a quick lead when in the floor exercises, Dick DelGallo took first place with a score of 8.9. Joe Godwin of UMass tied for second with an 8.7 score, giving the Redmen a scant .15 lead.

This advantage was quickly lost as Navy took a four point lead out of the next event, the side horse, by winning the first two places. The best UMass could muster was a third place finish by Bob Leclair. Jay Long of Navy was the winner with a 9.2, and is the favorite for eastern honors.

UMass bounced back into the lead as the team took the first three places in the rings. DelGallo was the winner with a 9.0 score, Joe Reed was second, scoring 8.9 and Dave March was third. Only one-tenth of a point separated the teams after this event.

Navy took over again, however, as the Middies took first and third in the trampoline. Mike Kasavana took second for UMass with an 8.5, while Toby Kasavana and Tom Adams tied for fourth. Navy further increased its lead in the long horse as it took the top two positions. Reed of UMass was able to salvage a third place as he scored a 9.0.

UMass brought itself back into the thick of things as it swept the top three spots in the parallel bars competition. Steve Brown, with his season high of 9.1, took first place, with Reed second and March third. Thus going into the last event, the high bar, Navy held a scant 148.50-148.15 lead.

Redmen hopes went out the window as the Midshipmen took the top three positions, Craig Steidle leading the pack. The best UMass could do was a fourth by Reed and a fifth for Brown.

It was a heartbreaker for UMass to lose as they were coming off the biggest win of the season, its victory over Springfield. Springfield is now in third place in the Eastern League, its season complete with a 4-3 record. UMass and Navy are both 3-3. The Redmen meet Syracuse, this Saturday in New York while the Middies face Army. A win by each would result in a three team deadlock for third place, setting the stage for the key confrontation in the Eastern Meet.

Little Redmen Stage Comeback, But Lose to UConn, 79-72

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Day Editor

STORRS, CONN.—Fighting a rash of fouls and a cold first half, the UMass freshman basketball team was downed by the Connecticut frosh, 79-72, here Saturday night. The loss, the second in a row for UMass, dropped the Little Redmen's record to 8-6, while raising the Huskies' mark to 3-5.

Despite the handicaps mentioned, however, the UMass team very nearly pulled this one out. Going into the second half trailing by 15, 48-33, the Little Redmen proceeded to methodically cut the big deficit to shreds.

After an early period of trading points in the second half, the Little Redmen began the long road back. Starting at 13:47, they proceeded to run seven points on field goals by Tom Nally, Jim Ryan and Ken Mathias, plus a foul shot by Mathias, one of the mere eight converted by UMass in the game.

UConn then jumped back to a nine point, 61-52 lead. However, the Little Redmen picked up six quick points, on two buckets by Nally and one by Mathias, while the Huskies could only muster one free throw, as they led by only four 62-58, with 9:08 remaining in the contest.

Both teams traded baskets for the next five minutes, until Nally and Mathias hit two quick hoops to tie up the proceedings 68-68 with only 2:34 remaining, capping a long uphill struggle. However, all then went down the drain.

A three point play by UConn's Karl Augenstein at 2:13 sent the Huskies back up by three. Mathias came right back with a field goal. This was the last volley by the Little Redmen. The all-court harrying that UMass utilized throughout the half backfired as UConn became the recipients of five foul shot attempts they converted, and the Little Redmen never had the time to recover.

The less said about the first half the better. UConn, aided no end by repeated foul line appearances, jumped off early in the half to a lead, the team ultimately never lost. The Huskies, led by Augenstein and Ron Hrubala were also hitting well from outside.

UMass, meanwhile, hampered by early fouls to Frank Schaffeld and Ryan, could never get untracked. The Little Redmen had several defensive lapses that resulted in numerous UConn baskets, while also committing a large number of turnovers, playing a shoddy floor game.

Mathias led all scorers with another great performance, scoring 29 points. Nally, supported him with his third straight double figure performance, scoring 16 while Ryan chipped in with 12.

UConn, meanwhile featured a well-balanced attack that saw five Huskies hitting double figures. Guard Bob Boyd, who did the bulk of his scoring in the second half, led the UConn frosh with 19, Dave Yager, converting 12 of 13 foul shots had 16 points, while Hrubala had 15, Lou Glazer 14, and Augenstein had 11. This balanced display, however impressive it seems, could never have been accomplishd without a wide 33-8 edge the Huskies enjoyed on the foul line.

Redmen Enjoy an Historic Triumph

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

STORRS, Conn.—At 9:29 on Saturday night the Storrs Field House was quiet. High over the fleeing crowd was a big scoreboard displaying three green zeroes and, in blazing orange, a score of UMass 56, UConn 44. In a year which saw the two Yankee Conference teams fighting for second place the score could hardly be termed an upset; but it was.

Storrs had been a Redman graveyard for more than 32 years. The place has rabid fans, lousy hot dogs, a sweet sounding pep band and seven of the prettiest girls to be assembled under one roof anywhere. It holds noise amazingly well, sort of like a transitor radio playing insIde a mailbox.

The bus ride down was a torture chamber. It may well have been the same bus that rode the 1936 Redmen to that last win in Storrs. In fact it was probably an MBTA reject. There was no heat and everyone had a case of numb feet by the time it pulled into Storrs.

After getting into the locker room, everybody took their shoes off and thawed out their feet on the forced air registers. The mood soon turned to quiet confidence for the task of beating UConn.

Out in the stands a win was anticipated. After all, UConn hadn't lost to the Redmen in a generation, and there was no reason to expect It to happen this year. "Sure," the concensus was, "they beat us in Amherst, but that was luck." "After all" as George Ehrlich, the voice of the Huskies noted, "the lighting was bad."

Friends were congratulating Burr Carlson on the expected win. He was having none of it. He saw the UMass-Holy Cross game, and he knew he was against an improved edition of the club that had beaten him in Amherst. He wore a worried frown.

He was an excellent prophet. After John III, a handsome three year old Husky, led his unit out on the floor, the Redmen demolished them. The nine point spree put them in front, they faltered briefly in the second half, but regained the touch to win going away.

After the game it was bedlam going into the locker room. Everybody was swigging cokes and chomping on oranges. A miniversion of the Impossible Dream" had been accomplished. A few of the players hurried so they could talk to their parents before boarding the bus for Amherst.

The bus ride back was bedlam. Dick Starslak started the festivities by noting that he had made a key steal. This prompted an impromptu rendition of "Starsiak Stole the Ball." "Peter Gayeska wants to grab Starsiak. He hugs him! He squeezes Dick Starsiak! Starsiak saved this ball game! Eelieve that! The Redmen win it 56-44.")

Soon players are swapping stories in the back while Jack Leaman sat up front savoring a most gratifying victory. The bus was even colder than going down, but nobody noticed. They chided the driver to hasten, but it was all in fun. They won an important game. They were too happy to notice it was cold.

All Swimmers Win Over Holy Cross

WORCESTER — Varsity and Freshman Swimmers evened their records, with impressive victories over Holy Cross here Saturday.

The varsity, winning 61-34, starred the record-breaking performance of Heathen Donoghue, who swam the 200 yd. butterfly in 2:22.1, breaking the old record by more than two seconds.

Also displaying great strength was sophomore Al Northup, who tied the 200 yd. breaststroke record of 2:28.0. Al swam also in the medlay relay, which misseed that record by five-tenths of a second.

Captain Bob Asquith lent his talented versitility to the two winning relays, along with another great performer, Flip Morton.

Ken Nowak, the senior standout, was a double winner in the 50 yard freestyle and the 200 yard backstroke. Mark Miller, a sophomore, also won two events, the 100 and 200 yard freestyle.

"Diver Dave" Larson continued his winning ways on the board, and seems destined to substantially improve his fifth place standings in the New England Championships.

Considering the size of their squad, the freshman team deserve their laurals as well.

Moagus Lynch, not only won two individual events, the 200 and 500 yd. freestyle, but also came back to anchor the winning freestyle relay. Lynch appears to be one of a long line of Coach Rogers' "Tiger Swimmers."

Dick Vogel, in a surprising race, swam his fastest time, and won the 100 yd. freestyle. Pat McCarthy, who delights in jumping the gun, easily won his 100 yd. backstroke. Jim Kaveney took first in the 100 yd. breaststroke and a close second in the 200 yard individual medley.

Ed Jazab contributed his efforts in the winning medley and freestyle relays. He also took second in the 50 yard freestyle.

Wednesday, the Varsity will compete against Coast Guard Academy in New London. Saturday at 2:00, both teams will host the Univ. of Connecticut.

UMass Ends 32-Year Storrs Jinx, 56-44

RedmenDefeatUConnFive, Take Over Second in Conf.

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

STORRS, Conn.—A 32 year jinx was broken by a determined band of UMass Redmen when they downed UConn, 56-44, in a Yankee Conference basketball game at Storrs Field House. This win gave UMass undisputed possession of second place in the conference and keeps alive their title hopes.

The first half was an all around display of poor shooting by both teams. After four and a half minutes the only scoring was accomplished on matching lay-ups by Bill Corley and Peter Gayeska, and a free throw by Jack Melen. Both teams were missing with unbelievable regularity. It was so bad that one fan pleaded, "Would somebody please score."

The Redmen then granted his wish. In a span of 79 seconds they ran nine points to grab an 11-3 lead. Billy Tindall converted from the outside, and moments later drove for a three-pointer. Joe DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook quickly contributed outside buckets, and UMass had a lead they never relinquished.

The rest of the half was played on even terms. The UMass lead fluctuated between six and 10 points. At intermission it was nine, 25-16. The only Redman in foul trouble was Gayeska with three. He had been doing an excellent job on Corley who led UConn scoring with eight points, and 11 rebounds. Tindall paced UMass with nine points and nine caroms.

After intermission the contest moved along uneventfully until the 13:43 mark when, with the Redmen leading 32-22, Gayeska was slapped with his fourth personal. At this juncture the UConn fans picked up and the Huskies took charge. In the next three minutes, with sub Sandy Fishman sparking them, UConn outscored UMass 9-3 to cut the lead to 35-32.

They never could get closer. After two Ellerbrook free throws were matched by a Tim Smith field goal the Huskies went stone cold. They didn't score for almost five minutes. During the UConn famine, Tindall managed a pair of buckets from underneath while Ellerbrook hit one from the corner. With 4:56 to play UMass had the lead back to nine, 43-34.

Two minutes later the win was iced. Ellerbrook hit from the corner, Gasperack converted a charity toss, and Ellerbrook, shooting off balance and over the everpresent Corley, swished one from the lane to give the Redmen an insurmountable lead, 48-36. The remaining 3:19 turned into a free throw shooting contest as the Redmen savored the sight of the Connecticut faithful walking out.

Ellerbrook led the scoring with 20. Tindall had 19 as did UConn's Bill Corley. Gayeska was the only other man in double figures with 10. Corley led the rebounders with 21 while Tindall and Gasperack paced the Redmen with 14 and 10 respectively. DiSarcina played his usual fine game, continually harassing the Huskies into making bad passes that were forcing hurried perimeter shots.

UConn shot a frigid 22.7% from the floor for the game, an unbelievably poor 17.6% for the first half. The Redmen shot a mediocre 32.8% for the evening. The Redmen outrebounded the Huskies 61-53. Corley was blocking shots with alarming regularity. He looked like Bill Russell with a tennis racquet.

Redmen Rantings — UMass coach Jack Leaman wore an ear to ear smile in the locker room. "We got tough games out of all our starters," he remarked. He also added, "I wish we could have shot a little better, but I'll take this win any time."

UConn mentor Burr Carlson dejectedly shook his head in the trainer's room. "We just couldn't buy a hoop," he moaned. After looking at the final statistics he noted, "It wasn't that UMass was that good, although they certainly deserved to win, we were just plain awful." He then tabbed Tindall as the key of the win.

A crowd of 3,842 viewed the contest. On one occasion they were momentarily silenced by a DiSarcina steal. On another occasion they saw the two officials contradict each other. DiSarcina and John Crisp collided. Charlie Diehl called blocking on Crisp while Jerry Loeber called charging on DiSarcina. Both fouls were recorded, and a jump ball ensued.

A span of 11,722 days was sandwiched between the last Redmen win at Storrs and Saturday night. Maybe it was because the Redmen received a break from the officials. The Redmen took 30 foul shots, while UConn had 22.

Smith and Malan had 11 points between them, while in Amherst they had 39. Carson promised that UConn would down URI if the Redmen could turn the trick. The two rivals meet at Storrs on March 2.

Frosh Hockey Team Rolls

By KEN SCHWARTZ

Led by linemates Ed and Paul Riley, the UMass freshmen sextet decisively beat the Holy Cross freshmen, 8-0, Saturday afternoon at Orr Rink.

The scoring opened at 2:52 of the first period when Ed White rebounded a shot by the Crusader goalie. The Little Redmen continued to dominate play in the period and at 6:46 Paul Riley scored what turned out to be the prettiest goal of the game. While on a two on one break Paul was sent in alone by Ed Riley and made a nifty move before firing the puck into the upper right corner of the net. Before the period had ended McCready in the Holy Cross goal was forced to turn back 14 shots.

The second period was marred by 7 minor penalties between the two teams, but saw UMass lengthen their lead to 4-0. Mike Fallon scored on a pass from Kevin Comer at 12:30 and Ed Reilly scored an unassisted goal with just one minute left in the period.

In the next stanza Ed Reilly opened the scoring with his second goal of the game which came unassisted after just 20 seconds had elapsed. 31 seconds later Mike Murray scored from Comer and Paul Riley. This brought the score to 6-0 and the Redmen, who were never really in trouble, were breathing easy. The final two UMass goals were scored by Tom Peters, with Murray assisting.

UMass goalie Larry Walsh was only called on to make 8 saves in the game which was indicative of the Redmen domination. The win brought the freshmen record to 3 wins, 3 losses, and 1 tie. They have only lost one game in 1968 and will have a chance to avenge that loss against Salem State tonight at 6:15 at the Orr Rink.

Three early third period goals sparked the UMass hockey team to a convincing 8-4 triumph over Holy Cross Saturday afternoon at Orr Rink before a few hundred fans.

The UMass goals started off what proved to be a wild and wooly scoring session. Before the final period was over, eight goals had been scored, five by the Redmen and three by the Crusaders.

Leading 3-1 going into the last canto, the Redmen increased their lead to three goals as Billy Fallon let go a short backhander that was partially stopped by the Holy Cross goalie but trickled into the corner of the cage.

50 seconds later, Charlie Hanifan scored what proved to be the winning goal on a 20 foot wrist shot from the left boards. Bill McMann added to the UMass margin just a little more than a minute later when his soft shot eluded Crusader goalie Bob Johnson.

Bill Butler led a Holy Cross comeback bid with two goals 17 seconds apart to narrow the margin to 6-3 in favor of the Redmen. All five of these goals came within the first five minutes of the final period.

Doug Powling erased the comeback attempt by the Crusaders when his blue line slap shot found the cage after threading through several players standing in front of the net.

Jeff Sanborn tallied the final UMass goal during a power play sliding a 15 footer into the corner of the net at 13:31. Larry Murphy was credited with the final Holy Cross tally when his shot deflected past Scoville off defenseman Dave Goldberg's skates.

UMass had jumped off to a quick 2-0 lead by the end of the first period. Greg Stone put the Redmen on the scoreboard when he picked up a loose puck and put it in the left corner of the net from about 15 feet out.

Frank Buckler picked up the second Redmen score as he batted home a rebound of a Jeff Sanborn shot less than a minute after Stone's goal.

UMass goalie Pete Scoville was outstanding during the opening period, particularly in the last minute when he made a diving glove save and a few seconds later did the splits to kick out a deflected shot.

Jeff Sanborn put the Redmen up by a 3-0 count early in the second period when he skated past a defenseman and sent a short backhander into the cage at the 50 second mark.

Murphy tallied the first Crusader goal when he sailed in all alone on Scoville and slipped the puck between his pads at 7.53. UMass was shorthanded at the time with Mike Coyne in the penalty box.

Late in the period, Vic Schlitzer of the Crusaders was assessed a penalty and the Redmen put on a fine passing display around the Holy Cross net but were not able to put the puck past Johnson.

The win broke a five game losing streak for the Redmen bringing their record to 4-12 while Holy Cross fell to a 11-6 card. The victory for the Redmen was their first in 1968.

BLUELINE BANTER

The work of the referees was either team as many penalties were called . . . the officials seemed to want to keep a tight check on the game . . . In all, there were sixteen penalties, fifteen minors and one misconduct . . . Holy Cross defenseman Mike Quinn drew the misconduct late in the game.

Charlie Hanifan picked up a interference call late in the final period when he kicked a stick away from a Crusader player . . . UMass had seven of the minors while Holy Cross had eight.

Jeff Sanborn with two goals and an assist, Charlie Hanifan with a goal and two assists, Frank Buckler with a goal and two assists, and Doug Powling with a goal and two assists led the balanced attack. Larry Murphy and Bill Butler had a pair of goals each for the Crusaders.

The Redmen will take on Amherst College this Wednesday in a road game to be played at Orr rink starting at 7.

Matmen Are Shut Out, 51-0

By BOB LUMADUE

National College Athletic Association Wrestling Champions Wilkes College from Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania hardly broke a sweat at Curry Hicks Cage Saturday afternoon with the Redmen Varsity winning, 51-0, as they tuned up for their big match this week with East Stroudsburg State.

Friday night the Wilkes team had defeated UConn 44-2, and every man wanted a pin against UMass. The meet was an obvious mismatch as nine of the Redmen were pinned. However, Coach Homer Barr feels that some beefing up of the schedule must be done if wrestling is to get better at UMass.

Wilkes College won six medals in the NCAA's last year with only a sophomore team, and will be highly favored to place high again this year at Mankato State.

At 115 lbs. Billy Goodwin was pinned by A. Matviak in 3:35, while at 123 lbs. Dave Wade was pinned by B. Harris in 3:49. In the 130 lb. class Paul Pearl was pinned by J. Marfia in 3:37, and at 137 lbs. Eugene Paltrineri suffered his first defeat, losing a 13-3 decision to G. Cruse.

At 145 lbs. Brian Urquhart lost a 4-0 decision to J. McCormick, followed at 152 lbs. by Fred Fitzpatrick being pinned in 1:22 by D. Verzeka. At 160 lbs. Allan Sgroi was pinned by G. Willets in 1:22, as at 167 lbs. was Parker Simonds by J. Wiendl in 1:09.

The rout continued at 177 lbs. as Ernie Smith was pinned in 5:57 by D. Cook, Wilkes Captain, and at 191 lbs. Dick Gnatek was pinned in 5:58 by B. Gold.

In unlimited Glenn Cummins was pinned by R. Fritts in 3:53.

The next home meet will be with Dartmouth Wednesday night at Boyden Auxiliary Gymn.

3000 Attend Open Meeting at Curry Hicks; Thursday Ultimatum Given to Administration

By BILL DICKINSON
Staff Reporter

A gathering of nearly 3,000 students in the Cage last night heard nine speakers denounce University policy and heard the Administration defend and reply to the complaints.

What began last Thursday with a spontaneous sit-down in the Student Union wound up last night with a confrontation between a vocal minority backed by a strong cheering section.

The meeting which was billed as a "student power" movement began shortly before 8 p.m. with the arrival of the Administration and finally disbanded at 10:45 p.m. The meeting which was declared by the Administration to be formerly over by 9:30, continued with spontaneous discussion after the administrators left.

Nearly 3000 people attended last night's open meeting. A large number of faculty members were seen in the audience.

Dr. Mark Noffsinger, dean of students, opened the meeting with the reminder to the audience that the meeting represented a "tremendous responsibility and a superb opportunity."

There is a chance, he went on to say, "to bring credit to each individual here and to our university."

Noffsinger then stated that "without ground rules and order there will be no continuation of this meeting." The rules he submitted were that statements would first be made by the student speakers on the platform and then answered by the administrators present. Both questions and answers would be limited to three minutes. There were nine student speakers.

Noffsinger introduced President John W. Lederle, Provost Oswald Tippo, Dean William Field, Dean Edward Moore, and Prof. Joseph Marcus. Marcus was the moderator.

Marcus opened by stating that "this community is presumably made up of rational people." He went on to request order and said that the meeting would be opened up after the responses from the platform. He indicated that this would "hopefully start a discussion."

Definition of University

Helen Sullinger was the first speaker. She drew laughter from the audience with her remark that she was "speaking on the nature of the University and its role in society — in three minutes." She went on to say that "the University is a reflection of society" and that "society is and always will be, composed of haves and have-nots." She gave her definition of the University as it should be: "The University should be the prophet of society." This drew loud applause from the assembled group.

Miss Sullinger further stated that the University "should not be subject to outside forces — political or business . . . We as students should begin to educate our educators . . . so that the University can take its place as a prophet not a reflection of society."

President Lederle chose to comment on her statements. He began by reading Webster's definition of a university, and when he finished, he said "This gets us absolutely nowhere."

Lederle went on to explain that many people—"taxpayers, legislators, alumni — all have ideas on what the university should be . . . there is an uneasy balance that is always in flux. I would suggest that any social institution is bound to reflect society somewhat.

JOHN SEIGAL

"We do not want to straightjacket anyone," he declared. "I hope out of this discussion tonight will come a community," he said in closing.

Student Power Definition

Richard Marcus, a student, followed with his definition of "student power." He indicated that the decision makers were there because "we, the students, told them to come meet with us." He went on to say that the success of the University rests on maintaining order. "They (the administration) don't want you thinking."

Marcus finished by saying "you're not giving power to this committee, your giving power to yourself. Make use of it."

President Lederle answered Marcus' remarks saying, "The administration is not 'anti-student.! The purpose is to create an atmosphere in which students can develop as individuals."

He then reprimanded Marcus: "Don't try to create an artificial cleavage between the administration and the student body."

"Students Are Niggers"

Bob Wilfong, a long time member of University reform committees, took the stand next on the question of the program for the future and addressed himself to the statement "students are niggers," which he made Thursday.

Wilfong said, "The term niggers does not refer to color but to the quality of a person's status. It is a sub-human quality with no rights and privileges,

Faculty, Students Agree Change Is Long Overdue

By MARK SILVERMAN
Staff Reporter

Faculty members and students shared the same emotions and expectations of the open meeting in the cage last night.

The faculty view can be generalized by a statement attributed to one History Professor. "This is a good thing. Unfortunately, it did have to be initiated through pressure, and not through the administration. This meeting is certainly needed."

Another professor added, "Order and reason must be present. Unfortunately they weren't Thursday night. However, I do believe that if this thing (meeting) is continued in a reasonable manner, Thursday night will have been well worth its disorder."

Judging from the reactions of faculty members to the speakers, they appeared to sympathize with the demonstrators and with their basic goals. They were not opposed to major changes, and in fact felt that the proposed changes were long

In an unofficial MDC survey of 845 students yesterday, 501 said they would not attend last night's open meeting, and 344 students said they would attend. Those planning to attend were mostly underclassmen, while those planning not to attend were mostly upperclassmen. 3000 students and faculty attended the meeting last night.

Trustees Hear Reports On Med School, Hi-Riser

By RICHARD S. KLINE
News Editor

The UMass Board of Trustees, meeting yesterday in Whitmore Hall, heard student opposition to the proposed hi-rise dorm in the Northeast Quadrangle, listened to reports by University President John W. Lederle and on the progress of the Medical School in Worcester, and voted on the Trustee officers for the next year.

President Lederle reported to the policy makers that, 'Last Thursday we had on our campus what has been going on on many campuses . . . picketing. There is a minority of students, I think maybe even a majority, that think the University can be improved."

He said also that he was looking forward to last night's open meeting with students and hoped that, not only would he gain a better knowledge of student problems, but that the students would gain a better perspective of University problems.

Medical School Dean Lamar Soutter reported to the Board, that much progress was being made on the school and that the last talk that he had with the people in Washington last Friday. He stated that the progress is thought to be "on the track and moving ahead well." He added that it "looks as if it will be approved in June."

Presenting the student case against the building of a high-rise 14-story dorm in the Northeast Quadrangle was Carol Michelenko and Edward Bertucci, co-chairmen of the Northeast Quadrangle President's council subcommittee on housing and Fran Boronski, Vice-President of the Student Senate.

Senate President Collins Issues Statement After Monday's Meeting

By JAMES COLLINS, President
Student Senate

Last Thursday I advised President Lederle to hold an open meeting in order to discuss University concerns. Critical dialogue is, in my mind, never out of order. It is never to be feared. Last evening's proceedings, while initially producing honest comments between faculty, students, and administrators, ended as an insult to both one's intelligence and sense of honor.

Initial points relating to visiting privileges in the residence halls, revamping of the grading system, and present faults with the student government were valid and worthy of comment. However, purely inciting statements categorically denouncing student counselors as policemen who searched rooms at and for their pleasure, protesting the presence of CIA agents in the classroom, and citing widescale tapping of students' phones were untrue and more suitable to a Peking "hate" Russia rally.

The Student Senate was deemed complacent. While the Senate has numerous faults, it makes no pretensions of possessing complete truth or perfection. A democratic assembly, specially structured to allow one student one vote, with no special blocks of power, the Senate is, in the final analysis, as good as the students make it. If the student government has a saving grace, it is that it is capable of change. A few minutes of serious thought on how to make all student government, whether House, Senate, or judicial in nature more productive, would be far more worthwhile than demagogic speeches concerning student power. Lest the students be tyrannized by the very force they wish to engender, power must be utilized reasonably and honestly.

The deadline presented to President Lederle to "come across" with student demands was shortsighted and will ultimately decrease the power of the students. Since the existing methods agreed upon by students, faculty and administrators of attaining change at the University have not been expended and since administrative and faculty groups have to this point acted in good faith, no deadline will be recognized. An empty threat will merely fractionalize student unity. A distinction exists between Ghandian "civil disobedience" and blackmail. Lederle was presented with the latter, and should stand firm in refusing to have the University so intimidated.

The eighty people who sat-in last Thursday were sincerely concerned with the University. Such a pressure group should, theoretically, have the whole student body in its membership. A student legislature, whatever its structure, must be completed by an interested and vocal electorate. I do not believe that the group representing concerns last night left with any more followers than when they came to the Cage. Until planned and intelligent preparation precedes such open meetings, such groups should never receive the support of the student body. Until such preparation is attained, "madness without method" will cripple viable student power.

and as long as we stay students we will always be niggers."

Continuing he enumerated various living conditions on campus that he said contributed to the "nigger" quality of students. Specifically he said, "Because niggers can't learn, this means that this is not a University. This is a plantation, but we want a chance for learning and we want a University, now."

Wilfong called for mutual respect by and for all members of the campus community and stressed that "a lot of money is not needed for a good University."

"We don't have to beg the legislature for money. All we need is a few shacks to keep out the cold and people who are willing to teach and willing to learn."

Replying to Wilfong's idea Dean Edward C. Moore, of the graduate school said, "When I was a 'nigger' things were a lot worse." Dean Moore enumerated problems that existed when he was a student. He said that dorms, food and legislative problems were a lot worse.

Dean Moore said that times have changed, "the academic atmosphere is much better than it has ever been."

He said, "We are here as a community of learning and I think all of us have learned a great deal from this experience and I hope to learn more as the evening progresses."

Dorm Restrictions

John Siegal, one of the most popular speakers of the evening, took the stand and in a free and easy manner called for an abolishment of the second-class citizenship of the students.

"The difference between high school and college is that in college the words 'men's' and 'women's' are used on the rest room doors, instead of 'boys' and 'girls.' But it is dangerous to infer anything from rest room walls."

He said that the University's policy of declaring extracurricular activities as part of the educational process is used as a lever for controlling social life.

"They (the administration) still think they are dealing with a campus of 15,000 virgins or 7,000 virgins," he said.

Siegal received loud rounds of applause for his stand on open houses and student's rights. He listed the following demands that he wanted University action on:

1. Dorms offered on a competitive basis with off campus housing.
2. Dorms on a monthly rental basis so that students can get out when they want to.
3. Open house policy determined by the dorms.
4. Rights or tenants should be protected.
5. Removal of active spies like counselors and house mothers.
6. Meal tickets on a monthly or weekly basis.

Siegal reasoned that "If the cafeteria managers know they have to keep students coming back he'll think twice before he serves mystery meat."

7. Rules regulating dorm conduct have to go.

Open Houses

Bart Kaplan, graduate student, editor of the Mother of Voices and one of the leaders of last night's program then took the mike and addressed himself to the specific plans for the open house demands.

Kaplan said that the individual must be governed by his own morality and it can not be legislated.

"What effects the individual is a private decision and should be his alone," Kaplan said.

Presenting his ultimatum to the Administration, Kaplan called for action on the open house proposal by 2 p.m. on Thursday. Kaplan called for widespread disobedience of the open housing restrictions if nothing is done by that time.

President Lederle responded to the previous statements by Kaplan, by saying that "there are many things that Mr. Kaplan does not understand, that we have procedures for consultation at the University . . . they have not been fully used."

"Until last Thursday," said the president "these procedures have been functioning." He then stated that if students proceed "unilaterally" to make their own rules, there "will be serious repercussions."

Search and Seizure

Larry Mazel spoke next on "search and seizure." "Every one knows that the University condones this" he said regarding the alleged searching of students' rooms. He went on to cite that "counselors, members of student government and heads of residences" all have master keys.

Mazel hit the "unethical administration" and then turned to the subject of supposed informants on campus and said "We will not be informed on anymore; we will not have our phones tapped." A large minority of the audience applauded wildly. Mazel finished by saying, "We now accept the responsibility that the University has denied us."

Mazel was answered by Dean Field who said in regard to Mazel's charges of phone tapping, "Although rumors are hard to scotch . . . I have a written guarantee from New England Tel. and Tel. that no phone at the University has been tapped." He did, however, note one exception, where a student had received obscene phone calls.

In regard to the question of master keys, Field indicated displeasure that there are a large number of master keys. But he said, "they are to open rooms for those who lock themselves out." Loud applause followed this statement.

In answer to charges of illegal searches of students' rooms by "any counselor or head of residence," he said, "it is not appropriate." Field then urged any person who had knowledge of such practices to notify him. He said that "health and safety are the only reasons for a student's room to be entered."

Course Requirements

The next student representative to speak was Mary Sayre, on course requirements. "I don't think the present courses and requirements are properly preparing us for life in general." She went on to say that "requirements are an intimidation to the student." Speaking on changing the University Requirements, she said, "Innovation is necessary and it is not visible on this campus in regard to curriculum . . . Now it is the administration's turn to act responsibly towards us."

Provost Tippo answered Miss Sayre's statement by saying that no one in the administration has ever received a list of grievances "of this kind" from students.

He then announced that he had just received the "Cook Report" which was prepared by a faculty committee on curriculum requirements. The Provost cited some of the recommendations of the report which suggest many changes in the core requirements. The audience alternately applauded and hissed the proposals.

Grading

The next speaker was Allan Hurwitz, a student, on "grade intimidation." He opened by asking, "Why should there be a cume?" Then he asked, "Isn't the aim of the college to gain knowledge, not a computerized piece of paper?" He said that the only purpose of the cumulative average is to get jobs. "You can't walk around with a 2.5 or a 3.3 tattooed on your foreheads."

Hesuggested, "What we need is a pass-fail system." This was met with loud applause. "The change is coming. Why must we be the last because we are a state university?"

Once again Provost Tippo answered. He said that this spring the administration will "take another look at the pass-fail system."

"At least we have the beginning of a pass-fail system; we will improve it as we go along," he said.

Plan of Action

The next speaker for the student committee was Brian Richards. He spoke on "What we will do!"

He began, "The students have once again been told how the meeting will be run . . . the administration has once again had the last word." He said that the students will now have the final word and "The word is now!"

Talking about the open house issue, Richards declared, "What the students demand is open housing. They mean now!" He continued, "If they do not get open housing now, they will take it now! . . . Once they've got it, the administration can't take it back."

The crowd became more and more vocal, and Richards, standing and gesturing with the microphone, kept yelling louder: "We will not be told these things take time!" The audience roared its approval. "Things must change now!" Richards shouted and the crowd roared its approval.

Still gesturing wildly he said, "The reports are in and they say nothing . . . The students say the time is now!" He went on: "The students want an equal voice in how the University is run—and they will take it!"

He then delivered the same ultimatum already made to the administration: "The students want open houses Thursday at two o'clock, and they will take them at Thursday at two o'clock! . . . If they don't, come to the cage Thursday at two o'clock!"

President Lederle chose to answer Richards. He began, "Everyone would like to have everything they want now—but that is not the way the world works." He then answered Richards' charges that there are "C.I.A. stool-pigeons in the classrooms." He said that if anyone can name them, "we'll get them off campus." No one named any.

The President finished with the comment, "I think there's been some playing to the galleries here tonight."

7 Open Discussion

Following Lederle's statement, Prof. Marcus threw the meeting open to comments from the floor. He did, however, put a 9:30 time limit on the debate; it was then a little after nine o'clock. When one of the students on the platform, Richard Marcus, jumped up and made a statement saying, "We'll leave when everyone wants to leave," it was received with loud approval from the audience. Prof. Marcus said, "I meant I will leave the platform at 9:30." He then entertained comments from the audience.

The first to take one of the microphones placed around the floor was graduate student, Bill Wilkinson. First he criticized the Daily Collegian for what he called "yellow journalism." He charged that Editor-in-Chief Chet Weinerman had placed his "personal views" on the front page of Monday's paper in the form of an editorial criticizing the demonstrators.

Explaining that "you don't know what it means to be a nigger," Wilkinson, a Negro, leveled his criticisms at the tone of the meeting while applauding its aims.

There were several more speakers as the meeting became more tumultuous.

Professor Sidney Wexler spoke, maintaining, "We're all students. The University does not belong to any one of us, but to all of us . . . we are all in a common cause, that of learning." Prof. Marcus urged to Wexler to summarize quickly as the clamor from the audience rose.

Steve Kalish, a graduate student, claimed, "We are being fed pablum . . . some officials do have vested interests."

At 9:30 Prof. Marcus left the platform as he had said he would. Putnam Barber, a sociology instructor, took the stage and announced, "We can go on without Prof. Marcus." As the administrator started to follow Marcus, Bill Wilkinson spoke and convinced them to stay and hear a few more speakers. Barber took over as moderator and the discussion continued.

The discussion which became increasingly chaotic touched on many subjects, among them tenure, Vietnam and ROTC.

Barber said at one point, "We are taxpaying citizens of Massachusetts first, and students second." Another student said, "If you want something around here, you just have to get it yourself."

When one student questioned the place of ROTC at the University, claiming it is "anti-intellectual," President Lederle said, "ROTC is voluntary and provided for under the land-grant Act. I wouldn't want to deprive the students of their rights to it." After this remark Lederle left the platform quietly.

By now, many of the people in the audience left, leaving a small, but vocal, group continuing the discussion. Many students surrounded the platform and started grabbing for the microphone, while Barber tried to maintain order.

Dr. Noffsinger, assistant dean of students, stayed on the floor of the cage until the end of the meeting. He said he was "a little disappointed with some people on both sides, who should have acted with reason and didn't."

By the end of the meeting about 300 persons were left in the Cage. The willingness of those remaining to participate in further demonstration was discussed. It was finally decided that all those interested in continuing to pressure for open housing should attend tonights Student Senate meeting. Plans for protests on Thursday were also talked about, but specific plans were put off pending the Senate's action on the open housing bill tonight.

The Time Hasn't Come

Last night's meeting—confrontation—mass scene—debate—rally—was, measured by its audience response, needed: It fulfilled the emotional void of the "average" student. But this is not to say that the meeting was properly conducted by those of the Ad Hoc Committee who were spokesmen nor is it to say that the students have anyone but themselves to blame for their emotional condition vis a vis their role in University decision making.

The students at UMass probably will not, and should not, respond to the call for civil disobedience on Thursday by participating in illegal open houses. Nor, more importantly, should the students accept the dribble handed to them by the self-styled student representatives that (1) the administration does not listen to students or (2) the administration unreasonably insisted on groundrules for the Cage meeting or (3) the time has come to bypass normal channel or decision making and demand student power. All these assertions are totally untrue.

Because the student body has not put pressure on its student government or the faculty does not justify a demand for NOW, NOW, NOW. Because the student body has not considered the Cook report, vague demands for academic reform NOW, NOW, NOW, take rock-bottom priority in the minds of reasonable members of the community. And because the hundreds of students at the cage responded emotionally does not identify the Ad Hoc Committee leadership as the students' speakers.

Hopefully, as a result of this confrontation of the top four administrators (the President, Provost, Dean of Students, and Dean of the Graduate School) and the Ad Hoc leadership and the students who went to the cage and the faculty who attended—and the confrontation of those who were not necessarily there in person, the Student Senate and all the other students—hopefully, a new climate of awareness and scrutiny will emerge.

If those who insisted on student power last night would remain an interest group and would join the cause of transmitting student desires and of following up on the action taken or not taken—the job the Daily Collegian and the Student Senate claim to be doing—then the Ad Hoc Committee will deserve the respect of the student body. This is the role which the Ad Hoc Committee can play. If it attempts to play any other role, it should meet not only the opposition of the administration ("I can tell you there will be serious repercussion."—Lederle) but also the opposition of the student body.

The normal processes of meeting student demands have been used and used fruitfully although they have not been exhausted. No one has a right to say NOW, NOW, NOW, until he has first asked in a non-emotional manner.

Finally while the emotion evoked was by and large a good thing—it is good for the students to listen and to be moved—the discourtesy to the administrators present (which forced Professor Joseph Marcus to quit as moderator) and to the audience was in poor taste, the discourtesy is not expected to have lasting effects.

An administration willing to come to a mass meeting of students is not one unable to forget minor insults. An Ad Hoc Committee calling for dialogue should not insist that there never had been dialogue but should strive to follow up their confrontation by a role within the University community, not outside it.

The power and effectiveness of organizations like the Student Senate and the Daily Collegian are only as great (and fair) as the students who join them. The dissenters are invited and urged to remain active.

". . . Which crime in whose streets . . .?"

Orchard Is Underprivileged

There are two struggling complex units existing on this campus. But because of University priorities, lack of funds, or lack of complete confidence in the system, the residential college complexes, particularly Orchard Hill have been asked to "produce" while placed under severe limitations in its attempt to reach its goals. The University College Report states "the fundamental source of difficulty has been an attempt to superimpose flexibility on an intractable structure; the program was not planned until facilities were nearly complete and the latter have fixed stringent restraints on the former."

Through red tape and the inception of Southwest, it took three years to fully complete Orchard Hill and some of the things originally promised by the contractor still have not yet been completed. But while the center of campus activity has focused on Southwest and its 5000 students, Orchard Hill seems to have been by-passed in the process.

Orchard Hill as well as the Southwest complex was originally planned as a regular dormitory complex with no special facilities to support academic programs. And most types of classes simply cannot be conducted under existing space and lounge conditions. But Southwest has a tremendous advantage—Dining Commons that can double as recreational areas. The close proximity of a dining commons allows students mildly interested in movies, meeting or lectures to attend.

Education is an unconscious process. Unless what is offered at the residential college allows the student truly voluntary participation, he usually won't participate. Aside from the fact that faculty office space is practically non-existent, "Orchard Hill does not have even a dining commons in close proximity, thus further limiting its flexibility," and faculty fellows avoid getting too involved in a program or a system that does not provide sufficient results for themselves or, in their view, for the student.

Orchard Hill does not even have a blue print for the construction of such a facility once the bonding limit is raised by the state legislature. This is certainly an administration oversight.

A site for complex (to have office space, recreation space, classroom space, and a dining commons) was submitted more than two years ago. Such a facility could service the whole hill area. It could be financed by bonding for office space and classroom space. The dining commons runs as a private concern. Also perhaps this facility, as well as part of the Orchard Hill complex itself, could utilized by the proposed University College to be located near Orchard Hill. This proposal seems even more feasible if further dormitory building takes place in the old quadrangle.

The University must reevaluate its priorities (if it truly wants to see the Residential College experiment become a success).

Realistically, Orchard Hill desperately needs a Dining Commons-Recreational Facility Complex not only to achieve any of its goals, but also to survive as a semi-autonomous unique system.

UMass must make some adjustments in its attitude so that this community can be proud not only of the cake (the glistening buildings) but also some of the frosting that makes it more attractive. At that time this institution will be moving towards its professed goal, as expressed by President John Lederle attaining "the best of both."

Campus Situation Calls for Cool Heads

Many Californians seem to be losing their cool about their university and state colleges.

Evidence that ranges from casual conversations and letters to newspaper editors to statements by prominent politicians and a variety of other individuals points to the conclusion that many citizens have lost confidence in the ability of their public institutions to carry on the process of higher education under conditions of reasonable stability.

The reactions of some legislators have been extreme, taking the form of suggestions that the budgets for both the university and state college systems be sharply cut or that a separate, statewide police force be established to maintain law and order on campus.

The criticisms cover a wide range but seem to have in common the belief that public campuses have become centers of personal and political anarchy and that college and university officials are doing little about this condition.

The extremes to which political leaders are willing to go in their attacks were demonstrated in a letter Assemblyman Leo J. Ryan (D-San Mateo) wrote to Charles J. Hitch, UC's new president, in early December.

Strong Words Used

After listing a series of events on public campuses which he found distasteful, Ryan said:

"Until I see strong leadership from the administration of our public institutions, and reasonable support from serious, competent and stable faculty, and until I see diligent and hard working students who are anxious to help tackle and solve some of the really serious problems that face the world, I can only conclude that the public institutions of higher learning in this state are best represented by the shouting mob, and that their symbol is the burning American flag and the nude man eating grapes." (A reference to an illustration in a campus newspaper to which Ryan took objection.)

This is demagoguery.

For the most part, California's public campuses have been quiet and orderly this year, much more so than those of several other states.

Of the 18 state colleges only three or four have experienced anything that could be described as disorder.

Four of the nine University of California campuses — Davis, Riverside, Santa Cruz and the San Francisco Medical Center—have had no demonstrations which broke either campus rules or local law, and three others—Irvine, San Diego and Santa Barbara—have had only minor incidents of trouble.

At UCLA a demonstration against recruiting by the Dow Chemical Co. in November led to disruption of the campus job placement center and slight property damage. As a result, 95 students have received warnings of discipline.

Division Over the Draft Is Political and Moral

To the editor:

About a year ago, following a symposium held at the University on "The Draft: Problem for a Democratic Society," I was quoted in the press as saying that many students are in college to dodge the draft. What I actually said was that draft dodging (politely called "deferment") is an important, though not sole, motive for college attendance. I would like now to amplify that statement because the world situation is even more desperate and the pressures of the draft more intense, and because I have had more opportunity to see the psychological consequences of student deferment.

Anyone who is plugged in to today's world realizes that opinion is deeply divided on the war in Vietnam and on the draft which makes possible American participation in that war. Many foreign policy experts, college faculty members, Senators and Congressmen, major newspapers, clergymen of all faiths (including the national leadership of most religious bodies) are sharply critical of the United States position in Vietnam. Every citizen is to some extent forced to take a stand, or make a choice, or participate in some way in the political-moral crisis that divides our nation.

A similar controversy surrounds the draft. In the months preceding July, 1967, when Congress took action to extend the Selective Service Act for another four years, oficial and public opinion was aroused by the draft's inequities. Much criticism centered on deferments. Two committees of respected citizens, one appointed by Congress, the other by the President, made recommendations aimed at correcting injustices in the draft laws. But Congress made almost no changes; Congressional debate was trivial and limited. The two committees might as well not have met.

The new draft law perpetuates deferments for college students who are pursuing a full academic program and are making normal progress toward graduation. Part-time students who have to work to finance an education and those delayed in their progress toward graduation are draft-eligible. The effect is to fill the military ranks with poor people, minority group members, and students with weaker high school backgrounds. The relatively well-educated, white, middle-class young man enjoys mandatory deferment as a student, while those who work part-time or take semester off from college face immediate 1-A classification.

One psychological effect on the sensitive student may be a feeling of guilt. At a level below consciousness perhaps, the college man must be vaguely aware that his deferment is at the expense of a less fortunate fellow, a neighbor in the same draft board district or more likely a non-neighbor from the other end of town, who has been conscripted to fight in Vietnam.

All of us are confronted with moral choices: whether the war in Vietnam is just or unjust, and whether the U.S. position there is right or wrong. Students who think about these alternatives must decide for themselves how to act or fail to act. Some may feel that, if the war is just and right, they should be participating in it. The student who believes that the American position is right might well ask himself why he sits on the sidelines while someone else fights the battle in his place. But if one feels the war is unjust, immoral, and futile, then he cannot feel comfortable unless he is doing all he can to stop it. He may become an anti-war activist; he may consider non-cooperation with the draft.

It is not enough to explain that being a student exempts one from such terrible choices, or that Uncle Sam has already conveniently made the choice. Quiet neutrality and fence-sitting in the presence of a desperately important moral crisis solve the problem only superficially. For sensitive students an inner tension is generated which may show itself in various "symptoms": confusion over values, difficulty concentrating, apathy, depression, anxiety.

To live in a personal world dominated by unresolved conflicts—about the war, the draft, the flunking of a course, the avoidance of moral commitment—can produce acute discomfort. Defense mechanisms of denial and repression which may seem to allow a business-as-usual style of University life also take their toll. One's energies may be dissipated and one's responsiveness to other human situations inhibited by efforts to blot out awareness of a personal dilemma. The war does not go away because we try not to think about it.

Students who understand this letter may wonder why the same dilemma does not affect faculty members. Why are young people required to make such decisions while older people, go on with quiet academic lives? A fair question. It deserves an answer from all of us who avoid the draft in various respectable ways. Do the silent members of our University community feel there are no questions, no dilemmas, no crisis of conscience?

Frosh Candidate Tells Why

To the editor:

The campus is so big, and the student body so large, that my desire to meet the entire Freshman class is practically impossible in the short time available. Though wallpapering the campus with hundreds of signs would familiarize my name, I shall not do so, because I feel that it is the person, not a name written on a posterboard that counts.

To many of you, I assume that the Student Senate means open house legislation, and that this is a major factor in your vote. I am in favor of self determination of open houses by the residence halls. But there is so much more to the Senate. The student government handles a wide variety of problems ranging from food service complaints to approval of R.S.O. charters, the Collegian budget and beyond. In the long run, it is the total view that counts, and not just one issue. If elected, I promise to conscientiously perform the full range of tasks demanded from the Senator at Large of your class.

One final point. Obviously I have left much unsaid here. Should you wish to ask me a question, or make an arrangement so that you could see what I look like, my telephone number is 6-7170. I invite your calls.

New Draft Ruling Adds To Hypocrisy of System

To the editor:

With increasing numbers of American young people protesting armed forces recruiters on campuses, picketing draft boards, burning draft cards, rushing to Canada, Sweden and elsewhere . .

With men being jailed, fined, clubbed, gassed, and called traitors for taking these actions.

With an army of over half a million men not even old enough to vote for the men who send them 10,000 miles away to kill and be killed . . .

With a quarter of these fighting men black Americans who cannot afford the luxury of college deferment and who find the killing ground is the only one where they are accepted as equals, who if lucky enough to survive come back to a society which daily reminds them that their plight is not far different from that of the Vietnamese struggling against a corrupt regime propped up by white money and arms, and finally who then assume here the militant guerilla role which they almost died to destroy over there . . .

With a congressional study having shown that the draft could be abolished with a saving both in money and in conscience damage . . .

With these and many other indications that the draft, particularly today, is viciously unfair, the government has decided to settle the problem in typically inept fashion. Claiming to make the system more fair by going after the privileged sanctuary of graduate study, the government has in fact only rubbed salt in the wounds, aggravating a situation which has already become intolerable. The new law cuts a bloody swath in college teaching by tearing out the graduate assistants who carry so much of the teaching load and makes it impossible for a college graduate school to plan ahead. If the next generation is to prevent the horrors we live through today, it must have teachers; but the already appalling shortage of teachers will only be made intolerable by the new law.

The one hope lies in the fact that this new law may ironically serve to destroy the draft system faster than any protest movement ever could have dreamed possible. If 150,000 new recruits in July are college graduates, of voting age, how many of them will submit to the outrage which many of them already have been protesting on American campuses? If they submit, will they not speak out as their conscience dictates, consequently sowing discontent and chaos in the ranks? Finally, if they reach the front line, how many poets are good killers?

The only proper solution, one which is as cynical as the hypocritical system which has brought about this foul law and this obscene war, is for the United States to create a standing professional army. With an S.S. like Hitler's or a Foreign Legion like colonial France's, America could finally shed the last vestige of pretense and assume its historical position with the other imperial powers of the past, under the inspiring banner not of "lebensraum" but of "West More Land!"

Let's Keep Southwest a Coed Living Area

To the editor:

Recently there have been rumors about the possibility of turning the Towers in the Southwest Complex into dormitories for women only. Reasons for depriving the male members of the campus from living in the newly built Towers mainly center around the damage that is caused. I find that this is close to the truth but at the same time I also know that the University asks for trouble.

I suspect that it is the freshmen and sophomores of the Towers that cause most of the senseless acts of destruction in the name of what they call "fun." If you take a look at Prince House I am sure that you will find a remarkable difference in the way things are treated. It seems to me that most of the young college men and women do not appreciate what they have and never will until it is taken away from them. However, I believe that these "boys" are not entirely at fault.

The lamps that were seen on each of the floor lounges were made of cheap plastic and were not stable, and therefore fell over easily. There were a number of such mistakes made in the furnishing of the dormitory. I still don't know why they put wall-to-wall carpeting on the ground floor.

If the University is going to make any housing changes, I think the possibility of creating "Coed Towers" should not be ruled out. Men and Women in the same dormitory may solve the current problems of the Administration. Each female will influence the behavior of each male and vice-versa; a system of "countervailing powers" could be created.

Faculty Urged to Protest War thru Tax

To the editor:

Our tax money is supporting the immoral and destructive action of our government in Vietnam. We who are signed below have in our various ways protested American involvement in the war. At the same time, we must admit our own guilt and responsibility, for a part of the money we pay in taxes has gone to support the war.

We may not be able to change this policy, although that must always be our aim. What we can do, however, is to protest our forced complicity. We urge those who share our views to join us in a protest against paying those Federal Taxes which finance the war we condemn.

A number of forms of protest are possible.

First, you may refuse to pay the 10% Federal Tax on your telephone bill. This tax was increased in 1966 from 3% to 10% specifically to finance the increasing cost of the war in Vietnam. Thousands of people are refusing to pay this tax. Refusal does not result in disruption of telephone service, as this is not an act against the telephone company.

Second, concerning Federal Income Tax, you may do one of three things:

(1) Pay your tax, but enclose a letter of protest stating that you oppose the war and that you pay only under threat of punishment;

(2) Pay uour tax, but file IRS Form 843, claiming a tax refund for 25% of the amount — the percentage of our national budget we estimate goes to the war in Vietnam;

(3) Refuse to pay any part of your income tax over which you have control, up to 25% of the total amount due.

This third alternative is, of course, illegal; but we are reminded of Thoreau, who wrote, "It is not desirable to cultivate a respect for the law, so much as for the right."

We further urge you to send copies of your letter to your congressmen and to the President. We suggest the following central considerations: (a) the war in Vietnam has not been declared by Congress and is therefore illegal under the Constitution of the United States, including the Charter of the United Nations; (b) the war in Vietnam is a crime against Humanity; and (c) taxes require you to finance and thus participate in military activities to which you have conscientious objection based upon moral principles.

"Where the Time of Your Life Is Right Under Your Nose"

A visit to any one of the Your Father's Mustache banjo emporiums is like journeying to some of the golden eras of America's past. It is the Gay 90's, a prohibition speakeasy, a World War I recruiting center, the uninhibited atmosphere of the Roaring '20's, the splendor of Tiffany glass and what might have been John L. Sullivan's neighborhood bar, all rolled into one. A team of professionals from the Boston Club will arrive early Friday afternoon to decorate the Student Union Ballroom and recreate the atmosphere of the original Mustache Nite Clubs.

MUSTACHE BANJO BAND

Once inside Your Father's Mustache it's a hand-clapping, foot-stomping evening of happy music and old-fashioned fun.

Format of the banjo emporium is uninhibited fun and plenty of nostalgia. Patrons singalong with "The World's Worst Banjo Band" in a setting which blots out the world of supersonic rockets and big beat music.

BYRDS FEATURED SUNDAY

The Byrds, who will be featured in "the Righteous Brothers Show" Sunday, have been described as the best group in America by the leaders of the pop music scene, the Beatles. Led by Jim McGuin, the innovators of "folk-rock" will join the new Righteous Brothers, comic Frank Welker, and folk singer Glen Campbell in a two hour show.

The Byrds began their musical careers with their first hit, "Mr. Tambourine man" and have since had numerous millions selling singles and albums. Bob Dylan has said of them: "They're cutting across all kinds of barriers which most people who sing are not even hip to. They know it all. If they keep their minds open, they'll come up with something pretty fantastic." They already have.

Frank Welker is a natural comic who is sensitive, creative, and full of talent. He has appeared at the Purple Onion in San Francisco and the Steel Pier in Atlantic City.

In 1961, Glen Campbell, whose fame as a singer with a voice as vibrant as it is gentle, and with a range not often equalled, had become as well known as was the magic of his guitar playing. His first national hit was "Turn Around, Look at Me". His most recent release is "By the Time I Get to Phoenix."

Johnny Carson, 'Doc' Severinsen To Appear in Cage Saturday Night

The Johnny Carson Show comes to Curry Hicks cage Saturday night. Appearing with Carson will be "Doc" Severinsen and the N B C orchestra, singer Ce Ce Grant, and dancers Bud and CiCi Robinson.

In 1936 when Rudy Vallee was working his magic on the largest radio audiences ever, an 11 year-old boy was using his own brand of magic to entertain Midwestern audiences at civic clubs and local theaters. Billed "The Great Carsoni", Johnny Carson performed magic tricks and sleight - of - hand stunts.

Twenty-six years later, that young magician was to become the lovable Svengali of the pajama set, captivating about nine million television viewers each week night on the "Tonight" show.

While appearing as the "great Carsoni" in high school and later in the U. S. Navy, Carson developed the necessary showmanship and presence to be able to jump with ease from a riotus, rakish burlesque sketch to in-depth serious discussions with national leaders.

Johnny Carson chose a career in broadcasting after graduation from the University of Nebraska. His reputation was such that he had his pick of jobs. Soon he had his own West Coast radio show and eventually his own network show from California.

As a comedy writer, Carson came to the attention of Red Skelton. Called in only hours before air time, Carson substituted for Skelton on network television when the star had an accident.

His appearance for Skelton was so well received he was signed to host the network show "Who Do You Trust?" from New York. He starred in the program for five seasons.

In October, 1962, Carson took over the NBC Television Network's "Tonight" show and several months later he had established himself so well that the ratings and network earnings soared to new heights.

In the Summer of 1964 Carson played his first major night club engagement in Las Vegas where he broke the Sahara's attendance records. He repeated his record-breaking appearance there in 1965 and was invited back for a third engagement for a month in 1966. In early 1967 he played two sets of two-week appearances there.

Since 1964 he has appeared in major cities across the country, entertaining "Tonight" show fans from every state.

Carson and his wife, Joanne, now have a home in Las Vegas as well as their expansive New York City apartment. He has three sons by his first marriage: Chris, Ricky and Cory.

He puts aside hobbies as soon as he masters them. He learned to fly and sail and now is interested in photography. He also "dabbles" in astronomy, and enjoys working with his home video tape recording.

The "Carsoni" magic is undeniably strong. Beginning his fifth season as host of "Tonight," Carson's viewing audience is larger than ever. Ticket reservations to attend the taping of the show are sometimes booked as much as a year ahead of time.

In 1967, Carson was named "Man of the Year" by the March of Dimes, and was pictured on the cover of both Time and Look magazines.

In addition to a one hundred per cent effort on the part of the Winter Carnival Committee to bring the best possible entertainment to campus, a number of innovations have been attemptd. To insure order at entrance to all Cage concerts doors will open one hour before show time, areas will be roped off to aid the crowd in forming orderly lines, and extra policemen have been added to the concert security staffs.

Philosophy Grad Student Appraises "Spectrum"

By ANTHONY STIGLIANO

A philosophy grad student interested in student publication.

"Spectrum," described as a general interest magazine, marks (I am told) the presentation of a new publication for the express purpose of giving voice to the artistic side of student life at UMass. Despite this, there is a paucity of University talent represented.

Perhaps one should not expect too much from the student body since the talented among them should have a journal of the arts, rather than a potpourri of psychedelia and color trickery which does no more than startle the senses and leave the more serious reader disappointed.

What is to be expected from a "general interest" magazine? Certainly, it cannot (and should not) try to hold the interests of every person. But neither should it be so narow as to appeal only to an elite group of alienated intellectuals.

It should be an open space, a place for one to breathe freely, away from the loud desperation of dormitory ant-colonies. It should not try to cater to the illiterate fads produced by people who know nothing and care nothing about art.

It must be an organ in which people who have never attempted to create, would find their need to express themselves and be heard.

We cannot expect new voices to make important ideas and precious feelings known in a magazine that presents that most humane of human expressions, art, in a fragmented, loose-ended, faddish, slickly produced vehicle.

The individual works, especially the poetry of Mr. Kerr, Mr. Shaw, and Miss Farber, are professional and of the highest literary quality. The fiction, particularly Mr. Shaw's 'Judgement of Paris," was worthy of a more widely distributed magazine. Despite these authors' skill and talent, I felt that there was something missing.

The poetry struck me as being merely constructions of sentences rather than creative expressions that emerge from deeply felt intuitions. There was too much of the attempt to write so as to titillate, to make the reader attentive for the moment without his having something significant revealed to him.

After reading through the magazine, I had no sense of having been illuminated or having made an important discovery about either myself or my environment. An exception to this was Mr. Shaw's striking recollection of Southern life.

But the memoir remains strictly personal, and I find myself as an observer, nodding my head with detached interest. I felt no need for commitment nor did I find any relevancy to my experience.

The art work, especially the cover, struck me as being poor. The irritating and pointless illustration accompanying Mr. Kerr's "Fire Talk" is a case in point. Its harshness, and the placing of the poem deprived the work of its position at the center as the reader's conscious imagination. Again, the art work was overly slick and commercial, not founded upon a need to create, but rather a need to illustrate.

The photography was the high point of the magazine. The works of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Williams were sensitive and reveal solid talent. But their juxtaposition to each other and to Mr. Shaw's poem "The Park Attendant" was such that the strength of their meanings were decremented.

This is a far cry from the placing of the fine photograph of Mr. Springer and the equally fine poem of Mr. Kerr. The placing and balancing of the two media of word and picture provides a strong feeling of tension and sensitivity to the human condition as experienced by poet and photographer.

This is the exception and not the rule, however. The relation of word, picture, line and color is very crude, detracting from the overall experience of reading the magazine.

I came away from the magazine disappointed by the lack of coherence and the lack of sensitivity displayed by the organization. More importantly, I felt concern at the lack of University participation.

Earlier I said that this may be the failure of the magazine. Certainly, the lack of communication and intellectual life on campus is responsible. It may be that the editors will have no choice but to rely on outside material unless this school wakes up from its creative lifelessness.

However, such a magazine may provide the blood for a cultural awakening on this jejune campus. It may provide the eye of reflection through which we may see ourselves and express that experience of self-awareness (both personal and collective) in art, and, above all, in human communication.

Canadian Liberal Govt. Defeated in Surprise Upset

OTTAWA (AP)—Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson's minority Liberal government suffered a surprise two-vote defeat in the House of Commons Monday night on a bill to increase income taxes.

Opposition Conservatives shouted, "Resign! Resign! Resign!" after the 84-82 upset, but the House adjourned until Tuesday with nobody certain about the next move.

Pearson, 70, announced in December that he plans to leave office in the spring. He was in Jamaica on vacation Monday and not expected in Ottawa until Wednesday.

The Liberals have been in power since 1963, retaining office largely with minority party support when faced with nonconfidence motion.

The Liberals apparently were caught unprepared for a vote Monday night on the bill to impose a 5 per cent surcharge on income taxes and to speed up collection of corporation taxes.

Ordinarily, the government would be forced to resign after defeat on such an important bill.

But confused circumstances surrounding the vote — and the imminence of a Liberal convention to choose Pearson's successor—left the result in doubt.

In the Liberal lobby, MPs asked: "What now?"

The defeat touched off a turmoil in the Commons unmatched in years. Former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, amid thunderous opposition cheers and desk-banging, said the government must resign as his Conservative government had been forced to do in 1963.

A confused sequence of events leading to Monday night's upset apparently was set off when Deputy speaker Herman M. Batten began to call the vote without realizing that the government was not prepared for it.

After some argument, Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp said he had no objection to letting it go ahead. The division bells calling members to the chamber rang for 75 minutes—far longer than the average of 15. But when the tally began, the government apparently had thought it had enough members present to carry the issue.

Sixty Conservative members joined with 15 New Democrats, five Creditistes, three Social Credit MPs and Gilles Gregoire, an independent, to produce the upset.

NEW ANALYSIS . . .

Student expectations for the meeting were generally hopeful but cautious. One junior said, "I think that this is something we should have had a long time ago. I really think that if we can conduct this thing in a responsible way, we can really help ourselves. If we don't, I think we'll ruin ourselves."

Many students were surprised that the speakers from the administration would be limited, like their student counterparts, to three minutes each. This time limit was, however, not generally liked.

Both faculty and students agreed on the need for not defying the existing system in order to initiate change. But both were firmly convinced that change must come now.

The feeling by some that the meeting was a success, if only as a beginning, can be illustrated by the following statement of Putnam Barber, Sociology Professor. "The score is now UMass 30, Visitors O." UMass, according to Mr. Barber, represents the total commitment of interested and sincere students and faculty members. The visitors are the hard core, who advocate wild changes and near anarchy for the purpose of attacting attention.

TRUSTEE MEETING . . .

The representatives, stating their case against the proposed building, told the Trustees of studies carried out by the President's Council and the Student Senate that showed reasons why the building should not be built in that area. (Daily Collegian Monday, February 19, 1968).

Concerning the alternative of low rise dorms to high, Trustee John Haigis of Greenfield said, "We'd just as soon run right out to South Deerfield, but you run into problems."

The entire problem was not voted on, but rather placed under study.

Passed by the Trustees were the plans for a Campus Boulevard, continuing from its present end at Southwest, between the Newman Center and the Baptist Church.

Also reported was the Student Senate rejection of the proposed program for open houses.

After reading portions of a statement by Collins in the Monday, February 19, Daily Collegian and the front page editorial by Editor-in-Chief Chet Weinerman, one Trustee, speaking unoffically on behalf of the board, said that it seems to prove that there is "some thoughtful and responsible leadership among the students."

LBJ's Travel Plans Unannounced

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson, back from his most secret major domestic trip, said Monday much of his traveling in this election year likely will be done without much advance notice.

As Johnson's big jet neared Washington early Monday, the President discussed with newsmen the secrecy that had cloaked most of his movements in the preceding 33 hours.

"I think you're going to find most of my trips are going to be without much advance notice," he said.

The President said "military security" was the first consideration.

Johnson said he was very conscious that the Communists were launching new offensives in Vietnam as he left Washington, suggesting he wanted to feel free to alter his plans quickly had events in Southeast Asia made that necessary.

Soldier in Vietnam Asserts "They Took Our Weapons Away"

MARLBORO, Mass. (AP)—"Dad, we got mortared last night and nobody had a g-d weapon."

A father made public Monday a letter from his soldier son in Vietnam making that assertion, and asking that the soldier's congressman be informed.

The father, Alfred Busa, said he had informed Rep. Philip J. Philbin, D-Mass., and had been assured by Philbin that an immediate investigation would be undertaken.

The father identified his son as Alfred Busa Jr., 21, a specialist 4th class in the Army's 4th Division. He made public this partial text of his son's letter, which was postmarked Feb. 9, and received Feb. 15.

"Hi Dad:

"Well, this is not going to be one of my everything's fine letters. I'm not hurt or anything but I do have a lot I would like you to inform our congressman about.

"Yesterday they took our weapons away from us. The 4th division took them away, dad, and they locked them up. They say we won't need them while we are on base camp.

"Dad, we got mortared last last night and nobody had a g-d weapon. We were lucky, dad. Charlie Viet Cong didn't try a ground attack. He just mortared us, but if he had I doubt if any of us would be here to write these letters today. . ."

"Oh, I almost forgot. After the mortar stopped, we were allowed to get our weapons in case Charlie did come through but they took the damn things away again this morning and they're not going to let us have them back tonight. . ."

The father said in informing Rep. Philbin about his son's letter he expressed some doubts about disclosing the matter. Busa said Philbin assured him there "would never be repercussions over a letter written a father about conditions in Vietnam."

National News Roundup

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — More than half a million Florida public school children were shut out of classes Monday by the nation's first statewide teacher walkout.

One-third of the state's teachers — 25,077 of 60,844 — already had resigned Monday with 12 counties not yet reporting, according to figures from the state Department of Education and county school boards.

The teachers' spokesman here said another 13,000 would quit today.

All classes were cancelled in 22 counties with combined enrollment of 556,155.

Four other counties closed part of their schools Monday for lack of teachers. Some that were open Monday plan to close today, a few for the whole week.

The teachers, acting through their professional organization, the Florida Education Association, began the walkout after rejecting as insufficient last Friday a legislative program for increasing financial support to public schools.

There was no picketing as most of the teachers who resigned joined in 21 mass meetings around the state.

The teachers say their resignations were legal and not in conflict with Florida's law barring strikes by public employees, but an aid to Gov. Claude Kirk said the teachers were on strike.

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—A pre-dawn tornado ripped along a business - lined main street and tore at homes Monday, leaving 17 persons injured and an estimated $2.5 million worth of damage in this winter resort city.

The U.S. Weather Bureau said there was no sign of a tornado on its radar scope during regular checks, but later said the pattern of damage indicated the swirling winds of a tornado had been present.

Tornadoes are extremely rare in the Miami area.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A telescope near Tucson, Ariz., has snapped the first photos of a spacecraft orbiting the moon.

The 61-inch telescope, at the Univ. of Ariz. planetary lab, caught the refrigerator-sized Lunar Orbiter 5 in orbit Jan. 21, 10 days before scientists of NASA sent it crashing into the lunar surface.

Dr. Gerald Kuiper, director of the lab, said the telescopic photographs show the spacecraft as resembling a star. It is too tiny to be seen with the naked eye.

Lebow Memorial Concert To Be Given Tomorrow

Dorothy Ornest, soprano, will present a concert of works for voice and instruments as a continuing part of the University of Massachusetts Faculty Recital Series. The concert will take place Wednesday, February 21 in Bartlett Auditorium on the University campus at 8 P.M.

The concert has been designated by the Department of Music as a memorial to the late Howard Lebow, pianist and former member of the Department of Music, who was tragically killed in an automobile accident in January.

Miss Ornest will present three works. Two of these works, especially prepared for her by composers on the faculty, are to be performed for the first time.

Roxbury Work-Study Project This Summer

This summer the Roxbury Work Study Project will offer 150 college students the opportunity to participate in a program of physical and social renewal in the Washington Park area of Roxbury.

The interracial group of students will be professionally supervised to paint the exterior of houses and make some minor repairs. In addition, students will spend some time on tutorial and recreational projects for neighborhood children.

The students will live in a dormitory at Northeastern University—this housing will be provided free. Neighborhood Improvement Aides, as the student workers are titled, will be paid a wage; some scholarships will be available at the end of the summer, awarded on the basis of need and qualifications.

Area residents are urged to cooperate with the project participants, thus increasing the involvement of these students with the community. The Project is sponsored by the Boston Redevelopment Authority and the Freedom House, Inc., a non-profit civic and cultural center in Roxbury.

Efforts will be made through the evening lecture and group discussion programs to acquaint the students with community concerns and issues.

During the past four summers the Roxbury Work Study Project has been a success in the community. If you are interested in working with the Project this summer, please contact your placement officer for further information.

Winter Carnival '68:

OUR IMPROVEMENTS

Unifying Theme

OUR FAVORITE THINGS. A general statement covering everyone's likes. To appeal to all we attempted to combine universal and personal events and talent. We want to make OUR FAVORITE THINGS one of your favorite things.

Our colorful design symbolizes Winter Carnival '68. It appears on all Winter Carnival favors: the booklet, button, garter and shotglass.

Talent

Johnny Carson, Righteous Brothers, Byrds, Buckinghams, Your Father's Mustache, and "Doc" Severinson. The best entertainment available in the country.

The choice of more than 100 people and the university's professional staff. Negotiations on Johnny Carson began last summer, but The Buckinghams were signed only five days ago (we had a chance to get the third best group in the country so we acted fast)

Concert Consideration

We condensed Winter Carnival into five days rather than stretching out over two weekends.

All concerts will have roped off, police-controlled lines. If you've waited for an hour to be first inside, you'll be the first one inside.

And once you are inside, take any seat—once the doors are open there are no reserved seats. In the past Sunday concerts started in the sunny early afternoon. Daylight destroys atmosphere so we rescheduled the Righteous Brothers concert to 5:30 when it's dark.

Tickets

Wonder why there weren't any lines? It wasn't because we weren't selling many tickets (we've sold nearly 13,000 as of Monday). It's because we had two ticket lines. Tickets were on sale exclusively at the university for a full week. Even now the only tickets being sold off campus are for the Johnny Carson Concert. When the Righteous Brothers concert sells out, we want it to sell out here.

Ticket prices. In considering the price, first consider the talent. You'd pay $2.00 more to see the same concerts elsewhere. Tickets are available throughout the week including Saturday.

Atmosphere

We've done our best to create an atmosphere catering to your favorite things. The old fashioned country store in the union selling penny candy, candles, pickles, cheese and crackers, and garters. Sleigh rides. Your Father's Mustache. Winter Olympics.

The snow sculpture theme is, also, OUR FAVORITE THINGS. Color is a requirement this year so watch for the best most colorful snow sculptures ever. (The Farmer's Almanac says that snow is on the way).

The most colorful button ever—7 colors, and one of the biggest—2¼", but still 25c.

The button symbolizes the entire weekend and that's why we ask that you wear it throughout the week. Buttons must be worn to all events. And when you wear your button you get free snowmobile rides, free coffee and donuts, a Carson ticket stub and your button get you into a dance free Saturday night before or after you go to the Carson concert.

Our Goal

Our goal was to stage the best Winter Carnival ever at this university, one that would have wide appeal through a varying range of events, and provide a lasting memory.

Our first consideration was YOU.

MAKE OUR FAVORITE THINGS ONE OF YOUR FAVORITE THINGS

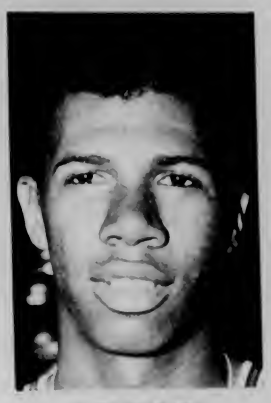
Perennial Powerhouse St. John's at Cage Tonight



Redmen Feature Strong Defense

By GLENN BRIERE
Sports Editor

St. John's basketball coach Lou Carnesecca, who eats, drinks and sleeps defense, brings his always-strong team into the Cage tonight for a Redmen vs. Redmen battle at 8 p.m. A frosh prelim against Worcester J.C. precedes at 6.

CARMINE CALZONETTI

JOHN WARREN

The Johnnies, always one of the nation's better defensive teams, are not doing quite as well as last year's squad which went 23-5 and went to the NCAA Eastern Regionals. Nevertheless, the Jamaica Redmen are still hoping for a post season tournament berth as they bring a 15-6 record into tonight's game.

Five of St. John's six losses were close ones, and the only team to beat them convincingly was Davidson. On the other hand, the Johnnies have beaten teams like Southern California, Boston College twice, Niagra and Notre Dame.

St. John's has been unquestionably hurt by the graduation of center Sonny Dove, who has been impossible to replace. But Carnesecca has a good, solid ball club which figures to go to at least the NIT, and more likely the NCAA.

Carnesseca's theory of basketball is in many ways similar to UMass coach Leaman's. St. John's, while not a slowdown team by any means, moves with caution and does not take wild shots. They take the shots they want to take, according to Carnesecca, and not the shots that their opponents want them to take.

While not a fast-breaking team, the Redmen do run when given the chance. And they play a fine defensive game, as seen by their opponents' average of 62.7 points a game.

St. John's has two of the best forwards around. One of them is 6'7 captain Rudy Bogad, a rugged performer who leads the team in rebounding. Although he averages only about 10 points a game, Bogad is a good scoring threat, with a good medium range jump shot.

Bogad, also a fine defensive player, moves very well for his size underneath the basket. He figures to be the best pro prospect on the team.

Joining Bogad in the frontcourt is John Warren, a 6'3 junior. Warren is fast and versatile, and can do anything. He is a great jumper, and he can score from both inside and out. The leading scorer on the team with a 16 point average, Warren is also St. John's best defensive player. He could have All-America potential for next year.

6'9 Junior Dan Cornelius is the center, and while he does not come close to Dove in talent, he is greatly improved over last year when he played very little. His job is mainly to rebound although he will occasionally hook. Strong underneath, Cornelius averages 7.4.

In the backcourt, St. John's is also well off. One of the guards is a smooth sophomore who has a great future at Jamaica, Joe DePre. A 6'4 speedster, DePre is the second best scorer on the squad with a 12 point average. He is a good outside shooter and handles the ball well.

Rounding out the lineup is the field general of Carnesecca's offense, 6'1 junior Carmine Calzonetti. The only player on the squad that doesn't come from the New York metropolitan area (Audobon, N.J., a suburb of Philadelphia), Calzonetti is a good ball handler with good speed He also has a great outside shot when unguarded.

Other players that figure to see a lot of action include guard Richie Jackson, a fine long-range shooter; 6'4 forward Mike Rowland, who has excellent moves to the basket; and Jack Bettridge, a 6'2 guard.

RUDY BOGAD

UMass, which has yet to beat St. John's in five tries, can hardly call this a "breather" between two important conference games. But if the local Redmen do not look ahead too much to Thursday's vital Conference game at the Cage against Rhode Island, the visiting Redmen may be in for a battle.

Aggies Out-Gun UMass

The Stockbridge Rifle Team scored its fourth straight win Wednesday night, defeating a joint team of UMass freshmen and Women's Rifle teams. Dave Sears was high scorer for Stockbridge with a 276 total, closely followed by Ken Levers with 275.

Dave Craig and Linda Dempsey scored 273 and 267 respectively for the UMass teams.

Next Saturday, Stockbridge travels to Dartmouth in an attempt to win their fifth in a row.

Frosh Icemen Lose, 5-3, to Salem

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

A rough hard skating Salem State sextet defeated the UMass frosh, 5-3, in an evenly played match at Orr Rink last night.

UMass played two times in the first period which ended in a 2-2 tie. Mike Murray put the Redmen on the scoreboard with the first of two goals at 5:14 in the first period. Murray crossed the Salem State blueline and then stick handled between two defense men before finally firing the shot into the lower right corner of the net.

Soon after Salem State tied the score with a goal by Dave Boucher. The freshman came back for UM at 14:08 when Ed Reilly fed Paul Reilly just inside the blueline. Paul Reilly made a nice pass to Tom Peters who caught the far corner of the net.

Again the visitors scored, this time on a goal by Dave Perkins. Salem went out in front, 4-2, on goals by Bruce Jandro and Ed Fox in the second period before Murray scored bringing the frosh to within one goal.

In the third period Salem added another when Chet Gary scored from Joe Gallagher to finish the scoring.

The Redmen missed several scoring opportunities in the last period. Tom Peters after taking a pass from Paul Reilly interposed with a shot. Soon after Woody Cook was robbed of a goal on a nice save by Salem goalie Bob Rowe when Cook tried to slap the puck by him.

Mike Murray played an outstanding game on defense for the freshmen as well as powering the offense with his two goals. The fine play of Paul Reilly and Tom Peters was also encouraging.

The loss brings the Redmen record to 3-4-1, while Salem has won 11 and lost 4. The last game for the freshmen is tomorrow afternoon at 4:15 at the Auxiliary Rink.

Frosh Hoopsters Hope To Regain Win Habit

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

Having suffered two consecutive tough losses, the UMass freshman basketball team hopes to regain its winning ways when it meets Worcester Junior College tonight in the Cage. The Little Redmen have also lost four of their last five to drop their season's mark to 8-6.

These last two losses for UM, to Holy Cross and UConn frosh have not been entirely of the Little Redmen's doing. In the H.C. contest, the frosh were handicapped by Frank Schaffeld's early foul trouble. However, they played their best game of the year.

Then, against UConn, UMass came from a 15 point halftime deficit to tie the game with only two minutes to go. A huge 33-8 UC advantage in foul shots was too much for the Little Redmen to overcome.

Freshman statistics emphasize the importance of Ken Mathias and his fine play throughout the year. Mathias is presently averaging 16.6 points on 90 field goals and 53 fouls for 233 points. He is also averaging 11 rebounds a game. Jim Ryan averages in double figures, scoring at a steady 13.5 points a game on 76 field goals and 40 free-throws.

Lou Griffith while playing before his injury was averaging 11.1; while Tom Nally, who has played until late in limited action is averaging 12.6. However, Nally, as a starter, is averaging 18 points.

The frosh are averaging 41% from the floor while outscoring their opponents 69 - 66 on the average.

3000 Attend Open Meeting at Curry Hicks; Thursday Ultimatum Given to Administration

UMass President John W. Lederle discussed various issues with approximately 3000 students last night at Curry Hicks Cage.

Staff Reporter

A gathering of nearly 3,000 students in the Cage last night heard nine speakers denounce University policy and heard the Administration defend and reply to the complaints.

What began last Thursday with a spontaneous sit-down in the Student Union wound up last night with a confrontation between a vocal minority backed by a strong cheering section.

The meeting which was billed as a "student power" movement began shortly before 8 p.m. with the arrival of the Administration and finally disbanded at 10:45 p.m. The meeting which was declared by the Administration to be formerly over by 9:30, continued with spontaneous discussion after the administrators left.

Nearly 3000 people attended last night's open meeting. A large number of faculty members were seen in the audience.

Dr. Mark Noffsinger, dean of students, opened the meeting with the reminder to the audience that the meeting represented a "tremendous responsibility and a superb opportunity."

There is a chance, he went on to say, "to bring credit to each individual here and to our university."

Noffsinger then stated that "without ground rules and order there will be no continuation of this meeting." The rules he submitted were that statements would first be made by the student speakers on the platform and then answered by the administrators present. Both questions and answers would be limited to three minutes. There were nine student speakers.

Noffsinger introduced President John W. Lederle, Provost Oswald Tippo, Dean William Field, Dean Edward Moore, and Prof. Joseph Marcus. Marcus was the moderator.

Marcus opened by stating that "this community is presumably made up of rational people." He went on to request order and said that the meeting would be opened up after the responses from the platform. He indicated that this would "hopefully start a discussion."

Definition of University

Helen Sullinger was the first speaker. She drew laughter from the audience with her remark that she was "speaking on the nature of the University and its role in society — in three minutes." She went on to say that "the University is a reflection of society" and that "society is and always will be, composed of haves and have-nots." She gave her definition of the University as it should be: "The University should be the prophet of society." This drew loud applause from the assembled group.

Miss Sullinger further stated that the University "should not be subject to outside forces — political or business . . . We as students should begin to educate our educators . . . so that the University can take its place as a prophet not a reflection of society."

President Lederle chose to comment on her statements. He began by reading Webster's definition of a university, and when he finished, he said "This gets us absolutely nowhere."

Lederle went on to explain that many people—"taxpayers, legislators, alumni — all have ideas on what the university should be . . . there is an uneasy balance that is always in flux. I would suggest that any social institution is bound to reflect society somewhat.

JOHN SEIGAL

"We do not want to straightjacket anyone," he declared. "I hope out of this discussion tonight will come a community," he said in closing.

Student Power Definition

Richard Marcus, a student, followed with his definition of "student power." He indicated that the decision makers were there because "we, the students, told them to come meet with us." He went on to say that the success of the University rests on maintaining order. "They (the administration) don't want you thinking."

Marcus finished by saying "you're not giving power to this committee, your giving power to yourself. Make use of it."

President Lederle answered Marcus' remarks saying, "The administration is not 'anti-student,! The purpose is to create an atmosphere in which students can develop as individuals."

He then reprimanded Marcus: "Don't try to create an artificial cleavage between the administration and the student body."

"Students Are Niggers"

Bob Wilfong, a long time member of University reform committees, took the stand next on the question of the program for the future and addressed himself to the statement "students are niggers," which he made Thursday.

Wilfong said, "The term niggers does not refer to color but to the quality of a person's status. It is a sub-human quality with no rights and privileges,

Faculty, Students Agree Change Is Long Overdue

By MARK SILVERMAN
Staff Reporter

Faculty members and students shared the same emotions and expectations of the open meeting in the cage last night.

The faculty view can be generalized by a statement attributed to one History Professor. "This is a good thing. Unfortunately, it did have to be initiated through pressure, and not through the administration. This meeting is certainly needed."

Another professor added, "Order and reason must be present. Unfortunately they weren't Thursday night. However, I do believe that if this thing (meeting) is continued in a reasonable manner, Thursday night will have been well worth its disorder."

Judging from the reactions of faculty members to the speakers, they appeared to sympathize with the demonstrators and with their basic goals. They were not opposed to major changes, and in fact felt that the proposed changes were long

In an unofficial MDC survey of 845 students yesterday, 501 said they would not attend last night's open meeting, and 344 students said they would attend. Those planning to attend were mostly underclassmen, while those planning not to attend were mostly upperclassmen. 3000 students and faculty attended the meeting last night.

Trustees Hear Reports On Med School, Hi-Riser

By RICHARD S. KLINE
News Editor

The UMass Board of Trustees, meeting yesterday in Whitmore Hall, heard student opposition to the proposed hi-rise dorm in the Northeast Quadrangle, listened to reports by University President John W. Lederle and on the progress of the Medical School in Worcester, and voted on the Trustee officers for the next year.

President Lederle reported to the policy makers that, 'Last Thursday we had on our campus what has been going on on many campuses . . . picketing. There is a minority of students, I think maybe even a majority, that think the University can be improved."

He said also that he was looking forward to last night's open meeting with students and hoped that, not only would he gain a better knowledge of student problems, but that the students would gain a better perspective of University problems.

Medical School Dean Lamar Soutter reported to the Board, that much progress was being made on the school and that the last talk that he had with the people in Washington last Friday. He stated that the progress is thought to be "on the track and moving ahead well." He added that it "looks as if it will be approved in June."

Presenting the student case against the building of a high-rise 14-story dorm in the Northeast Quadrangle was Carol Michelenko and Edward Bertucci, co-chairmen of the Northeast Quadrangle President's council subcommittee on housing and Fran Boronski, Vice-President of the Student Senate.

Senate President Collins Issues Statement After Monday's Meeting

By JAMES COLLINS, President
Student Senate

Last Thursday I advised President Lederle to hold an open meeting in order to discuss University concerns. Critical dialogue is, in my mind, never out of order. It is never to be feared. Last evening's proceedings, while initially producing honest comments between faculty, students, and administrators, ended as an insult to both one's intelligence and sense of honor.

Initial points relating to visiting privileges in the residence halls, revamping of the grading system, and present faults with the student government were valid and worthy of comment. However, purely inciting statements categorically denouncing student counselors as policemen who searched rooms at and for their pleasure, protesting the presence of CIA agents in the classroom, and citing widescale tapping of students' phones were untrue and more suitable to a Peking "hate" Russia rally.

The Student Senate was deemed complacent. While the Senate has numerous faults, it makes no pretensions of possessing complete truth or perfection. A democratic assembly, specially structured to allow one student one vote, with no special blocks of power, the Senate is, in the final analysis, as good as the students make it. If the student government has a saving grace, it is that it is capable of change. A few minutes of serious thought on how to make all student government, whether House, Senate, or judicial in nature more productive, would be far more worthwhile than demagogic speeches concerning student power. Lest the students be tyrannized by the very force they wish to engender, power must be utilized reasonably and honestly.

The deadline presented to President Lederle to "come across" with student demands was shortsighted and will ultimately decrease the power of the students. Since the existing methods agreed upon by students, faculty and administrators of attaining change at the University have not been expended and since administrative and faculty groups have to this point acted in good faith, no deadline will be recognized. An empty threat will merely fractionalize student unity. A distinction exists between Ghandian "civil disobedience" and blackmail. Lederle was presented with the latter, and should stand firm in refusing to have the University so intimidated.

The eighty people who sat-in last Thursday were sincerely concerned with the University. Such a pressure group should, theoretically, have the whole student body in its membership. A student legislature, whatever its structure, must be completed by an interested and vocal electorate. I do not believe that the group representing concerns last night left with any more followers than when they came to the Cage. Until planned and intelligent preparation precedes such open meetings, such groups should never receive the support of the student body. Until such preparation is attained, "madness without method" will cripple viable student power.

—a different computer run will be made for each school to insure that your dates will be exclusively from the University of Massachusetts.

—a rapid reply is guaranteed (2-3 weeks) if you forward your "response box" within 5 days of this publication.

Read the instructions and then proceed with the questionnaire. Before you fill in the "response box," you might want to make some copies for friends who would enjoy a new twist in computer dating.

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

After each question, you are given several alternatives for your response. For each question there is a corresponding number in the "response box." Merely write the number of the alternative you select after the appropriate number in the "response box." Then cut the "response box" out, and mail along with $3.00 to:

and as long as we stay students we will always be niggers."

Continuing he enumerated various living conditions on campus that he said contributed to the "nigger" quality of students. Specifically he said, "Because niggers can't learn, this means that this is not a University. This is a plantation, but we want a chance for learning and we want a University, now."

Wilfong called for mutual respect by and for all members of the campus community and stressed that "a lot of money is not needed for a good University."

"We don't have to beg the legislature for money. All we need is a few shacks to keep out the cold and people who are willing to teach and willing to learn."

Replying to Wilfong's idea Dean Edward C. Moore, of the graduate school said, "When I was a 'nigger' things were a lot worse." Dean Moore enumerated problems that existed when he was a student. He said that dorms, food and legislative problems were a lot worse.

Dean Moore said that times have changed, "the academic atmosphere is much better than it has ever been."

He said, "We are here as a community of learning and I think all of us have learned a great deal from this experience and I hope to learn more as the evening progresses."

Dorm Restrictions

John Siegal, one of the most popular speakers of the evening, took the stand and in a free and easy manner called for an abolishment of the second-class citizenship of the students.

"The difference between high school and college is that in college the words 'men's' and 'women's' are used on the rest room doors, instead of 'boys' and 'girls.' But it is dangerous to infer anything from rest room walls."

He said that the University's policy of declaring extracurricular activities as part of the educational process is used as a lever for controlling social life.

"They (the administration) still think they are dealing with a campus of 15,000 virgins or 7,000 virgins," he said.

Siegal received loud rounds of applause for his stand on open houses and student's rights. He listed the following demands that he wanted University action on:

1. Dorms offered on a competitive basis with off campus housing.
2. Dorms on a monthly rental basis so that students can get out when they want to.
3. Open house policy determined by the dorms.
4. Rights or tenants should be protected.
5. Removal of active spies like counselors and house mothers.
6. Meal tickets on a monthly or weekly basis.

Siegal reasoned that "If the cafeteria managers know they have to keep students coming back he'll think twice before he serves mystery meat."

7. Rules regulating dorm conduct have to go.

Open Houses

Bart Kaplan, graduate student, editor of the Mother of Voices and one of the leaders of last night's program then took the mike and addressed himself to the specific plans for the open house demands.

Kaplan said that the individual must be governed by his own morality and it can not be legislated.

"What effects the individual is a private decision and should be his alone," Kaplan said.

Presenting his ultimatum to the Administration, Kaplan called for action on the open house proposal by 2 p.m. on Thursday. Kaplan called for widespread disobedience of the open housing restrictions if nothing is done by that time.

President Lederle responded to the previous statements by Kaplan, by saying that "there are many things that Mr. Kaplan does not understand, that we have procedures for consultation at the University . . . they have not been fully used."

"Until last Thursday," said the president "these procedures have been functioning." He then stated that if students proceed "unilaterally" to make their own rules, there "will be serious repercussions."

Search and Seizure

Larry Mazel spoke next on "search and seizure." "Every one knows that the University condones this" he said regarding the alleged searching of students' rooms. He went on to cite that "counselors, members of student government and heads of residences" all have master keys.

Mazel hit the "unethical administration" and then turned to the subject of supposed informants on campus and said "We will not be informed on anymore; we will not have our phones tapped." A large minority of the audience applauded wildly. Mazel finished by saying, "We now accept the responsibility that the University has denied us."

Mazel was answered by Dean Field who said in regard to Mazel's charges of phone tapping, "Although rumors are hard to scotch . . . I have a written guarantee from New England Tel. and Tel. that no phone at the University has been tapped." He did, however, note one exception, where a student had received obscene phone calls.

In regard to the question of master keys, Field indicated displeasure that there are a large number of master keys. But he said, "they are to open rooms for those who lock themselves out." Loud applause followed this statement.

In answer to charges of illegal searches of students' rooms by "any counselor or head of residence," he said, "it is not appropriate." Field then urged any person who had knowledge of such practices to notify him. He said that "health and safety are the only reasons for a student's room to be entered."

Course Requirements

The next student representative to speak was Mary Sayre, on course requirements. "I don't think the present courses and requirements are properly preparing us for life in general." She went on to say that "requirements are an intimidation to the student." Speaking on changing the University Requirements, she said, "Innovation is necessary and it is not visible on this campus in regard to curriculum . . . Now it is the administration's turn to act responsibly towards us."

Provost Tippo answered Miss Sayre's statement by saying that no one in the administration has ever received a list of grievances "of this kind" from students.

He then announced that he had just received the "Cook Report" which was prepared by a faculty committee on curriculum requirements. The Provost cited some of the recommendations of the report which suggest many changes in the core requirements. The audience alternately applauded and hissed the proposals.

Grading

The next speaker was Allan Hurwitz, a student, on "grade intimidation." He opened by asking, "Why should there be a cume?" Then he asked, "Isn't the aim of the college to gain knowledge, not a computerized piece of paper?" He said that the only purpose of the cumulative average is to get jobs. "You can't walk around with a 2.5 or a 3.3 tattooed on your foreheads."

Hesuggested, "What we need is a pass-fail system." This was met with loud applause. "The change is coming. Why must we be the last because we are a state university?"

Once again Provost Tippo answered. He said that this spring the administration will "take another look at the pass-fail system."

"At least we have the beginning of a pass-fail system; we will improve it as we go along," he said.

Plan of Action

The next speaker for the student committee was Brian Richards. He spoke on "What we will do!"

He began, "The students have once again been told how the meeting will be run . . . the administration has once again had the last word." He said that the students will now have the final word and "The word is now!"

Talking about the open house issue, Richards declared, "What the students demand is open housing. They mean now!" He continued, "If they do not get open housing now, they will take it now! . . . Once they've got it, the administration can't take it back."

The crowd became more and more vocal, and Richards, standing and gesturing with the microphone, kept yelling louder: "We will not be told these things take time!" The audience roared its approval. "Things must change now!" Richards shouted and the crowd roared its approval.

Still gesturing wildly he said, "The reports are in and they say nothing . . . The students say the time is now!" He went on: "The students want an equal voice in how the University is run—and they will take it!"

He then delivered the same ultimatum already made to the administration: "The students want open houses Thursday at two o'clock, and they will take them at Thursday at two o'clock! . . . If they don't, come to the cage Thursday at two o'clock!"

President Lederle chose to answer Richards. He began, "Everyone would like to have everything they want now—but that is not the way the world works." He then answered Richards' charges that there are "C.I.A. stool-pigeons in the classrooms." He said that if anyone can name them, "we'll get them off campus." No one named any.

The President finished with the comment, "I think there's been some playing to the galleries here tonight."

7 Open Discussion

Following Lederle's statement, Prof. Marcus threw the meeting open to comments from the floor. He did, however, put a 9:30 time limit on the debate; it was then a little after nine o'clock. When one of the students on the platform, Richard Marcus, jumped up and made a statement saying, "We'll leave when everyone wants to leave," it was received with loud approval from the audience. Prof. Marcus said, "I meant I will leave the platform at 9:30." He then entertained comments from the audience.

The first to take one of the microphones placed around the floor was graduate student, Bill Wilkinson. First he criticized the Daily Collegian for what he called "yellow journalism." He charged that Editor-in-Chief Chet Weinerman had placed his "personal views" on the front page of Monday's paper in the form of an editorial criticizing the demonstrators.

Explaining that "you don't know what it means to be a nigger," Wilkinson, a Negro, leveled his criticisms at the tone of the meeting while applauding its aims.

There were several more speakers as the meeting became more tumultuous.

Professor Sidney Wexler spoke, maintaining, "We're all students. The University does not belong to any one of us, but to all of us . . . we are all in a common cause, that of learning." Prof. Marcus urged to Wexler to summarize quickly as the clamor from the audience rose.

Steve Kalish, a graduate student, claimed, "We are being fed pablum . . . some officials do have vested interests."

At 9:30 Prof. Marcus left the platform as he had said he would. Putnam Barber, a sociology instructor, took the stage and announced, "We can go on without Prof. Marcus." As the administrator started to follow Marcus, Bill Wilkinson spoke and convinced them to stay and hear a few more speakers. Barber took over as moderator and the discussion continued.

The discussion which became increasingly chaotic touched on many subjects, among them tenure, Vietnam and ROTC.

Barber said at one point, "We are taxpaying citizens of Massachusetts first, and students second." Another student said, "If you want something around here, you just have to get it yourself."

When one student questioned the place of ROTC at the University, claiming it is "anti-intellectual," President Lederle said, "ROTC is voluntary and provided for under the land-grant Act. I wouldn't want to deprive the students of their rights to it." After this remark Lederle left the platform quietly.

By now, many of the people in the audience left, leaving a small, but vocal, group continuing the discussion. Many students surrounded the platform and started grabbing for the microphone, while Barber tried to maintain order.

Dr. Noffsinger, assistant dean of students, stayed on the floor of the cage until the end of the meeting. He said he was "a little disappointed with some people on both sides, who should have acted with reason and didn't."

By the end of the meeting about 300 persons were left in the Cage. The willingness of those remaining to participate in further demonstration was discussed. It was finally decided that all those interested in continuing to pressure for open housing should attend tonights Student Senate meeting. Plans for protests on Thursday were also talked about, but specific plans were put off pending the Senate's action on the open housing bill tonight.

The Time Hasn't Come

Last night's meeting—confrontation—mass scene—debate—rally—was, measured by its audience response, needed: It fulfilled the emotional void of the "average" student. But this is not to say that the meeting was properly conducted by those of the Ad Hoc Committee who were spokesmen nor is it to say that the students have anyone but themselves to blame for their emotional condition vis a vis their role in University decision making.

The students at UMass probably will not, and should not, respond to the call for civil disobedience on Thursday by participating in illegal open houses. Nor, more importantly, should the students accept the dribble handed to them by the self-styled student representatives that (1) the administration does not listen to students or (2) the administration unreasonably insisted on groundrules for the Cage meeting or (3) the time has come to bypass normal channel or decision making and demand student power. All these assertions are totally untrue.

Because the student body has not put pressure on its student government or the faculty does not justify a demand for NOW, NOW, NOW. Because the student body has not considered the Cook report, vague demands for academic reform NOW, NOW, NOW, take rock-bottom priority in the minds of reasonable members of the community. And because the hundreds of students at the cage responded emotionally does not identify the Ad Hoc Committee leadership as the students' speakers.

Hopefully, as a result of this confrontation of the top four administrators (the President, Provost, Dean of Students, and Dean of the Graduate School) and the Ad Hoc leadership and the students who went to the cage and the faculty who attended—and the confrontation of those who were not necessarily there in person, the Student Senate and all the other students—hopefully, a new climate of awareness and scrutiny will emerge.

If those who insisted on student power last night would remain an interest group and would join the cause of transmitting student desires and of following up on the action taken or not taken—the job the Daily Collegian and the Student Senate claim to be doing—then the Ad Hoc Committee will deserve the respect of the student body. This is the role which the Ad Hoc Committee can play. If it attempts to play any other role, it should meet not only the opposition of the administration ("I can tell you there will be serious repercussion."—Lederle) but also the opposition of the student body.

The normal processes of meeting student demands have been used and used fruitfully although they have not been exhausted. No one has a right to say NOW, NOW, NOW, until he has first asked in a non-emotional manner.

Finally while the emotion evoked was by and large a good thing—it is good for the students to listen and to be moved—the discourtesy to the administrators present (which forced Professor Joseph Marcus to quit as moderator) and to the audience was in poor taste, the discourtesy is not expected to have lasting effects.

An administration willing to come to a mass meeting of students is not one unable to forget minor insults. An Ad Hoc Committee calling for dialogue should not insist that there never had been dialogue but should strive to follow up their confrontation by a role within the University community, not outside it.

The power and effectiveness of organizations like the Student Senate and the Daily Collegian are only as great (and fair) as the students who join them. The dissenters are invited and urged to remain active.

". . . Which crime in whose streets . . .?"

Orchard Is Underprivileged

There are two struggling complex units existing on this campus. But because of University priorities, lack of funds, or lack of complete confidence in the system, the residential college complexes, particularly Orchard Hill have been asked to "produce" while placed under severe limitations in its attempt to reach its goals. The University College Report states "the fundamental source of difficulty has been an attempt to superimpose flexibility on an intractable structure; the program was not planned until facilities were nearly complete and the latter have fixed stringent restraints on the former."

Through red tape and the inception of Southwest, it took three years to fully complete Orchard Hill and some of the things originally promised by the contractor still have not yet been completed. But while the center of campus activity has focused on Southwest and its 5000 students, Orchard Hill seems to have been by-passed in the process.

Orchard Hill as well as the Southwest complex was originally planned as a regular dormitory complex with no special facilities to support academic programs. And most types of classes simply cannot be conducted under existing space and lounge conditions. But Southwest has a tremendous advantage—Dining Commons that can double as recreational areas. The close proximity of a dining commons allows students mildly interested in movies, meeting or lectures to attend.

Education is an unconscious process. Unless what is offered at the residential college allows the student truly voluntary participation, he usually won't participate. Aside from the fact that faculty office space is practically non-existent, "Orchard Hill does not have even a dining commons in close proximity, thus further limiting its flexibility," and faculty fellows avoid getting too involved in a program or a system that does not provide sufficient results for themselves or, in their view, for the student.

Orchard Hill does not even have a blue print for the construction of such a facility once the bonding limit is raised by the state legislature. This is certainly an administration oversight.

A site for complex (to have office space, recreation space, classroom space, and a dining commons) was submitted more than two years ago. Such a facility could service the whole hill area. It could be financed by bonding for office space and classroom space. The dining commons runs as a private concern. Also perhaps this facility, as well as part of the Orchard Hill complex itself, could utilized by the proposed University College to be located near Orchard Hill. This proposal seems even more feasible if further dormitory building takes place in the old quadrangle.

The University must reevaluate its priorities (if it truly wants to see the Residential College experiment become a success).

Realistically, Orchard Hill desperately needs a Dining Commons-Recreational Facility Complex not only to achieve any of its goals, but also to survive as a semi-autonomous unique system.

UMass must make some adjustments in its attitude so that this community can be proud not only of the cake (the glistening buildings) but also some of the frosting that makes it more attractive. At that time this institution will be moving towards its professed goal, as expressed by President John Lederle attaining "the best of both."

Many Californians seem to be losing their cool about their university and state colleges.

Evidence that ranges from casual conversations and letters to newspaper editors to statements by prominent politicians and a variety of other individuals points to the conclusion that many citizens have lost confidence in the ability of their public institutions to carry on the process of higher education under conditions of reasonable stability.

The reactions of some legislators have been extreme, taking the form of suggestions that the budgets for both the university and state college systems be sharply cut or that a separate, statewide police force be established to maintain law and order on campus.

The criticisms cover a wide range but seem to have in common the belief that public campuses have become centers of personal and political anarchy and that college and university officials are doing little about this condition.

The extremes to which political leaders are willing to go in their attacks were demonstrated in a letter Assemblyman Leo J. Ryan (D-San Mateo) wrote to Charles J. Hitch, UC's new president, in early December.

Strong Words Used

After listing a series of events on public campuses which he found distasteful, Ryan said:

"Until I see strong leadership from the administration of our public institutions, and reasonable support from serious, competent and stable faculty, and until I see diligent and hard working students who are anxious to help tackle and solve some of the really serious problems that face the world, I can only conclude that the public institutions of higher learning in this state are best represented by the shouting mob, and that their symbol is the burning American flag and the nude man eating grapes." (A reference to an illustration in a campus newspaper to which Ryan took objection.)

This is demagoguery.

For the most part, California's public campuses have been quiet and orderly this year, much more so than those of several other states.

Of the 18 state colleges only three or four have experienced anything that could be described as disorder.

Four of the nine University of California campuses — Davis, Riverside, Santa Cruz and the San Francisco Medical Center—have had no demonstrations which broke either campus rules or local law, and three others—Irvine, San Diego and Santa Barbara—have had only minor incidents of trouble.

At UCLA a demonstration against recruiting by the Dow Chemical Co. in November led to disruption of the campus job placement center and slight property damage. As a result, 96 students have received warnings or disciplines.

Division Over the Draft Is Political and Moral

To the editor:

About a year ago, following a symposium held at the University on "The Draft: Problem for a Democratic Society," I was quoted in the press as saying that many students are in college to dodge the draft. What I actually said was that draft-dodging (politely called "deferment") is an important, though not sole, motive for college attendance. I would like now to amplify that statement because the world situation is even more desperate and the pressures of the draft more intense, and because I have had more opportunity to see the psychological consequences of student deferment.

Anyone who is plugged in to today's world realizes that opinion is deeply divided on the war in Vietnam and on the draft which makes possible American participation in that war. Many foreign policy experts, college faculty members, Senators and Congressmen, major newspapers, clergymen of all faiths (including the national leadership of most religious bodies) are sharply critical of the United States position in Vietnam. Every citizen is to some extent forced to take a stand, or make a choice, or participate in some way in the political-moral crisis that divides our nation.

A similar controversy surrounds the draft. In the months preceding July, 1967, when Congress took action to extend the Selective Service Act for another four years, oficial and public opinion was aroused by the draft's inequities. Much criticism centered on deferments. Two committees of respected citizens, one appointed by Congress, the other by the President, made recommendations aimed at correcting injustices in the draft laws. But Congress made almost no changes; Congressional debate was trivial and limited. The two committees might as well not have met.

The new draft law perpetuates deferments for college students who are pursuing a full academic program and are making normal progress toward graduation. Part-time students who have to work to finance an education and those delayed in their progress toward graduation are draft-eligible. The effect is to fill the military ranks with poor people, minority group members, and students with weaker high school backgrounds. The relatively well-educated, white, middle-class young man enjoys mandatory deferment as a student, while those who work part-time or take semester off from college face immediate 1-A classification.

One psychological effect on the sensitive student may be a feeling of guilt. At a level below consciousness perhaps, the college man must be vaguely aware that his deferment is at the expense of a less fortunate fellow, a neighbor in the same draft board district or more likely a non-neighbor from the other end of town, who has been conscripted to fight in Vietnam.

All of us are confronted with moral choices: whether the war in Vietnam is just or unjust, and whether the U.S. position there is right or wrong. Students who think about these alternatives must decide for themselves how to act or fail to act. Some may feel that, if the war is just and right, they should be participating in it. The student who believes that the American position is right might well ask himself why he sits on the sidelines while someone else fights the battle in his place. But if one feels the war is unjust, immoral, and futile, then he cannot feel comfortable unless he is doing all he can to stop it. He may become an anti-war activist; he may consider non-cooperation with the draft.

It is not enough to explain that being a student exempts one from such terrible choices, or that Uncle Sam has already conveniently made the choice. Quiet neutrality and fence-sitting in the presence of a desperately important moral crisis solve the problem only superficially. For sensitive students an inner tension is generated which may show itself in various "symptoms": confusion over values, difficulty concentrating, apathy, depression, anxiety.

To live in a personal world dominated by unresolved conflicts—about the war, the draft, the flunking of a course, the avoidance of moral commitment—can produce acute discomfort. Defense mechanisms of denial and repression which may seem to allow a business-as-usual style of University life also take their toll. One's energies may be dissipated and one's responsiveness to other human situations inhibited by efforts to blot out awareness of a personal dilemma. The war does not go away because we try not to think about it.

Students who understand this letter may wonder why the same dilemma does not affect faculty members. Why are young people required to make such decisions while older people, go on with quiet academic lives? A fair question. It deserves an answer from all of us who avoid the draft in various respectable ways. Do the silent members of our University community feel there are no questions, no dilemmas, no crisis of conscience?

New Draft Ruling Adds To Hypocrisy of System

To the editor:

With increasing numbers of American young people protesting armed forces recruiters on campuses, picketing draft boards, burning draft cards, rushing to Canada, Sweden and elsewhere . .

With men being jailed, fined, clubbed, gassed, and called traitors for taking these actions.

With an army of over half a million men not even old enough to vote for the men who send them 10,000 miles away to kill and be killed . . .

With a quarter of these fighting men black Americans who cannot afford the luxury of college deferment and who find the killing ground is the only one where they are accepted as equals, who if lucky enough to survive come back to a society which daily reminds them that their plight is not far different from that of the Vietnamese struggling against a corrupt regime propped up by white money and arms, and finally who then assume here the militant guerilla role which they almost died to destroy over there . . .

With a congressional study having shown that the draft could be abolished with a saving both in money and in conscience damage . . .

With these and many other indications that the draft, particularly today, is viciously unfair, the government has decided to settle the problem in typically inept fashion. Claiming to make the system more fair by going after the privileged sanctuary of graduate study, the government has in fact only rubbed salt in the wounds, aggravating a situation which has already become intolerable. The new law cuts a bloody swath in college teaching by tearing out the graduate assistants who carry so much of the teaching load and makes it impossible for a college graduate school to plan ahead. If the next generation is to prevent the horrors we live through today, it must have teachers; but the already appalling shortage of teachers will only be made intolerable by the new law.

The one hope lies in the fact that this new law may ironically serve to destroy the draft system faster than any protest movement ever could have dreamed possible. If 150,000 new recruits in July are college graduates, of voting age, how many of them will submit to the outrage which many of them already have been protesting on American campuses? If they submit, will they not speak out as their conscience dictates, consequently sowing discontent and chaos in the ranks? Finally, if they reach the front line, how many poets are good killers?

The only proper solution, one which is as cynical as the hypocritical system which has brought about this foul law and this obscene war, is for the United States to create a standing professional army. With an S.S. like Hitler's or a Foreign Legion like colonial France's, America could finally shed the last vestige of pretense and assume its historical position with the other imperial powers of the past, under the inspiring banner not of "lebensraum" but of "West More Land!"

Frosh Candidate Tells Why

To the editor:

The campus is so big, and the student body so large, that my desire to meet the entire Freshman class is practically impossible in the short time available. Though wallpapering the campus with hundreds of signs would familiarize my name, I shall not do so, because I feel that it is the person, not a name written on a posterboard that counts.

To many of you, I assume that the Student Senate means open house legislation, and that this is a major factor in your vote. I am in favor of self determination of open houses by the residence halls. But there is so much more to the Senate. The student government handles a wide variety of problems ranging from food service complaints to approval of R.S.O. charters, the Collegian budget and beyond. In the long run, it is the total view that counts, and not just one issue. If elected, I promise to conscientiously perform the full range of tasks demanded from the Senator at Large of your class.

One final point. Obviously I have left much unsaid here. Should you wish to ask me a question, or make an arrangement so that you could see what I look like, my telephone number is 6-7170. I invite your calls.

Let's Keep Southwest a Coed Living Area

To the editor:

Recently there have been rumors about the possibility of turning the Towers in the Southwest Complex into dormitories for women only. Reasons for depriving the male members of the campus from living in the newly built Towers mainly center around the damage that is caused. I find that this is close to the truth but at the same time I also know that the University asks for trouble.

I suspect that it is the freshmen and sophomores of the Towers that cause most of the senseless acts of destruction in the name of what they call "fun." If you take a look at Prince House I am sure that you will find a remarkable difference in the way things are treated. It seems to me that most of the young college men and women do not appreciate what they have and never will until it is taken away from them. However, I believe that these "boys" are not entirely at fault.

The lamps that were seen on each of the floor lounges were made of cheap plastic and were not stable, and therefore fell over easily. There were a number of such mistakes made in the furnishing of the dormitory. I still don't know why they put wall-to-wall carpeting on the ground floor.

If the University is going to make any housing changes, I think the possibility of creating "Coed Towers" should not be ruled out. Men and Women in the same dormitory may solve the current problems of the Administration. Each female will influence the behavior of each male and vice-versa; a system of "countervailing powers" could be created.

Faculty Urged to Protest War thru Tax

To the editor:

Our tax money is supporting the immoral and destructive action of our government in Vietnam. We who are signed below have in our various ways protested American involvement in the war. At the same time, we must admit our own guilt and responsibility, for a part of the money we pay in taxes has gone to support the war.

We may not be able to change this policy, although that must always be our aim. What we can do, however, is to protest our forced complicity. We urge those who share our views to join us in a protest against paying those Federal Taxes which finance the war we condemn.

A number of forms of protest are possible.

First, you may refuse to pay the 10% Federal Tax on your telephone bill. This tax was increased in 1966 from 3% to 10% specifically to finance the increasing cost of the war in Vietnam. Thousands of people are refusing to pay this tax. Refusal does not result in disruption of telephone service, as this is not an act against the telephone company.

Second, concerning Federal Income Tax, you may do one of three things:

(1) Pay your tax, but enclose a letter of protest stating that you oppose the war and that you pay only under threat of punishment;

(2) Pay uour tax, but file IRS Form 843, claiming a tax refund for 25% of the amount — the percentage of our national budget we estimate goes to the war in Vietnam;

(3) Refuse to pay any part of your income tax over which you have control, up to 25% of the total amount due.

This third alternative is, of course, illegal; but we are reminded of Thoreau, who wrote, "It is not desirable to cultivate a respect for the law, so much as for the right."

We further urge you to send copies of your letter to your congressmen and to the President. We suggest the following central considerations: (a) the war in Vietnam has not been declared by Congress and is therefore illegal under the Constitution of the United States, including the Charter of the United Nations; (b) the war in Vietnam is a crime against Humanity; and (c) taxes require you to finance and thus participate in military activities to which you have conscientious objection based upon moral principles.

"Where the Time of Your Life Is Right Under Your Nose"

A visit to any one of the Your Father's Mustache banjo emporiums is like journeying to some of the golden eras of America's past. It is the Gay 90's, a prohibition speakeasy, a World War I recruiting center, the uninhibited atmosphere of the Roaring '20's, the splendor of Tiffany glass and what might have been John L. Sullivan's neighborhood bar, all rolled into one. A team of professionals from the Boston Club will arrive early Friday afternoon to decorate the Student Union Ballroom and recreate the atmosphere of the original Mustache Nite Clubs.

MUSTACHE BANJO BAND

Once inside Your Father's Mustache it's a hand-clapping, foot-stomping evening of happy music and old-fashioned fun.

Format of the banjo emporium is uninhibited fun and plenty of nostalgia. Patrons singalong with "The World's Worst Banjo Band" in a setting which blots out the world of supersonic rockets and big beat music.

BYRDS FEATURED SUNDAY

The Byrds, who will be featured in "the Righteous Brothers Show" Sunday, have been described as the best group in America by the leaders of the pop music scene, the Beatles. Led by Jim McGuin, the innovators of "folk-rock" will join the new Righteous Brothers, comic Frank Welker, and folk singer Glen Campbell in a two hour show.

The Byrds began their musical careers with their first hit, "Mr. Tambourine man" and have since had numerous millions selling singles and albums. Bob Dylan has said of them: "They're cutting across all kinds of barriers which most people who sing are not even hip to. They know it all. If they keep their minds open, they'll come up with something pretty fantastic." They already have.

Frank Welker is a natural comic who is sensitive, creative, and full of talent. He has appeared at the Purple Onion in San Francisco and the Steel Pier in Atlantic City.

In 1961, Glen Campbell, whose fame as a singer with a voice as vibrant as it is gentle, and with a range not often equalled, had become as well known as was the magic of his guitar playing. His first national hit was "Turn Around, Look at Me". His most recent release is "By the Time I Get to Phoenix."

Johnny Carson, 'Doc' Severinsen To Appear in Cage Saturday Night

The Johnny Carson Show comes to Curry Hicks cage Saturday night. Appearing with Carson will be "Doc" Severinsen and the N B C orchestra, singer Ce Ce Grant, and dancers Bud and CiCi Robinson.

In 1936 when Rudy Vallee was working his magic on the largest radio audiences ever, an 11 year-old boy was using his own brand of magic to entertain Midwestern audiences at civic clubs and local theaters. Billed "The Great Carsoni", Johnny Carson performed magic tricks and sleight-of-hand stunts.

Twenty-six years later, that young magician was to become the lovable Svengali of the pajama set, captivating about nine million television viewers each week night on the "Tonight" show.

While appearing as the "great Carsoni" in high school and later in the U. S. Navy, Carson developed the necessary showmanship and presence to be able to jump with ease from a riotus, rakish burlesque sketch to in-depth serious discussions with national leaders.

Johnny Carson chose a career in broadcasting after graduation from the University of Nebraska. His reputation was such that he had his pick of jobs. Soon he had his own West Coast radio show and eventually his own network show from California.

As a comedy writer, Carson came to the attention of Red Skelton. Called in only hours before air time, Carson substituted for Skelton on network television when the star had an accident.

His appearance for Skelton was so well received he was signed to host the network show "Who Do You Trust?" from New York. He starred in the program for five seasons.

In October, 1962, Carson took over the NBC Television Network's "Tonight" show and several months later he had established himself so well that the ratings and network earnings soared to new heights.

In the Summer of 1964 Carson played his first major night club engagement in Las Vegas where he broke the Sahara's attendance records. He repeated his record-breaking appearance there in 1965 and was invited back for a third engagement for a month in 1966. In early 1967 he played two sets of two-week appearances there.

Since 1964 he has appeared in major cities across the country, entertaining "Tonight" show fans from every state.

Carson and his wife, Joanne, now have a home in Las Vegas as well as their expansive New York City apartment. He has three sons by his first marriage: Chris, Ricky and Cory.

He puts aside hobbies as soon as he masters them. He learned to fly and sail and now is interested in photography. He also "dabbles" in astronomy, and enjoys working with his home video tape recording.

The "Carsoni" magic is undeniably strong. Beginning his fifth season as host of "Tonight," Carson's viewing audience is larger than ever. Ticket reservations to attend the taping of the show are sometimes booked as much as a year ahead of time.

CE CE GRANT

In 1967, Carson was named "Man of the Year" by the March of Dimes, and was pictured on the cover of both Time and Look magazines.

In addition to a one hundred per cent effort on the part of the Winter Carnival Committee to bring the best possible entertainment to campus, a number of innovations have been attemptd. To insure order at entrance to all Cage concerts doors will open one hour before show time, areas will be roped off to aid the crowd in forming orderly lines, and extra policemen have been added to the concert security staffs.

Philosophy Grad Student Appraises "Spectrum"

By ANTHONY STIGLIANO

A philosophy grad student interested in student publication.

"Spectrum," described as a general interest magazine, marks (I am told) the presentation of a new publication for the express purpose of giving voice to the artistic side of student life at UMass. Despite this, there is a paucity of University talent represented.

Perhaps one should not expect too much from the student body since the talented among them should have a journal of the arts, rather than a potpourri of psychedelia and color trickery which does no more than startle the senses and leave the more serious reader disappointed.

What is to be expected from a "general interest" magazine? Certainly, it cannot (and should not) try to hold the interests of every person. But neither should it be so narow as to appeal only to an elite group of allenated intellectuals.

It should be an open space, a place for one to breathe freely, away from the loud desperation of dormitory ant-colonies. It should not try to cater to the illiterate fads produced by people who know nothing and care nothing about art.

It must be an organ in which people who have never attempted to create, would find their need to express themselves and be heard.

We cannot expect new voices to make important ideas and precious feelings known in a magazine that presents that most humane of human expressions, art, in a fragmented, loose-ended, faddish, slickly produced vehicle.

The individual works, especially the poetry of Mr. Kerr, Mr. Shaw, and Miss Farber, are professional and of the highest literary quality. The fiction, particularly Mr. Shaw's 'Judgement of Paris," was worthy of a more widely distributed magazine. Despite these authors' skill and talent, I felt that there was something missing.

The poetry struck me as being merely constructions of sentences rather than creative expressions that emerge from deeply felt intuitions. There was too much of the attempt to write so as to titillate, to make the reader attentive for the moment without his having something significant revealed to him.

After reading through the magazine, I had no sense of having been illuminated or having made an important discovery about either myself or my environment. An exception to this was Mr. Shaw's striking recollection of Southern life.

But the memoir remains strictly personal, and I find myself as an observer, nodding my head with detached interest. I felt no need for commitment nor did I find any relevancy to my experience.

The art work, especially the cover, struck me as being poor. The irritating and pointless illustration accompanying Mr. Kerr's "Fire Talk" is a case in point. Its harshness, and the placing of the poem deprived the work of its position at the center as the reader's conscious imagination. Again, the art work was overly slick and commercial, not founded upon a need to create, but rather a need to illustrate.

The photography was the high point of the magazine. The works of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Williams were sensitive and reveal solid talent. But their juxtaposition to each other and to Mr. Shaw's poem "The Park Attendant" was such that the strength of their meanings were decremented.

This is a far cry from the placing of the fine photograph of Mr. Springer and the equally fine poem of Mr. Kerr. The placing and balancing of the two media of word and picture provides a strong feeling of tension and sensitivity to the human condition as experienced by poet and photographer.

This is the exception and not the rule, however. The relation of word, picture, line and color is very crude, detracting from the overall experience of reading the magazine.

I came away from the magazine disappointed by the lack of coherence and the lack of sensitivity displayed by the organization. More importantly, I felt concern at the lack of University participation.

Earlier I said that this may be the failure of the magazine. Certainly, the lack of communication and intellectual life on campus is responsible. It may be that the editors will have no choice but to rely on outside material unless this school wakes up from its creative lifelessness.

However, such a magazine may provide the blood for a cultural awakening on this jejune campus. It may provide the eye of reflection through which we may see ourselves and express that experience of self-awareness (both personal and collective) in art, and, above all, in human communication.

Canadian Liberal Govt. Defeated in Surprise Upset

OTTAWA (AP)—Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson's minority Liberal government suffered a surprise two-vote defeat in the House of Commons Monday night on a bill to increase income taxes.

Opposition Conservatives shouted, "Resign! Resign! Resign!" after the 84-82 upset, but the House adjourned until Tuesday with nobody certain about the next move.

Pearson, 70, announced in December that he plans to leave office in the spring. He was in Jamaica on vacation Monday and not expected in Ottawa until Wednesday.

The Liberals have been in power since 1963, retaining office largely with minority party support when faced with nonconfidence motion.

The Liberals apparently were caught unprepared for a vote Monday night on the bill to impose a 5 per cent surcharge on income taxes and to speed up collection of corporation taxes.

Ordinarily, the government would be forced to resign after defeat on such an important bill.

But confused circumstances surrounding the vote — and the imminence of a Liberal convention to choose Pearson's successor—left the result in doubt.

In the Liberal lobby, MPs asked: "What now?"

The defeat touched off a turmoil in the Commons unmatched in years. Former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, amid thunderous opposition cheers and desk-banging, said the government must resign as his Conservative government had been forced to do in 1963.

A confused sequence of events leading to Monday night's upset apparently was set off when Deputy speaker Herman M. Batten began to call the vote without realizing that the government was not prepared for it.

After some argument, Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp said he had no objection to letting it go ahead. The division bells calling members to the chamber rang for 75 minutes—far longer than the average of 15. But when the tally began, the government apparently had thought it had enough members present to carry the issue.

Sixty Conservative members joined with 15 New Democrats, five Creditistes, three Social Credit MPs and Gilles Gregoire, an independent, to produce the upset.

NEW ANALYSIS . . .

overdue.

Student expectations for the meeting were generally hopeful but cautious. One junior said, "I think that this is something we should have had a long time ago. I really think that if we can conduct this thing in a responsible way, we can really help ourselves. If we don't, I think we'll ruin ourselves."

Many students were surprised that the speakers from the administration would be limited, like their student counterparts, to three minutes each. This time limit was, however, not generally liked.

Both faculty and students agreed on the need for not defying the existing system in order to initiate change. But both were firmly convinced that change must come now.

The feeling by some that the meeting was a success, if only as a beginning, can be illustrated by the following statement of Putnam Barber, Sociology Professor. "The score is now UMass 30, Visitors 0." UMass, according to Mr. Barber, represents the total commitment of interested and sincere students and faculty members. The visitors are the hard core, who advocate wild changes and near anarchy for the purpose of attacting attention.

TRUSTEE MEETING . . .

The representatives, stating their case against the proposed building, told the Trustees of studies carried out by the President's Council and the Student Senate that showed reasons why the building should not be built in that area. (Daily Collegian Monday, February 19, 1968).

Concerning the alternative of low rise dorms to high, Trustee John Haigis of Greenfield said, "We'd just as soon run right out to South Deerfield, but you run into problems."

The entire problem was not voted on, but rather placed under study.

Passed by the Trustees were the plans for a Campus Boulevard, continuing from its present end at Southwest, between the Newman Center and the Baptist Church.

Also reported was the Student Senate rejection of the proposed program for open houses.

After reading portions of a statement by Collins in the Monday, February 19, Daily Collegian and the front page editorial by Editor-in-Chief Chet Weinerman, one Trustee, speaking unofficially on behalf of the board, said that it seems to prove that there is "some thoughtful and responsible leadership among the students."

LBJ's Travel Plans Unannounced

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson, back from his most secret major domestic trip, said Monday much of his traveling in this election year likely will be done without much advance notice.

As Johnson's big jet neared Washington early Monday, the President discussed with newsmen the secrecy that had cloaked most of his movements in the preceding 33 hours.

"I think you're going to find most of my trips are going to be without much advance notice," he said.

The President said "military security" was the first consideration.

Johnson said he was very conscious that the Communists were launching new offensives in Vietnam as he left Washington, suggesting he wanted to feel free to alter his plans quickly had events in Southeast Asia made that necessary.

Soldier in Vietnam Asserts "They Took Our Weapons Away"

MARLBORO, Mass. (AP)—"Dad, we got mortared last night and nobody had a g-d weapon."

A father made public Monday a letter from his soldier son in Vietnam making that assertion, and asking that the soldier's congressman be informed.

The father, Alfred Busa, said he had informed Rep. Philip J. Philbin, D-Mass., and had been assured by Philbin that an immediate investigation would be undertaken.

The father identified his son as Alfred Busa Jr., 21, a specialist 4th class in the Army's 4th Division. He made public this partial text of his son's letter, which was postmarked Feb. 9, and received Feb. 15.

"Hi Dad:

"Well, this is not going to be one of my everything's fine letters. I'm not hurt or anything but I do have a lot I would like you to inform our congressman about.

"Yesterday they took our weapons away from us. The 4th division took them away, dad, and they locked them up. They say we won't need them while we are on base camp.

"Dad, we got mortared last last night and nobody had a g-d weapon. We were lucky, dad, Charlie Viet Cong didn't try a ground attack. He just mortared us, but if he had I doubt if any of us would be here to write these letters today. . ."

"Oh, I almost forgot. After the mortar stopped, we were allowed to get our weapons in case Charlie did come through but they took the damn things away again this morning and they're not going to let us have them back tonight. . ."

The father said in informing Rep. Philbin about his son's letter he expressed some doubts about disclosing the matter. Busa said Philbin assured him there "would never be repercussions over a letter written a father about conditions in Vietnam."

National News Roundup

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — More than half a million Florida public school children were shut out of classes Monday by the nation's first statewide teacher walkout.

One-third of the state's teachers — 25,077 of 60,844 — already had resigned Monday with 12 counties not yet reporting, according to figures from the state Department of Education and county school boards.

The teachers' spokesman here said another 13,000 would quit today.

All classes were cancelled in 22 counties with combined enrollment of 556,155.

Four other counties closed part of their schools Monday for lack of teachers. Some that were open Monday plan to close today, a few for the whole week.

The teachers, acting through their professional organization, the Florida Education Association, began the walkout after rejecting as insufficient last Friday a legislative program for increasing financial support to public schools.

There was no picketing as most of the teachers who resigned joined in 21 mass meetings around the state.

The teachers say their resignations were legal and not in conflict with Florida's law barring strikes by public employees, but an aid to Gov. Claude Kirk said the teachers were on strike.

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—A pre-dawn tornado ripped along a business - lined main street and tore at homes Monday, leaving 17 persons injured and an estimated $2.5 million worth of damage in this winter resort city.

The U.S. Weather Bureau said there was no sign of a tornado on its radar scope during regular checks, but later said the pattern of damage indicated the swirling winds of a tornado had been present.

Tornadoes are extremely rare in the Miami area.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A telescope near Tucson, Ariz., has snapped the first photos of a spacecraft orbiting the moon.

The 61-inch telescope, at the Univ. of Ariz. planetary lab, caught the refrigerator-sized Lunar Orbiter 5 in orbit Jan. 21, 10 days before scientists of NASA sent it crashing into the lunar surface.

Dr. Gerald Kuiper, director of the lab, said the telescopic photographs show the spacecraft as resembling a star. It is too tiny to be seen with the naked eye.

Roxbury Work-Study Project This Summer

This summer the Roxbury Work Study Project will offer 150 college students the opportunity to participate in a program of physical and social renewal in the Washington Park area of Roxbury.

The interracial group of students will be professionally supervised to paint the exterior of houses and make some minor repairs. In addition, students will spend some time on tutorial and recreational projects for neighborhood children.

The students will live in a dormitory at Northeastern University—this housing will be provided free. Neighborhood Improvement Aides, as the student workers are titled, will be paid a wage; some scholarships will be available at the end of the summer, awarded on the basis of need and qualifications.

Area residents are urged to cooperate with the project participants, thus increasing the involvement of these students with the community. The Project is sponsored by the Boston Redevelopment Authority and the Freedom House, Inc., a non-profit civic and cultural center in Roxbury.

Efforts will be made through the evening lecture and group discussion programs to acquaint the students with community concerns and issues.

During the past four summers the Roxbury Work Study Project has been a success in the community. If you are interested in working with the Project this summer, please contact your placement officer for further information.

Winter Carnival '68:
OUR IMPROVEMENTS

Unifying Theme

OUR FAVORITE THINGS. A general statement covering everyone's likes. To appeal to all we attempted to combine universal and personal events and talent. We want to make OUR FAVORITE THINGS one of your favorite things.

Our colorful design symbolizes Winter Carnival '68. It appears on all Winter Carnival favors: the booklet, button, garter and shotglass.

Talent

Johnny Carson, Righteous Brothers, Byrds, Buckinghams, Your Father's Mustache, and "Doc" Severinson. The best entertainment available in the country.

The choice of more than 100 people and the university's professional staff. Negotiations on Johnny Carson began last summer, but The Buckinghams were signed only five days ago (we had a chance to get the third best group in the country so we acted fast)

Concert Consideration

We condensed Winter Carnival into five days rather than stretching out over two weekends.

All concerts will have roped off, police-controlled lines. If you've waited for an hour to be first inside, you'll be the first one inside.

And once you are inside, take any seat—once the doors are open there are no reserved seats. In the past Sunday concerts started in the sunny early afternoon. Daylight destroys atmosphere so we rescheduled the Righteous Brothers concert to 5:30 when it's dark.

Tickets

Wonder why there weren't any lines? It wasn't because we weren't selling many tickets (we've sold nearly 13,000 as of Monday). It's because we had two ticket lines. Tickets were on sale exclusively at the university for a full week. Even now the only tickets being sold off campus are for the Johnny Carson Concert. When the Righteous Brothers concert sells out, we want it to sell out here.

Ticket prices. In considering the price, first consider the talent. You'd pay $2.00 more to see the same concerts elsewhere. Tickets are available throughout the week including Saturday.

Atmosphere

We've done our best to create an atmosphere catering to your favorite things. The old fashioned country store in the union selling penny candy, candles, pickles, cheese and crackers, and garters. Sleigh rides. Your Father's Mustache. Winter Olympics.

The snow sculpture theme is, also, OUR FAVORITE THINGS. Color is a requirement this year so watch for the best most colorful snow sculptures ever. (The Farmer's Almanac says that snow is on the way).

The most colorful button ever—7 colors, and one of the biggest—2¼", but still 25c.

The button symbolizes the entire weekend and that's why we ask that you wear it throughout the week. Buttons must be worn to all events. And when you wear your button you get free snowmobile rides, free coffee and donuts, a Carson ticket stub and your button get you into a dance free Saturday night before or after you go to the Carson concert.

Our Goal

Our goal was to stage the best Winter Carnival ever at this university, one that would have wide appeal through a varying range of events, and provide a lasting memory.

Our first consideration was YOU.

MAKE OUR FAVORITE THINGS ONE OF YOUR FAVORITE THINGS

Redmen Feature Strong Defense

By GLENN BRIERE
Sports Editor

St. John's basketball coach Lou Carnesecca, who eats, drinks and sleeps defense, brings his always-strong team into the Cage tonight for a Redmen vs. Redmen battle at 8 p.m. A frosh prelim against Worcester J.C. precedes at 6.

CARMINE CALZONETTI

JOHN WARREN

The Johnnies, always one of the nation's better defensive teams, are not doing quite as well as last year's squad which went 23-5 and went to the NCAA Eastern Regionals. Nevertheless, the Jamaica Redmen are still hoping for a post season tournament berth as they bring a 15-6 record into tonight's game.

Five of St. John's six losses were close ones, and the only team to beat them convincingly was Davidson. On the other hand, the Johnnies have beaten teams like Southern California, Boston College twice, Niagra and Notre Dame.

St. John's has been unquestionably hurt by the graduation of center Sonny Dove, who has been impossible to replace. But Carnesecca has a good, solid ball club which figures to go to at least the NIT, and more likely the NCAA.

Carnesseca's theory of basketball is in many ways similar to UMass coach Leaman's. St. John's, while not a slowdown team by any means, moves with caution and does not take wild shots. They take the shots they want to take, according to Carnesecca, and not the shots that their opponents want them to take.

While not a fast-breaking team, the Redmen do run when given the chance. And they play a fine defensive game, as seen by their opponents' average of 62.7 points a game.

St. John's has two of the best forwards around. One of them is 6'7 captain Rudy Bogad, a rugged performer who leads the team in rebounding. Although he averages only about 10 points a game, Bogad is a good scoring threat, with a good medium range jump shot.

Bogad, also a fine defensive player, moves very well for his size underneath the basket. He figures to be the best pro prospect on the team.

Joining Bogad in the frontcourt is John Warren, a 6'3 junior. Warren is fast and versatile, and can do anything. He is a great jumper, and he can score from both inside and out. The leading scorer on the team with a 16 point average, Warren is also St. John's best defensive player. He could have All-America potential for next year.

6'9 Junior Dan Cornelius is the center, and while he does not come close to Dove in talent, he is greatly improved over last year when he played very little. His job is mainly to rebound although he will occasionally hook. Strong underneath, Cornelius averages 7.4.

In the backcourt, St. John's is also well off. One of the guards is a smooth sophomore who has a great future at Jamaica, Joe DePre. A 6'4 speedster, DePre is the second best scorer on the squad with a 12 point average. He is a good outside shooter and handles the ball well.

Rounding out the lineup is the field general of Carnesecca's offense, 6'1 junior Carmine Calzonetti. The only player on the squad that doesn't come from the New York metropolitan area (Audobon, N.J., a suburb of Philadelphia), Calzonetti is a good ball handler with good speed He also has a great outside shot when unguarded.

Other players that figure to see a lot of action include guard Richie Jackson, a fine long-range shooter; 6'4 forward Mike Rowland, who has excellent moves to the basket; and Jack Bettridge, a 6'2 guard.

RUDY BOGAD

UMass, which has yet to beat St. John's in five tries, can hardly call this a "breather" between two important conference games. But if the local Redmen do not look ahead too much to Thursday's vital Conference game at the Cage against Rhode Island, the visiting Redmen may be in for a battle.

Aggies Out-Gun UMass

The Stockbridge Rifle Team scored its fourth straight win Wednesday night, defeating a joint team of UMass freshmen and Women's Rifle teams. Dave Sears was high scorer for Stockbridge with a 276 total, closely followed by Ken Levers with 275.

Dave Craig and Linda Dempsey scored 273 and 267 respectively for the UMass teams.

Next Saturday, Stockbridge travels to Dartmouth in an attempt to win their fifth in a row.

Frosh Icemen Lose, 5-3, to Salem

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

A rough hard skating Salem State sextet defeated the UMass frosh, 5-3, in an evenly played match at Orr Rink last night.

UMass played two times in the first period which ended in a 2-2 tie. Mike Murray put the Redmen on the scoreboard with the first of two goals at 5:14 in the first period. Murray crossed the Salem State blueline and then stick handled between two defense men before finally firing the shot into the lower right corner of the net.

Soon after Salem State tied the score with a goal by Dave Boucher. The freshman came back for UM at 14:08 when Ed Reilly fed Paul Reilly just inside the blueline. Paul Reilly made a nice pass to Tom Peters who caught the far corner of the net.

Again the visitors scored, this time on a goal by Dave Perkins. Salem went out in front, 4-2, on goals by Bruce Jandro and Ed Fox in the second period before Murray scored bringing the frosh to within one goal.

In the third period Salem added another when Chet Gary scored from Joe Gallagher to finish the scoring.

The Redmen missed several scoring opportunities in the last period. Tom Peters after taking a pass from Paul Reilly interposed with a shot. Soon after Woody Cook was robbed of a goal on a nice save by Salem goalie Bob Rowe when Cook tried to slap the puck by him.

Mike Murray played an outstanding game on defense for the freshmen as well as powering the offense with his two goals. The fine play of Paul Reilly and Tom Peters was also encouraging.

The loss brings the Redmen record to 3-4-1, while Salem has won 11 and lost 4. The last game for the freshmen is tomorrow afternoon at 4:15 at the Auxiliary Rink.

Frosh Hoopsters Hope To Regain Win Habit

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

Having suffered two consecutive tough losses, the UMass freshman basketball team hopes to regain its winning ways when it meets Worcester Junior College tonight in the Cage. The Little Redmen have also lost four of their last five to drop their season's mark to 8-6.

These last two losses for UM, to Holy Cross and UConn frosh have not been entirely of the Little Redmen's doing. In the H.C. contest, the frosh were handicapped by Frank Schaffeld's early foul trouble. However, they played their best game of the year.

Then, against UConn, UMass came from a 15 point halftime deficit to tie the game with only two minutes to go. A huge 33-8 UC advantage in foul shots was too much for the Little Redmen to overcome.

Freshman statistics emphasize the importance of Ken Mathias and his fine play throughout the year. Mathias is presently averaging 16.6 points on 90 field goals and 53 fouls for 233 points. He is also averaging 11 rebounds a game. Jim Ryan averages in double figures, scoring at a steady 13.5 points a game on 76 field goals and 40 free-throws.

Lou Griffith while playing before his injury was averaging 11.1; while Tom Nally, who has played until late in limited action is averaging 12.6. However, Nally, as a starter, is averaging 18 points.

The frosh are averaging 41% from the floor while outscoring their opponents 69-66 on the average.

Pearson Returns in Attempt To Save Liberal Govt.

OTTAWA (AP) — Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson returned from a Caribbean holiday Tuesday, apparently prepared to ask for a House of Commons confidence vote to save the five-year-old Liberal minority government that tottered while he was away.

Without any mention of the defeat of a Liberal sponsored bill that brought on the government crisis, Parliament met and adjourned giving Pearson a chance to regroup his forces.

The prime minister met with his Cabinet and Liberal members of Parliament who were called urgently back to Ottawa. Forty-seven of them had been absent Monday night when a government income tax sur-charge bill was voted down 84-82 by the House.

The bill's defeat was considered an expression of nonconfidence in the government—a situation that requires it to resign or win an immediate pledge of faith in Commons.

Pearson, who rose at dawn for a flight back from Jamaica, reportedly faced opposition to calling a confidence vote from his Cabinet's younger members. Informants said they were willing to risk a general election and reasoned that any other course would make it appear the Liberals were clinging to power.

Asked to comment on the situation, Pearson replied: "Not a word." His foreign secretary, Paul Martin, refused to discuss the crisis and said: "I don't know, I just work here."

The issue was complicated by Pearson's reduced personal power. He is 70 and has announced he will retire this spring. A leadership battle has developed within Liberal ranks with party members maneuvering for position in the April 4-6 leadership conference.

Canada's major opposition parties, who teamed up to defeat the tax measure, called on the Liberals to resign. The Conservatives and the New Democrats acknowledged that Pearson was within his rights to call for a vote of confidence.

The Liberals hold 130 commons seats against the 132 commanded by the New Democrats, Conservatives, Creditists, Social Creditists and independents.

North Vietnam Willing To Talk, Reports UThant

by WILLIAM N. OATIS

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—U.N. Secretary-General U Thant was reported ready Tuesday to tell President Johnson the North Vietnamese are willing to discuss anything the Americans want if the United States will stop bombing their country.

Diplomatic sources said U Thant got that word from North Vietnamese he saw on his recent trip abroad and he would pass it along to Johnson when the two meet in Washington, Wednesday.

They said Thant was told specifically that the North Vietnamese would start the talks promptly, once U.S. military actions against North Vietnam ended, and that general military de-escalation in South Vietnam could be one item on the agenda.

But they also said the North Vietnamese still insisted the cessation of bombing be unconditional and turned down the U.S. demand that they not take advantage of any such cessation by stepping up infiltration into South Vietnam.

Accordingly, diplomats generally did not believe Thant would persuade Johnson to stop the bombing. Some thought Thant himself did not expect to do so.

They figured he had asked to see Johnson mainly because he had already seen the leaders of four other key countries in the last two weeks and wanted to get the President's views so that he would have a complete picture of the thinking on Vietnam.

The secretary-general will call on the President at the White House at 11 a.m. He will lunch with Secretary of State Dean Rusk at the State Department afterward. Thant will travel to and from Washington by U.S. government plane, going at 9:30 a.m. and returning at 4:30 or 5. U.N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche, an American, will be with him. U. S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg will go along.

Since Feb. 8, Thant has talked with Prime Ministers Indira Gandhi of India, Alexei N. Kosygin of the Soviet Union, Harold Wilson of Britain, and President Charles de Gaulle of France, in their capitals.

Senior diplomats in London said Thant told leaders of key foreign governments he thought Johnson would begin peace talks with North Vietnam—essentially on Hanoi's terms—by summer. But sources here in a position to know expressed doubt that Thant had made any such statement.

Thant also saw two North Vietnamese representatives — Nguyen Hoa, consul general in New Delhi, Feb. 8, and Mai Van Bo, delegate general in Paris, last Wednesday.

Informed sources said that on the basis of all his talks, he would issue a "comprehensive major political statement" on Vietnam Friday or Saturday. They said he would not consult any of the government leaders in drafting it.

"Illegal" Open House Is Opposed By Senate

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate passed a motion to oppose the planned free student open house movement for this Thursday afternoon in a special meeting held last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

The motion was proposed by student Senator Chris McGhan, passed an overwhelming majority of 42-5, reads that the University Student Senate "opposes the conduction of any illegal open houses until the Board of Trusteees has been given reasonable time to consider the open house policy recommendations of the Student Senate, and until such time as the Student Senate sanctions the conduction of such, illegal open houses."

McGhan's motion followed moderate debate in which the senator stated his belief that any such action of a free open house Thursday will "alienate students and set progress back 20 years." There will be "complete abdication of student responsibility," according to McGhan if the Ad Hoc Committee's Monday night ultimatum is carried out.

Other senators supported McGhan's remarks with such comments as the students or Senate should "not do anything rash. We will regret it later." The Senate also brought out the point that Thursday's action would be an "empty threat" and that the committee had no basis for its ultimatum.

The Senate's motion followed opening remarks by Sen. President James Collins concerning Monday night's meeting at the Cage which he stated "I don't believe it succeeded as well as it could have."

He called for an investigation of student government and brought a recall of some student senators where necessary. "The student structure is what the students want it to be," continued Collins.

Criticism was also brought to the Senate itself for failure of Monday night's student meeting to be effective. Student Bill Wilkenson stated "the responsibility for last night was the Senate's lack of action."

The Senate's other major business of the evening involved the open house bill.

Among the major points of the bill were the following:

A. Each residence unit government shall be allowed to determine its unique policy on the frequency and duration of open houses.

C. The doors to the rooms of residents who are participating in any open house may be closed.

D. Ultimate authority for open house policy resides in the Board of Trustees or their designated officials.

F. Each open house must be approved separately by a majority of all the residents.

It was point H which received the majority of debate, however, this point states that "all students 18 years of age and younger wishing to participate in open houses shall secure parental permission by means of a card to be filed with the house government of each residence of Greek house."

"Compliance with such permission shall rest strictly on an honors system with dialogue to be between student and family. No student, judicial, or administrative action shall be taken in case of infractions of such permission."

This move by resident Collins was unanimously passed with two abstaining.

Senator Marcus proposed that the Student Senate express dissatisfaction with the Daily Collegian editorial policy pertaining to Chet Weinerman's editorial on February 19, 1968.

The issue will be brought up before the Student Communications Board later.

Reliance on Volunteer Support

Romney Disapproves of New Grad Status; Favors Changes in Draft

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. (AP) AGov. George Romney said Tuesday that draft laws should be changed "to rely extensively on volunteers."

The Michigan Republican, winding up a two-day Wisconsin sweep aimed at the state's April 2 presidential primary, interrupted his steady fire at President Johnson's Vietnam war policy to criticize recent changes in selective service.

At a news conference, and again in a statement, Romney said that new regulations which would end deferments for first-year graduate students and for occupational and skilled categories are "not a move in the direction of a more equitable system."

Romney said he had sent telegrams to several senators urging that they support cloture in the civil rights debate in the Senate.

"It is important to do all possible to demonstrate to those still suffering from social and racial injustices," the governor said, "that needed changes can be made without lawlessness, violence and civil guerilla warfare."

Outposts in Laos Overrun By Communists

(AP) — The government reported Tuesday that Communist troops have overrun a Laotian army outpost about 50 miles northeast of Vientiane.

A spokesman said the position, about 12 miles from the town of Paksane, on the Mekong River, fell Sunday after an all-night battle between government forces and about three Communist battalions.

No announcement was made on the size of the government force of the number of casualties.

Anti-Draft Recording Leads To Committee Investigation

The Joint Legislative Committee on Education voted 7-5 to investigate alleged UMass-Boston faculty involvement in draft protest by students.

The vote amended a bill that would have investigated student and faculty participation in a draft-card burning ceremony at Arlington Street Church Oct. 16.

Reps. Joseph M. Kearney and John Melia filed the original bill after hearing a tape recording they said was made by UMass students.

The tape which Kearney said included the voices of UMass faculty members urging students to resist the draft, was presented to the Joint Committee before they voted.

It was charged that some teachers had excused students from classes to take part in the Anti-draft rally.

Kearney and Melia's bill has been returned to Senate counsel to be redrafted to exclude a probe of student involvement.

Saigon and Air Base Are Sites of Battle

SAIGON (AP) — American infantrymen caught up with a band of Viet Cong storming through Saigon's northeastern suburbs Tuesday and killed 123 in a blazing, four-hour battle.

The fighting, coupled with a light rocket attack on Tan Sen Nhut air base, came amid reports that another Communist drive on Saigon was in the offing.

The Communist high command was said to have called for leveling of the capitals before the month is out.

There is today in the United States a rather large city called Chicago, which has kept the bulk of its musical talent imprisoned for many years. The reasons for this are too numerous to mention now. What is really important is that The Buckinghams have also unlocked a door, and have emerged as one of the top musical groups in this country. Their struggle for recognition is not an uncommon story in the music business today, but their talent and backgrounds are.

The Disadvantaged Negro To Be Admitted To University

UMass is taking an important step in providing an opportunity for higher education to disadvantaged youth from across the state. In a recent announcement by William D. Tunis, Dean of Admissions, a new policy was put forth which would waive certain educational requirements for the admission of Negro youths to UMass.

In a time of explosive ghetto situations the need for action is increasingly important. One of the major reasons for ghetto unrest is the feeling that no matter what one does, he will never be able to raise himself out of the squalor of the urban ghetto. The most important way of escaping the ghetto is by education. The ghetto dweller is prevented from obtaining higher education because of poverty and the neglect of ghetto schools which provide him with a less than adequate education.

Without the benefit of the secondary education available to students at higher economic levels, the ghetto student is not fully prepared and thus is unable to cope with the competition inherent in obtaining admission to an institution of higher learning.

Considering the disparity in educational quality between ghetto and middleclass schools, the need for differing standards in evaluating the performance of ghetto students aspiring for college education is obvious. The new UMass policy would judge Negro students on high school performances, and the recommendations of guidance and supervisory personnel rather than by the traditional evaluationary procedures. In addition to this, the student accepted for admission would be provided with tutorial services to ease the transition from high school to college and thus increase his chances of success.

As a step to dispelling the despair and hopelessness of the ghetto, the value of this new program cannot be stated enough. It will help provide a chance for many who would not otherwise have a chance and help develop talent that would otherwise be wasted. It is hoped that this idea will be the start of a rapid proliferation of similar such programs across the country: To make the path to higher education for the Negro easier to follow.

Punishments Meted Out

Violations of UC Berkeley rules during "Stop The Draft Week" demonstrations in October resulted in citations for 80 students and disciplinary penalties for 62.

Rule breaking during demonstrations against Dow and the CIA in November led to 34 more citations, while a series of "mill-in's" protesting the earlier punishments added 35 names to the list of those cited for breaking campus rules.

While all this disciplinary activity has had a tendency to turn the Berkeley campus into a kind of academic night court, it can hardly be argued that rule enforcement has been lax there.

The fact that campus disciplinary proceedings take a great deal of time annoys many critics, but judicial due process is just as operative on campus as it is in the general society—and it should be.

UCLA Chancellor Franklin D. Murphy recently made this point when he told the Board of Regents, "The old days of student discipline when it was the dean and the student and it was over in five minutes, are gone. We are in a new ball game with new rules. The courts have made it clear that we must follow due process."

So far this year only a relatively few students on a few campuses have broken either college rules or civil law. Even at the most politically active campuses, like Berkeley and San Francisco State, the numbers of political activists are fairly small.

But it is certainly true that these activists are expressing the concerns of a great many other students who do not demonstrate or protest.

In view of the generally agitated state of the student mind, California can count itself lucky to have avoided a major campus riot such as the one that accompanied Dow's recruiting efforts at the University of Wisconsin or the racial conflict that closed Central State University in Ohio last fall.

The trouble at San Francisco State College in early December could have exploded into a major disaster but did not because of skillful handling and wise judgment on the part of President John Summerskill and the San Francisco police.

In view of this record of maintaining "law and order" on campus it is difficult to understand why public confidence in higher education seems to stand at an all-time low in California, yet there are many signs that this is so.

Allegiance

I think that I shall never see
A world of peace and harmony;
A world where throughout every land
The populace would take a stand,
For love.

I know that men were born to kill,
And history past and history still
To come will bear this concept out;
For when have men restrained their shouts
For War?

It isn't that they want to fight—
They feel they must maintain the rights
Of every free man, and try their Darndest to free those men who are Not so privileged.

But in this group the hippies come,
Smoking and flowering every one.
I observe, and think, and grieve—
Good men are dying for the likes of these.

Perhaps my thoughts are out of line,
But I love this country I call mine,
And because good men are fighting for me
You'll hear me yelling, proud and free—
Cheering the good, cursing the cowards.

Sit-in Disturbs at Basketball Game

To the editor:

As members of the university community, we feel that the small minority of radicals who make up the protest movement have overstepped the limits of rational behavior in their proposal to interfere with the UMass - Rhode Island basketball game by means of a sit-in. When have the extremists been permitted to infringe upon the rights of the majority?

What right do these misguided people have to disrupt the activities not only of our own basketball team and its fans, but also the Rhode Island team which must travel a great distance for the game. We respect the right of sincere protest, but when sincerity is outweighed by irresponsible sensationalism, action must be taken.

If this protest and the resulting interference are undertaken, we propose that a "throw out" also take place so as to make the Cage a fit place for basketball fans.

Last Night's Accomplishments

To the editor:

Two thousand to two thousand, five hundred of you showed up at the biggest farce of the year. You all came with questions — important questions like: What can happen to the open house policies? What can this self-appointed group of individuals really do?

As we watched the "volleying" of ideas, we realized that there was no constructive criticism being made. There was a series of demands and a longer series of avoidances by the administrators. Those people who appointed themselves as spokesmen did not represent the majority. They didn't put up a united front or offer any acceptable solutions. They offered dictates. They offered no room for compromise. They should have stressed one or two issues and pressed for these.

The first problem they could have handled effectively was the setting of another date to continue discussions. This was not done. If these leaders are as mature and responsible as they claim they are, they should have recognized the impossibility of solving all of these oppressed students' problems in one evening. Discussion has gone on for over a year concerning open house policy. Did they expect to solve it in an hour and a half session?

This "unity meeting" was the most serious setback student power advocates have received. The monkeys on the stage ranted and raved for reforms while the confident administrators sat back and denied the needs for change. The purpose of this meeting was to show the administration that the student body was a power to be recognized. They recognized it, and ignored it. They had no alternatives. We students offered nothing worth recognition.

Grad Mother Works for Degree

By JANET CAROPRESE

Lack of time for completing assignments and studying for exams is a chronic complaint of students. For most, however, responsibility lies solely towards schoolwork. What would they do if they had the added burden of raising a family while working towards a degree?

Janet Epperson does! Besides working towards her Master's Degree in Nutrition and Foods, she is both mother and father to her three month old daughter while her husband, an Air Force Captain, is stationed in Guam.

Graduate student Mrs. Janet Epperson and her three month old daughter, Laura.

Originally from Missouri and graduates of Northeast Missouri State Teacher's College, the Eppersons are now living in a quadraplex at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee. It is the fourth base they have lived on during the past four years.

At the University, Janet has classes only four days a week, but she spends approximately 25 hours a week on campus doing original research for her thesis and other projects.

Currently she spends 10 hours a week on her thesis project which is "investigating the possibilities of incorporating a non-caloric substance in an angel food cake recipe since obesity is the most widespread nutrition problem in the United States today."

Janet is working towards her Master's so "I can be the breadwinner when my husband gets out of the service and goes back to school for his Ph.D. in Chemistry." She plans to teach and

Curl Revisited

By ROSALIE GIORDANO

For the past few years we, the female species, have been patiently coaxing our naturally curly, wavy, or frizzy (whatever the case may be) crowning glories into the straightest of "dos". To achieve this look we have employed the use of hair straighteners, the ever popular iron, and other equally unpleasant methods.

We have only to look in the mirror, or about the dorm to see the results. Long, straight, and shiny manes are everywhere. We are pleased with these results. Our perspective male friends are also pleased. (It is commonly known that most men prefer long hair.)

It's quite a change from straight hair.

But those above us, who a few years ago decided that the straight look was "in", are not very pleased. The home permanent industry is suffering. Something must be done.

That something was made obvious to us when we anxiously opened our January '68 fashion magazines. Staring back at us were familiar fashion models who last month were pictured standing in a brisk wind with their long straight hair gracefully waving in the breeze.

These fashion models had not changed, but the brisk wind was absent, and the long, flowing locks had been transformed into masses of curls. The harsh headlines which accompanied them were equally unnerving, with titles ranging from the short "Colette Curls" to the sophisticated, (and we must admit rather

Granted this is all very nice, but it is obvious to us that if we attempt to "Colette Curl" our precious little heads the results will probably be disastrous, especially after we complete our ever-popular jaunts from Southwest to WOPE and then back to Southwest after "beginning swimming."

The seductive "Long and Curvy" is at least a little more practical, although it does involve digging out our neglected hair rollers and actually setting our hair nightly, (that is on the assumption that we do remember how).

Our unfortunate dilemma is obvious: to be "in" and curly, or not to be "in", but happy. The majority of us will probably choose to remain happy.

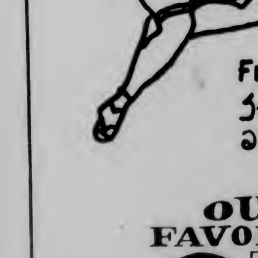
Although often pressed for time, Janet has a method for getting things done. "I put priorities on things and do what I decide is most important first." Consequently she has no trouble meeting deadlines.



Besides raising a family and going to school she finds time to sing in the church choir and is Food Editor for the Officer's Wives Club magazine, "The Fly By."

Because her husband was overseas when the baby was born, Janet spends time taking snapshots of Laura's progress since birth. Every time the baby grows a few inches, Janet sends a picture of Laura lying stretched out on an open Fortune Magazine.

After her husband gets out of the Air Force in December, the Eppersons will be looking for another place to live. They are undecided as to exactly where, but according to Janet: "It's not so important where you are if you are happy with what you are doing."

Civil Rights Bill Proposed For Senate Vote Wed.

(AP)—The Senate refused by seven votes Tuesday to invoke a time limit on debate so that a civil rights bill could be brought to a vote.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana moved for a test vote Wednesday on an open housing section, and announced he will try again next Monday to bring the basic bill to a showdown.

In Tuesday's test, supporters of the bill were able to muster only 55 votes, or 7 short of the two-thirds majority needed to invoke cloture.

Arrayed against the debate-closing rule were 37 senators, mainly Southern Democrats and Republican conservatives.

The setback for civil rights forces came in the face of an appeal by President Johnson for passage of the bill and a telegram from Gov. George Romney urging all Republican senators to vote for cloture.

Romney, who is campaigning for the GOP presidential nomination, said it is important to demonstrate "to those still suffering from social and racial injustice that needed changes can be made without lawlessness, violence and civil guerrilla warfare."

"I hope Dick Nixon will join me in urging Republican senators to take this needed action," Romney said.

The housing amendment that will be voted on Wednesday would outlaw any discrimination in the sale or rental of housing.

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., cosponsor of the amendment, said Tuesday's vote "established beyond any doubt that sooner or later, and probably sooner, a sweeping fair housing law will be adopted by the United States Senate."

Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., floor manager for the civil rights bill, called the initial test "a significant victory." He and one of his Republican supporters, Sen. Jacob K. Javits of New York, told newsmen they may modify the housing amendment in a bid for more votes.

As it stands, Javits said, it represents "the maximum housing package." Hart estimated it would cover 97 per cent of all housing. They said they may move to eliminate single-family dwellings from coverage in an effort to attract more support.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., cosponsor with Mondale of the housing section, said its adoption would be "a giant step in race relations."

Dirksen opposed what he called a gag rule. He told the Senate that "the country is filled with fever and controversy and we had better be precious careful what goes on the books."

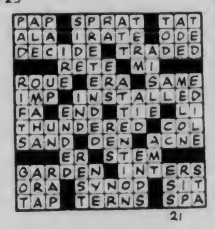
Memphis Garbage Strike In Deadlock Over Wages

(AP) — A strike of 1,300 garbage collectors moved through its ninth day Tuesday with city and union officials still deadlocked over main issues in the bitter dispute.

Mayor Henry Loeb has insisted that no fruitful sessions can be held until the strikers return to their jobs. He called the walkout illegal.



The union modified wage demands Monday and called for a 5 per cent increase this year followed by a similar boost next year. The hourly pay now ranges from about $1.65 for laborers up to $2.10 for truck drivers.

City officials agreed there was a need for pay increases but said there was no more money available.

UMass Clipped By Powerful St. John's, 55-53

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

A 30-foot bank shot with four seconds to go gave the NCAA-bound St. John's Redmen a 55-53 victory over UMass before 2000 at the Cage last night. The author of the desperation bomb, 6'3 sophomore Jim Smyth, had been averaging 0.9 going into the game.

THE DIPPER—Peter Gayeska puts in two in the first half, of last night's UMass-St. John's game at the Cage. Ralph Abraham, St. John's guard, looks on seemingly astonished. The visitors were victorious, 55-53.

Underdog UMass had been leading the 16-6 visitors for most of the game and seemed about to close in on the biggest upset of their history until Smyth hit. Time after time the visitors were outhustled on the boards and on the floor. At one point, early in the second half, UMass led by 14 points.

Both teams started out cold. After battling back and forth for ten minutes, the home unit managed to put a five-point string together, thanks to the offensive rebounding of Peter Gayeska and Billy Tindall, which vaulted them into a 27-21 lead. This was increased by one point so at halftime the score stood, UMass 31, St. John's 24.

St. John's, a team with fairly good size, was humiliated off the boards in that first period. Gayeska, displaying his best boardwork of the year, picked off 11 while Capt. Tindall hauled down ten. Neither squad could find the range in the frigid Cage from the floor or the foul line.

In the second half things got tense for the nationally ranked visitors. A three-point Joe DiSarcina drive, a Tindall move and an Ellerbrook jump shot, made it UMass 38, St. John's 24. The scoreboard must have shook up the Jamiaca, N.Y. Redmen, but they never lost their poise.

Neither did their opponents however, and as the seconds ticked away, UMass held a solid edge despite the visitors hustling, ballhawking tactics.

Not until after the ten-minute mark did St. John's bring the margin under eight. At this point a John Warren jump shot a Dan Cornelius stuff, a Warren tap and a Carmine Calzonetti bomb cut UMass' lead to two points.

In case you're wondering about that stuff, you're not alone. Everyone at the Cage last night was too. Curry Hicks has seen some controversial calls, but when the referees allowed Cornelius' "Tap", you could feel the old barn shudder more than a little.

UMass was still up by two with 7:50 to go but suddenly they couldn't find the hole. As a matter of fact they didn't score again from the field.

With 4:57 remaining, Ellerbrook converted two free throws which Rudy Bogad got back later on two separate occasions. With 1:57 remaining, Ellerbrook again came through under pressure from the line, making both ends of a one-and one opportunity.

Mr. Smyth was also a clutch sophomore. He canned two free throws, then after St. John's regained possession of the ball, scored on a drive. This knotted the score for the first time in the half. After each squad missed opportunities, Warren's layup put the New Yorkers in the lead. UMass didn't give up, though, they still had Ellerbrook's steady left arm which was good for two more pressure free throws with 19 seconds left to tie the score.

15 seconds later, however, the superb effort was down the drain as Smyth wound up and launched a high-arching shot almost out of bounds.

Ellerbrook led all scorers with 20 points. The sophomore's performance earned praise from St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca.

Tindall had 12 points and, more importantly, 14 rebounds, while Gayeska, in his finest effort of the second semester had seven points and 14 rebounds. Foul trouble kept him from a bigger game.

DiSarcina and Gasperack, although not scoring much, played fine floor games. Each also managed to play 40 minutes of hard-nosed defense without fouling out.

Smyth led the Johnnies with 13 while Warren picked up ten. Guards Joe Depre and Calzonetti had eight each.

St. John's plays at Providence tomorrow night.

Track Teams Travel to UConn For 1st Yankee Conference Meet

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

Coming off a loss to the Northeastern University Huskies, The UMass varsity and frosh track teams travel to Storrs, Conn. to battle the UConn Huskies in an important meet tonight.

The varsity tracksters will be able to judge how they will do against Yankee Conference competition. They will be past their first meet uneasiness and will be able to see how they can run on a fairly good track.

Coach Ken 'O'Brien said that he expects UConn to be strong in the weights events as usual. However the coach feels that if his men in the 50, high jump, and broad jump come through, the meet could be won before the relay.

A lot will also depend on the mile and two mile events. Greg Bowman, who ran well at Northeastern, will battle John Vitale of UConn, who recently ran 4:17.5 versus Columbia. In the two mile UMass will go with Charlie Lang, who sparkled at NU and Paul Hoss, who finished third in the mile at NU.

In the middle distances, John Anderson and Bob Hasselbaum will run the 600 and Dave Evans will compete in the 1000. UConn's Flanagan will challenge in both events. Despite the fact that O'Brien hopes to win before the relay, he expects a close mile.

The frosh team will also go to UConn tonight. Coach O'Brien says that Ed Heywood (sprints) and Gerry Spellman (hurdles) will have to repeat their recent victories at Northeastern, because the UConn frosh are strong in the hurdles and dashes.

O'Brien also expects Clarence Gaynor, Elliot Stevens, and Paul Taylor to take points in the middle distances where the Little Huskies also have strength.

Leo Duart, two mile winner at NU will try to repeat at UConn. Ron Wayne, who doubled at NU, might triple at Connecticut. To do this, Wayne would have to run the mile, two mile, and 1000. However, the coach is still undecided if Wayne will run all three. It will depend on how the meet is progressing.

The frosh hope to put away the win well before the relay, but strong performances will have to be had in the pole vault, high jump, and broad jump.

Frosh Cagers Win in Breeze, 94-40

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

UMass freshman basketball team jumped off to 13 quick points in the first five minutes and went on to an easy 94-40 win over an outclassed Worcester Junior College team last night at the cage. The win snapped a two game loss streak for the Little Redmen, raising their season's mark to 9-6. Worcester Jr. is now 6-17.

Jim Ryan with six points and Ken Mathias with seven did all the scoring in this first spurt as the Little Redmen led 13-0 after five minutes. Worcester did not score until 14:33 of the first half but they never were in the ballgame. UMass reeled off runs of six points on three occasions and easily increased its lead throughout the first half, taking a 41-19 lead into the dressing room.

This early lead enabled Coach Broaca to substitute freely in the half. For the latter stages of the half, he had his whole starting five sitting out.

Broaca inserted his starters in the second half, they being Tom Nally, Frank Schaffeld, Bill Greeley along with Mathias and Ryan and they quickly disspelled any Worcester notions of a comeback, rattling off 18 straight points at the beginning of the half, to lead by a whopping 40 points, 59-19, with 14:15 to go.

For the rest of the half the UMass subs performed and ballplayers such as Mike Korpita, Stan Kinard and Steve Geary, getting their first extensive action of the year, refused to let up as the lead gradually swelled.

Kinard scored nine points and thrilled the sparse Cage gathering by fouling out at the end of the game. Korpita got five points, while Geary took over the reigns of floor general. Worcester, meanwhile, their tallest player being no more than 6'2, could never muster any offense, save for a lonely six point run at about ten minutes of the second half. It was hardly even noticed.

Mathias led all scorers with 22, followed by Ryan and Tom Hellen, scoring his season high, each hitting 14 and Bob Dempsey with ten. John Williams and Frank James were high scorers for Worcester, hitting 13 and 12 respectively.

Pucksters To Battle Rival Amherst

by WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Looking for its second straight victory, the UMass hockey team will cross sticks against cross-town rival Amherst tonight at 7 at Orr Rink.

Fresh off an 8 - 4 win over Holy Cross Saturday afternoon, the Redmen are looking forward to their second meeting against the Lord Jeffs.

Amherst had its season's opener spoiled by the Redmen back in early December, falling by a 6 - 2 score.

In that first battle, the Redmen jumped off to a 4-0 bulge during the first period. Amherst fought back and narrowed the margin to 4-2 going into the final stanza.

The Jeffs pressed throughout the first minutes of the period but were held off by the UMass defense. Midway in the period, Charlie Hanifan picked up a loose puck at center ice, skated around the Amherst defense and scored to cement the victory.

The Jeffs have not been very successful since that opening game. Their current record is a miserable 2-13 with the worst loss coming last weekend, dropping a 2-1 decision to MIT. UM had already beaten MIT this season, 15 - 0.

In the series between the rivals, UMass has won the last three games increasing their advantage overall to 28-23-3. Last Amherst win came in Feb. 1966, a 4 - 3 overtime victory.

UMass will be hoping for a repeat performance against Amherst tonight. The Redmen passing was fairly sharp in the Holy Cross game and the backchecking was better than in previous games.

Holy Cross was one of the few teams that the Redmen were able to outskate all year. In the first minutes of the game, the Crusaders checked anyone in a red uniform but once they let up the Redmen started scoring goals.

Hijacked DC-8, Carrying 109, Flown to Cuba and Released

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — A Delta Air Lines DC8 commercial jet, carrying 102 passengers and a crew of seven, was hijacked Wednesday afternoon over south Florida by a gun wielding passenger who ordered the plane flown to Cuba, officials said.

A spokesman for Delta said the plane, flight 843 enroute from Chicago to Miami by way of Tampa and West Palm Beach, was commandeered about 25 miles west of West Palm Beach at 3:40 p.m.

"A passenger came up to the cockpit accompanied by a stewardess," he said. "He had a gun in his hand and told the crew they were to proceed to Havana."

The spokesman for Delta said the plane captain is J. D. Gainey, based in Miami. He identified other officers as R. E. Davis and H. A. Pierce, also of Miami. Delta said they had no direct contact with the aircraft.

"The only contact came through the Air Route Traffic Control Center in Miami," he said, quoting federal officials as saying the captain advised them that the craft had been directed to Cuba.

'Daily Collegian' Holds Elections; Dean, Epstein Named to Top Posts

By BILL DICKINSON
Staff Reporter

Last night the staff of the Daily Collegian elected its new slate of editors for the next year. The new officers assume their positions immediately.

John H. Dean, Jr., former managing editor was elected editor-in-chief, to succeed Chester S. Weinerman. Dean was unopposed for the position.

Elected as managing editor, second in command, was Donald A. Epstein. He was opposed by Richard S. Kline, former news editor, in the race which resulted in a 29-24 vote. Unopposed were Ronald J. LaBrecque, Charles W. Smith, Michael T. Curran, and Robert Brill who were elected news editor, business manager, sports editor, and editorial chairman, respectively.

In a speech following the elections, out-going editor-in-chief Weinerman who had served his full-year term of office, said, "I have made mistakes, but at all times I have been honest." He also said in reference to the recent controversy over an editorial he wrote criticizing last week's demonstrations, "The mass does not unfortunately judge a public figure on an over-all basis, but rather on an issue-to-issue basis." He also said, "If the administration is right and the students are wrong, why should the student newspaper defend the students."

Weinerman made many references to recent attacks on both him and the Daily Collegian saying, "If you keep attacking all sides, you soon find yourself surrounded by enemies. Yet, you must criticize where criticism is needed."

Weinerman went on, "If the paper is to remain free, the student body cannot dictate to it—nor can the administration, nor can the faculty."

Specifically, the former editor-in-chief attacked the Student Senate for trying to "flex their fiscal biceps" in threatening to cut the Daily Collegian's budget because of its disagreement with editorial policy.

Looking to the future of the paper, Weinerman first went back to the predictions he made last year in his acceptance speech. He said he had made four major predictions: the use of the Associated Press wire-service, daily publication, an official Collegian car and financial incentives for the staff. All except the last have come into existence. He then said that the three major goals for the paper in the following year should to to go from five to eight columns, to secure incentives for the staff and to incorporate and go independent (off-campus).

In commenting on his own plans, Weinerman said, I am retiring for at least a month. After that I may write some editorials—I've had some phenominal success lately!"

Later he was unanimously elected "editor emeritus" by the staff.

Following Weinerman's speech, new Editor-in-Chief Jack Dean made his acceptance speech. The main thrust of his extemporaneous speech was, "WE're going to take our freedom and take a stand with it." . . . We're not going to tolerate any interference from the administration, the faculty, or student interest groups."

He also said, "I intend to continue to expand upon the program which Chet Weinerman has put forth."

Commenting on the situation as he takes office he said, borrowing from Charles Dickens, "'It was the best of times and the worst of times' and I guess that is what it is now."

According to Dean, "The most important goal for the paper is incorporating and going independent." He decried "the budgetary control of the Senate" and said, "It's certainly not going to improve the paper to cut its budget."

Canadian Prime Minister Pearson, Liberals, Face Non-Confidence Vote

OTTAWA (AP)—Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson brought his government's future to the floor of the House of Commons Wednesday, but a confidence vote needed to save it was temporarily headed off after catcalls and howls of laughter from the opposition drowned out the 70-year-old leader.

Opposition party members turned down a move by Pearson for an immediate confidence ballot. Without unanimous consent, Commons could not begin debate on the confidence issue before Friday.

Pearson was seeking to prevent his five year-old government's fall on the defeat of its income tax surcharge bill in Commons Monday night. When he called the defeat "not a vote of nonconfidence," the opposition benches erupted.

The prime minister had earlier described the 84-82 vote against the Liberal party tax measure as an accident because 46 of its legislators were absent for the balloting.

The Conservatives, backed by Canada's third largest party, the new Democrats, demanded the Liberals quit and hold general elections.

"If the government had any principle at all," Michael Starr, a Conservative floor leader said, "it would resign. This is unheard of. The government just can't keep reversing votes just to suit itself."

The opposition also threatened to boycott all Parliament committees until the Liberals step down.

Pearson has maintained that if all legislative defeats suffered by minority governments like his own were regarded tests of confidence, the nation would be subjected to continuous elections. Since the Liberals first took power in 1963, they have gone to the polls three times.

The prime minister acknowledged, however, that if the government were to lose a formal confidence vote, "then of course the government resigns."

In a confidence vote, the Liberals could call on 130 members of Commons. The Conservatives have 95 and the New Democrats 22. Creditists hold eight seats, Social Creditists four and independents three.

Liberals were ordered back to the capital from their home districts on an urgent basis.

Jobs Available In Europe This Summer

Thousands of jobs are available in Europe through the American Student Information Service for both males and females.

In many cases previous experience or knowledge of a foreign language are not required. However, the student has the unique opportunity to develop a speaking knowledge of a foreign language through a job in Europe.

Quite a number of jobs are still available throughout 15 countries of Europe.

The American Student Information Service, with headquarters in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, is still accepting applications from U. S. college students who wish to work in Europe this summer.

New Information Service Ready for Trial Period

"The Activities Placement Service will fill a long-existing void on this campus," so said Sheila McRevey, Student Activities Program Advisor.

Continuing she said("A central place where students can go to find out about the various activities on this campus has been lacking for a long time. The Student Activities Placement Service is now ready for its trial period to aid students, especially swing shifters, freshmen and transfers in becoming an integral part of University life."

The Placement Service has a threefold purpose. The first is to provide students with information concerning the activities and requirements of the many Recognized Student Organizations. Questionnaires have been filled out by the R.S.O. groups and these will be available for student use.

The second purpose is to provide the R.S.O. groups with a file of Student's interests and abilities for facilitating membership solicitation. The information on students has been compiled from the activity interest surveys taken of all entering freshmen.

It's April... It's Beautiful

Here I Stand

By CHET WEINERMAN
Editor Emeritus

One very sad fact I've learned in the last three days is that the populace will not judge a public figure on his overall record. Instead, his performance and character are judged issue by issue. In the past three years I have stood firmly behind and occasionally dangerously ahead of student reform. My initiation of the fight to abolish women's curfews and other regulations led to my being selected a Collegian Editor. It is nonetheless most unfortunate that I must leave when the fickle pendulum is on the wrong side of the spasmodic clock of public opinion.

It has been a source of tragic amusement to me to hear the term "Weinerman's Wire" tossed around so freely by the upstairs R.S.O. deviates who pose as student leaders. Where is any person anywhere in this University who can say that in my term of office I have pulled or changed one news story or one signed editorial or, with three exceptions, held any letters, let him come to me with the proof and I will publish a letter in Friday's Collegian admitting I have been a charlatan.

It has been called "Weinerman's Wire" because the paper has been given direction by Weinerman, by Dean, by Petow, and by the rest of the editors. The direction has been toward honesty, and you can't drive in that direction without incurring head-on collisions with some of the student leaders of this campus—the vocal minority who can deceive and mold followers. Everything said by an editor in a newspaper is under constant microscopic examination, because it is in print every single day for 10,000 to criticize and pick apart. Their accuracy is irrelevant; yours must be constantly accurate.

Yet, there is the undesirable truth that, as a student and a fallible human being, you do make a mistake. I have made mistakes. But at all times I have been honest. This is an obligation I have had to myself, the staff, and the campus. Perhaps putting Monday's editorial on the front page was a mistake. I asked that the editorial be on the front page because I believe that the newspaper should use front-page editorials for exceptionally significant issues. I knew full well the editorial would not be a popular one, but I felt what was said was honestly what had to be said. The Day Editor made a mistake in running it so large. Error was also clearly obvious in the fact that the Cage Rally was not the lead story. But as Editor, I never make up the paper or have anything to do with the day-to-day production. The people with whom the mistakes lay are part of the learning experience that is the college paper.

Printing that editorial on page one was journalistically correct. Cries of yellow journalism (which is something entirely different than what the protestors meant) elicited only emotion at a time when reason was most important. Printing the editorial and the news of the rally so large was a mistake. It was not at all intentional. Student newspapers will have mistakes every day, because they are run by amateur journalists who are students just like you. Because I am editor, however, I must take full responsibility for whatever goes into the paper, even though I had nothing to do with the make-up of the page. It is convenient to find a person through which indirected hatred can be channeled. That I am to many a conceited villain for putting my name atop something that I honestly believe—and still do—is a role I accept with honor. The attacks of the last three days have not been honorable, but merely personal, malicious.

There come times in the course of a year when you've got to do what you believe is right, even if it's not going to be popular. Supporting candidates for office, investigating class officers, attacking complimentary tickets, fraternities, honorary societies, Senior Week, and irresponsible demonstrators have brought criticism my way from those being attacked who also wield tremendous power of their own. When I made public my arrest case, it worked largely to my disadvantage in that a) the campus police were prepared extraordinarily b) my private life was exposed to 10,500 people. Yet, just as I had predicted, people twisted my motives of trying to expose a critical and common situation in this town to a denunciation of my "personally advantageous use of the paper". It was disillusioning, but by now I realize people will think what they want to think and logic matters not.

And so, as I retire realizing that so much can be forgotten through one incident, I maintain honor unto myself. This to me is more important than getting applause at the Cage, a daily paper or a Sam Spark book. If I have learned one thing, it is to at least try to secure all sides of a story. Demonstrators take heed.

To Jack Dean I wish much success. There is tremendous room for improvement in the Daily Collegian, and I realize this most of all. But I think we have begun the Daily Collegian, in its first year of operation as one of the finest dailies in the nation, and I am proud to have been associated with it and its people.

Thank You.

ELECTIONS. . .

He said that many senators cite factual errors in the Daily Collegian as a reason for cutting its budget. He said that there have been" many mistakes in the past and there always will be." However, he ascribed them to "green journalism" rather than "yellow journalism, as many people have suggested." He said that the college press is a part of the "learning experience" and that "if they want a fully professional paper, they should hire professional journalists from outside. I don't think they would want to do that."

In closing he cited the aim of the paper in the following year is "to make the students more aware of their surroundings."

Following the planned speeches, Dean of Students William Field made a surprise appearance and said a few words to the staff informally. He drew laughter by saying, "No one demanded that I appear, which is sort of nice." Then he went on to praise Weinerman on "his last night" and to congratulate Dean on his election.

He also told the staff members "How indebted I am to you" for the cool and responsible way in which he thought they handled the coverage of last week's demonstration and the ensuing controversy.

Wash. Soviet Embassy Bombed; No Injuries, Diplomats Jittery

WASHINGTON (AP)—A bomb exploded on a window ledge of the Soviet embassy before dawn Wednesday. President Johnson denounced the blast as a "senseless act" and asked that "every effort be made to apprehend those responsible."

An embassy office and reception room were damaged by the explosion four blocks northwest of the White House. Windows in four nearby buildings were shattered. No one was reported injured, but the blast sent diplomatic shock waves halfway around the world.

Even as demolition experts sifted through the debris, the official Soviet news agency Tass charged "this act of provocation could have been committed only with the connivance of the American authorities . . ."

"Utterly ridiculous," said White House press secretary George Christian when asked about the Soviet charge. Christian read this statement to reporters:

"A vigorous investiagtion is being conducted by law enforcement agencies and the President has asked that every effort be made to apprehend those responsible.

In its dispatch from Moscow, Tass charged that U.S officials, "despite warnings, had not taken proper measures to protect the embassy."

A State Department spokesman termed the Soviet charge "nonsense and absurd." Secretary of State Dean Rusk "personally expressed his deep regrets" to the Soviet ambassador both by telephone and in writing.

The bomb appeared to have been placed on the first floor ledge between a black iron grating bolted to the front of the building and a heavy mesh screen attached to the wooden window sill.

The explosion ripped away chunks of the stone window ledge and twisted the inch-thick iron bars outward. But the mesh screen apparently saved the interior of the embassy from heavier damage.

INFORMATION . . .

This questionnaire was a part of a four year study and will be revamped for the next freshman class.

Thirdly, the Student Activity Placement Service will provide help to organizations in the selection of advisors who are interested and able to devote the necessary time to promote efficient and fruitful operation of the organization.

Faculty advisors are needed in every group and are becoming increasingly active. Due to lack of information however, many members of the faculty have never been contacted. This can now be rectified by the faculty interest survey now available.

There will be no obligation on the part of anyone using the service to join any specific group. The service is located at a desk in the south end of the R.S.O. Office. It will be staffed by Susan Brady from 2:00-5:00 on Mon., Wed., and Friday afternoons. At any other times students and groups may fill out the registration cards on the desk and they will be contacted.

L'il Abner Casting Completed

Casting has been completed and rehearsals are well underway for the Operetta Guild's spring extravaganza.

Heading the list is Jay McAuliffe as L'il Abner. Jay, a freshman music major, is enthusiastic about his second lead for the Guild. Many may remember him as Prince Dauntless of Once Upon a Mattress. Playing opposite him will be Chris Niemynski, '71, as the voluptuous Daisy Mae. The hysterical but lovable Mammy and Pappy Yokum will be brought to life by Franny Botello and Rick Kaplan. Rounding out the major leads will be Rich Eber as Marryin' Sam and Steve Rosoff as General Bullmoose.

The atmosphere is certainly hill-billy and full of zany characters among them being Earthquake McGoon who will be portrayed by John Callahan; Evil-Eye Fleagle - Walter Mitty; Mayor Dawgmeat - Leonard Radin; Sen. Jack S. Phogbound, Bob Ward; Appasionata von Climax - Cheryl Cardran.

Choreography will be handled by Sue Bacon, who promises to turn the Sadie Hawkins' Day Ballet into a show-stopper. Bill Neighor is again handling the musical direction. Altogether under the direction of Steve Rosoff, L'il Abner promises to be a most exciting musical treat for UMass audiences. It will be presented in Bowker Auditorium April 4, 5 & 6.

Rise in Applications Expected by Dean Tunis

Predicting the number of expected applications for the school year 1968-69, UMass Dean of Admissions William D. Tunis quoted the number as "between 18,000 and 19,000. This is an increase of over 7,000 applications in the past four years."

"Already by February 1 of this year, 15,500 applications have been received for admission into the class of '72. Approximately 7,000 will be accepted for a freshman class of 3,150. Five per cent of this number will be out-of-state students, a quota set by the board of trustees."

In Dean Tunis' opinion, the increase in applications may possibly be attributed to the increased publicity of the four-college program available to UMass students. This program enables students from UMass, Amherst, Smith, and Mt. Holyoke to enroll in courses from the other colleges, and to use the library facilities of each school.

AFL-CIO Plans $2M War Chest For LBJ Campaign

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — AFL-CIO leaders planned Wednesday to raise a political war chest of $2 million or more to help re-elect President Johnson and labor friends in Congress.

George Meany, president of the 14-million member labor federation, told a meeting of AFL-CIO political strategists that the outcome of the November presidential election is crucial to organized labor.

"It is quite clearly a choice between liberalism and conservatism," Meany told officials of the Committee on Political Education (COPE—the AFL-CIO's political arm.

He compared Johnson favorably with the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, under whom most of today's protective labor laws were first enacted.

Meany said Johnson's four-year record is equal to or better than the first four years of Roosevelt in the 1932-36 depression era.

"Frankly, I consider it even better for us," Meany said of Johnson's performance.

The labor political strategists reported that its voluntary collections from union members went over the $1 million mark last year, and is expected to climb well above that in this election year.

They also authorized an extra "voluntary assessment" of 5 cents for each of the 14-million workers in AFL-CIO unions. The expected $700,000 this will raise will go for voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives on election day.

Meany said the key to victory for labor-backed candidates would depend on this campaign to get voters registered and to the polls on election day.

He said the increase in the voluntary "give a buck to COPE" political contributions showed an increasing political awareness of union members.

"I'm convinced that work, and not shouting, is what we need to do" to help Johnson and liberal congressional Democrats in the elections, Meany said.

Hoopmen Meet URI in Key Conference Battle

Redmen Look for Win on Home Court

By GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

How things have changed since UMass met Rhode Island at Kingston back last December 5. Since then, the disappointing Rams have compiled a 13-9 record, lost to Boston College by 52, and coach Ernie Calverly has announced his resignation.

Yet, Rhody is still leading the Yankee Conference with a 7-0 record. Tonight at Curry Hicks Cage, the only team with a chance of catching up with URI, UMass meets the Rams in a Yankee Conference game that will hold the key to the outcome of the race. Game time is 8 p.m.

The Redmen have to beat Rhode Island tonight, and then hope that Vermont or Connecticut can knock them off in remaining games. In that case, the teams would be tied. But if the Rams win, then they will own the title.

Rhode Island won the first game between the two teams in December, 76-66. But that was at Kingston, which is almost as bad as Storrs. Moreover, the Redmen have improved greatly since then, and their last four games have been great efforts including St. John's 55-53 luck-out Tuesday night.

Rhody figures to have added impetus after yesterday's resignation by Calverly. There is talk that if the Rams win their last four games, they will get a bid to the NIT. UMass coach Jack Leaman feels that a win tonight would gain an NIT berth for Rhode Island.

Nevertheless, Rhody can be beaten. The Rams are an on-and-off team who are capable of beating anybody on their schedule or losing to anybody on their schedule. Although they lead the Conference, their overall record has been somewhat disappointing.

Leading the Rams are co-captains Art Stephenson and Larry Johnson, a pair of seniors who are good for close to 40 points a game.

Stephenson, the center, leads Rhody in scoring and rebounding. He is a rugged 6'5, 220-pounder who can be murder off the boards. Stephenson is also a fine shooter, especially from medium range. The Corona, N.Y., native can do it all and he must be contained tonight if the Redmen hope to win.

The other co-captain is Larry Johnson, a 6'2 guard. Johnson is the Rams' outside threat as he is a great long-range shooter. He also does a lot of ball-handling. UMass cannot concentrate on Stephenson too much, since the slick and fast Johnson is an excellent scorer. In the first URI-UMass game, Johnson's shooting broke the game open.

The forwards for Rhode Island are 6'6 sophomore John Fultz and 6'3 junior Joe Zaranka. Fultz, a native of Natick, owns an excellent shot from the corner, and can move inside to hit the boards well.

Zaranka, a guard by trade, is Rhode Island's best defensive performer. His aggressiveness enables him to play well against bigger men. Zaranka does not do too much scoring, but his medium range jumper makes him dangerous.

Joining Johnson in the backcourt is 5'10 junior Mike Schanne, a transfer from Ferrum Junior College in Virginia where he was named to last year's J.C. All-America team. A quick driver with a good outside shot, Schanne also does a good job of handling the ball. Other Rams who figure to see a lot of action include 6'5 forward Stan Moody, and 5'10 guard Leon Mintschenko.

The Redmen have come through with four fine performances in a row, and the question is if they will be able to make it five in tonight's do-or-die game. After Tuesday night's heartbreaking loss to NCAA Tournament-bound St. John's, this might be hard.

But Leaman has been getting the team up for the big ones, and with the whole season hinging on tonight's game, UMass should be up for this one, too. The Redmen, 10-11 on the season, will go with their usual starting lineup of forwards Billy Tindall and Gary Gasperack, center Peter Gayeska, and guards Joe DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook.

Little Redmen Cagers Oppose American International Tonight

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

Assured of at least breaking even for the season, the UMass freshman basketball team meets the American International frosh tonight in a Cage battle beginning at 6 p.m. This is the second encounter of the season between the two teams.

UMass in the first meeting defeated the young Yellow Jackets 65-54 in a game played in Springfield. UMass in that game employed a zone press in effective fashion to break open a close game.

A.I.C. will again depend on two New York ballplayers to be the spark. Fran Maloney, a 6'3 forward, is a good outside shooter and has fine moves toward the basket. He also is a fine rebounder for his size.

The other important performer for A.I.C. is big 6'11 Al Carter. Carter, who to be truthful looked atrocious in the first game, has been improving since as evidenced by his 20 point performance Monday against Williams, a game A.I.C. won.

Also playing a main role for the Yellow Jackets is forward Tom Doyle, forward Dick Fekete, who played well earlier against the Little Redmen and Tom Cannon.

UMass raised their record to 9-6 with a ridiculously easy 94-40 win over Worcester Junior Monday. After the first five minutes the game was never in doubt as the Little Redmen scored the first 13 points in the game. Tonight, Coach Peter Broaca should be going with his starting lineup of the last couple of weeks of Ken Mathias, Tom Nally, Frank Schaffeld, Bill Greeley and Jim Ryan.

Frosh Puckmen Win, 8-2

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

A four goal out burst within a span of three minutes and 29 seconds of the second period powered the UMass freshman hockey team to an 8-2 win over the Amherst College Frosh yesterday afternoon at Orr Rink.

The first goal came at 11:24 for the Redmen in the first period when Gerry Burke took a shot that rebounded in front of the cage and was slammed home by Woody Cook.

The frosh made it 2-0 at 14:34 when Paul Riley took a shot that hit the post, and Tom Peters banged home the rebound. By the end of the period, UMass had taken 13 shots on the Amherst goalie.

Amherst closed the lead to one goal after just 20 seconds had elapsed in the second period on a shot by Bob Danforth. From then on it was all UMass. Tom Peters scored his second goal of the game at 3:22 of the period assisted by Paul Riley.

Ken Reddick made the score 4-1 with a goal at 5:44 of the period, then Ed and Paul Riley followed with goals soon after. The final tally of the period came at 13:45 when Mike Murray dug the puck out of the corner and passed it to Kevin Comer who blasted a slap shot by the Amherst goalie through a screen by Woody Cook.

The third period saw the frosh continue to dominate the play as they added a final goal midway through the period. Paul Riley picked up a loose puck in front of the Amherst cage and fired it into the net.

The win brought the freshman record back to the .500 mark at 4-4-1 with one game left in the season. The two goals by Peters were his fifth and sixth in the last five games while Cook scored his seventh goal in the last six games. Paul Riley had another big game for the Redmen with two goals and three assists. The final game of the season will be played next Tuesday against the Holy Cross freshmen at Worcester.

Wrestlers Pin Dartmouth

The UMass varsity wrestling team defeated Dartmouth last night, 24-23, to bring their record to 4-6. In a preview match, the freshmen remained undefeated by also winning over Dartmouth 36-8. It is the first time UMass has ever defeated Dartmouth College.

In the varsity action, Bill Goodwin pinned Paul Inashima 4:37 in the 115 pound class. At 123 Dave Wade pinned Chris Nitzel in 50 seconds; and at 130 class Paul Pearl was pinned by Pete O'Keefe in 3:47. Captain Gene Paltrineri, wrestling in the 137 class, pinned Ron McAlister in 1:41.

Brian Urquhart, 145, won a decision from Dick Newhoff, 8-1. In the 152 class, Alan Sgroi was pinned by Art Brown in 6:56, and Fred Fitzpatrick, 160, decisioned Bill Darter, 3-2.

Parker Simmonds was pinned by Bill Shadduck in the 167 class in 5:23. Ernie Smith lost a decision to Steve Boroffsky, 7-3, in the 177 class. At 191 Dick Gatick was pinned by Dave Nelson in 1:49.

With UMass behind at this point, 21-23, Glenn Cummins in the unlimited class won a decision from Bryce Lay, 6-2, and UMass won, 24-23.

Varsity Icemen Win, 5-3, Against Amherst College

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Three third period goals broke a 2-2 tie and sparked the UMass varsity to a 5-3 victory over Amherst College at a frigid Orr Rink last night.

Don Robinson's goal broke the tie midway through the final period. He scored on a short angle shot after being set up on a pass from Jeff Sanborn.

Billy Salin tallied a few minutes after and Sanborn collected the fifth UMass goal as he knocked home a rebound of a Dave Goldberg shot.

UMass had gotten off to a fast start in the first period scoring two times on goals by Bull McMann and Goldberg. Amherst closed the gap to 2-1 in the second period on a Bill Thompson goal and the score ended the half.

John Potter tied it up for the Lord Jeff's early in the third period at 2-2. Then UMass broke loose and Potter closed the scoring with another goal.

The loss dropped Amherst to a 2-14 record and upped UMass to 5-12.

Sit-In Cancelled by Committee Because of Poor Student Support

New Groups Organized

By BOB GORMAN
Staff Reporter

The Ultimatum which was given to the administration Monday night for open housing by 2 P.M. yesterday was cancelled due to lack of support.

The ad hoc committee changed its position because the majority of students weren't interested in trying to change the open house rules, according to Bart Kaplan. Since the students weren't interested in changing things, "why should we stick our necks out."

The reason for the failure of the ultimatum, Kaplan said, was the last minute withdrawal of the ultimatum proposal by Senate Pres. Jim Collins. This left the ad hoc committee with no student organization to back them. The result was the confusion of the Monday night meeting during the question period.

The senate dropped the original ultimatum for a less radical proposal on open housing which was passed at the last meeting. The Senate also banned any civil disobedience until the Board of trustees voted on the proposal. The new aim of the demonstrators will be the UMass National Liberation Front which will aim at preventing recruiting and other University involvements in the Vietnam war, according to a broadside issued Thursday by the ad hoc committee.

When asked if anything came out of the meeting Monday night Bart Kaplan said it was definitely advantageous. It proved to the demonstrators that the majority of students were not interested in any radical changes.

He also said that students and administration have had some dialogue since the issue of sweeping campus reform began at the sit-in, a week ago Thursday.

Furthermore, a number of small special interest groups have formed for their own benefit. However, the fiery Kaplan feels that these small groups will unite when a big issue arises.

The groups may be united by two separate events during March. On March 8 Colt Firearms Co. will be recruiting on campus. They will probably be protested by the demonstrators for Colt's involvement in the War by supplying M16 rifles.

The Board of Trustees will meet March 19 and unless the Student proposal for open houses is accepted, there may be renewed demonstrators.

Sufi

One of the small groups that have formed as a result of the Monday demonstration is Sufi. The new organization is, "committed to the self-determination for students in all activities within the University community and in all relations of the community to the state and the nation."

Peter Ward, one of Sufi's organizors, said that the new organization will act as a clearing house between students and the administration and outside organizations. The group is further committed to the legal settlement of all conflicts.

The group will be small with only 10 to 16 members and it will be more or less a research and information organization for the student body.

Sufi issued the following statement defining its goals.

"We are committed to the self-determination of students in all areas of activity within the university community in relation to the state of the nation. We are commited to the attainment of our goals through legal means: we will cooperate with other segments of the university community whenever feasible. We are opposed to all policies and practices by any members of the university community which delays or damages the realization of student self-determination.

Marines Storm Citadel in Hue; Heavy Fighting Sweeps Vietnam

SAIGON (AP) — U.S. Marines stormed the south wall of the Citadel in Hue Thursday against crumbling enemy resistance while outside the old imperial city American troops cut the supply line that has kept the North Vietnamese fighting for three weeks.

In the air, the U.S. Command reported warplanes for the first time Wednesday bombed the Hanoi radio station beaming Communist propaganda from North Vietnam. But Tokyo reported Hanoi radio still was broadcasting.

The ferocity of the fighting all up and down South Vietnam was reflected by the command's report that a record number of U.S. soldiers—543—were killed in the Feb. 11-17 period. Another 2,547 were wounded.

The Marines fought to within about 50 yards of the walled inner palace grounds under heavy fire from the 300 or so North Vietnamese still believed holding out in Hue.

Resistance on the outer wall crumbled when Marines seized a key tower and killed 15 defenders.

At the Citadel, AP correspondent John Lengel said it appeared about 40 per cent of the Citadel was in allied hands, with South Vietnamese soldiers heavily engaged.

Outside the city, a strong force from the U.S. 1st Air Cavalry Division and the 101st Airborne Division were driving toward the west and north walls of the Citadel and were about two miles away. Their greatest triumph was cutting the Communist supply line.

Military sources estimated 4,800 enemy troops have been killed in the battle in Hue and outside the city. He said the U.S. Marines had killed about 1,500 of the enemy, South Vietnamese forces about the same number and American paratroopers outside the capital another 1,800.

These casualty estimates provided the first indication of the intensity of the fighting inside Hue, where Marine casualties have been severe. This was reflected in the American casualty list.

An all-out enemy drive to overrun Khe Sanh still is expected. Marine officers were saying it could come any time—in a few days or a few weeks.

Winter Carnival Weekend Arrives

By BOB GORMAN
Staff Reporter

Winter Carnival began with a series of booms Wednesday night at 7:30 as the Class of '69 presented 15 minutes of fireworks over the Campus Pond. Also beginning the snowless weekend was the crowning of the Winter Carni Queen and a bonfire and basketball rally.

Stephanie Bourbonnais, Class of '71, was selected as queen to reign over the five days of festivities. The petite five foot tall blonde comes from Seekonk.

Following this, The Buckinghams and The Pilgrams were featured in a dance in the Ballroom. It was the second time that the Pilgrams have performed on campus. They were here during S.E.N.D. O.F.F. weekend also.

Over 800 persons attended the dance where the hit Buckinghams played.

A pancake breakfast started the Thursday events. The Revelers sponsored the breakfast which ran all morning long.

Later in the afternoon "From Bloomers to Bikinis", an old and new fashion show was presented in the Ballroom. The show was filled with students, parents and visitors who viewed the 26 outfits exhibited.

Featuring outfits from 1900-1968, the show was M.C.'ed by the witty Stan Levco. Six co-eds modeled the outfits. They were Pam Fuller, Marion Sterni, Ellen Gussow, Chris O'Hare, Barbara Nelson, Maryann Paraskos and Enid Salamoff.

The night was capped with a Folk Sing in the "New Hatch". Despite a problem with the P.A. system, the Hatch was crowded with listeners. Some of the folksingers included Rick Cooper, Dave and Diane Nathanson, the Jeffersons - Barry Wendall and Alvin Tompkin, Linda Brown and Frank Paluso.

On the slate for tonight is "Your Father's Mustache" with Your Father's Mustache Banjo Band and The Great Friendship.

Marines Question Bombing Policy Despite Administration Claims

KHE SANH, Vietnam (AP) — Some U.S. Marine officers question the effectiveness of the massive aerial bombing campaign that is supposed to give them the upper hand against a 40,000-man enemy force encircling this combat base.

Despite what the Air Force calls the greatest bombing campaign in history, Communist truck convoys still are moving through Laos and into South Vietnam with ammunition and supplies for the North Vietnamese forces.

Supply trucks have been spotted as close as two miles from the Khe Sanh base. Soviet-built tanks also have been seen in the same area. Some have been destroyed but many more remain.

Aerial bombardment and resupply of the encircled base is the cornerstone of the U.S. Command's defensive plan for the Khe Sanh area, where 5,000 Marines and 500 South Vietnamese troops are dug in.

Weather has been a major factor working against the Air Force, Marine and Navy planes attempting to support Khe Sanh. During one four-day period, no bombers could make visual runs in the area. They were forced to bomb by radar based on sketchy intelligence.

Low-lying clouds and fog are expected to persist until late April or May. Although the bombers report they have touched off more than 1,500 secondary explosions among fuel and ammunition caches, some Marines fear this does not mean that the enemy supply line has been seriously hampered, but only shows what a massive effort North Vietnam is putting forth.

Several Marine officers have pointed out that never in history has aerial bombing been decisive in a major battle. Many believe North Vietnam's Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, the victor over the French at Dien Bien Phu, has laid his siege plans knowing he will take heavy losses from aerial bombardment.

REDS CLOSE IN

The bad weather also seriously affects the Marines in another way. North Vietnamese troops free from aerial surveillance can move forward from old bunkers and trench lines closer to Marine positions.

The Communists have so successfully moved in so close to Marine positions that the Marine commander here has been forced to shave safety factor by calling in radar-directed bomb strikes ever closer to Marine lines.

In the beginning, B52 raids were carried out 3,000 yards or farther away from Marine lines. The New drop line is 1,500 yards. The line for radar-directed warplanes has been moved in from 2,000 yards to 500 yards.

The danger of hitting Marine positions is considered well worth the risk in the face of the closing North Vietnamese circle, now so tight that neither withdrawal nor reinforcement of the garrison is possible without heavy casualties. Some enemy trenches and bunkers are only 300 yards away from the Marine lines.

Enemy snipers are so close they fire at Marines planting mines and bolstering the barbed wire defenses around the two-mile square combat base.

Brandeis Names Abram President

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — Dr. Morris B. Abram, a lawyer and senior advisor to the U.S. mission at the United Nations, was named president of Brandeis University Thursday.

He will take over in September from Dr. Abram L. Sachar, 69, who has headed the non-sectarian Jewish-sponsored liberal arts school since its founding in 1948.

Abram, 49, widely-mentioned as a possible Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate in New York, told a news conference that he had considered that prospect "long before" the Brandeis post was offered to him.

"It is true that I had begun a survey of the political landscape in New York," he said after his appointment was confirmed unanimously by the Brandeis trustees.

Abram said he would have accepted the Brandeis post "then and there" had it been offered to him prior to his considering entering the race.

The New York Times reported earlier in the week that Abram's position "advocating a softer line on Vietnam" had been approved by Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N.Y., but that President Johnson disapproved.

Abram was quoted by a spokesman in New York before announcement of his appointment that, "I have no knowledge that President Johnson saw any statement of mine."

When asked about the matter Thursday, Abram said his position at the U.N., where he is also President Johnson's U.S. representative to the U.N.'s Commission on Human Rights, would prevent him from commenting on American foreign policy, which he said should speak with "a united voice."

Abram said he would support President Johnson for re-election. He added that he would support Sen. Robert Kennedy's future political aspirations.

Abram served as a prosecutor at the Nuremberg War Crimes trials after World War II, then joined an Atlanta law firm in 1948 and took part in a 14-year legal struggle to end Georgia's county unit election statutes.

In praising his newly-named successor Thursday, Sachar called Abram 'the man who smashed the county unit system in Georgia, at great personal cost to himself, to destroy that antediluvian political system."

Middlosex D.A. Droney Doubts DeSalvo Strangler

BOSTON (AP) — The district attorney of Middlesex County says he does not think Albert F. DeSalvo killed any of the 13 Greater Boston women whose deaths are attributed to the "Boston Strangler."

John J. Droney also believes more than one person was responsible for the deaths between June, 1962 and January, 1964.

DeSalvo has claimed he killed all 13 women.

"I don't think he killed any of them," Droney said Wednesday. "I don't think one person killed them all.

"Charles Gaughan, superintendent of the Bridgewater State Hospital, is also of the opinion DeSalvo is play-acting for publicity and the money involved," Droney said.

He said he strongly opposes including all 13 deaths in one charge on which to try the former Army boxing champion.

Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson says he has received new evidence on the deaths, but his office has not said whether the evidence concerns DeSalvo.

Droney said three women who claimed to have seen a man who committed stranglings described him as a blond, about 25, who bounced when he walked. DeSalvo has dark hair.

"One of the women talked to him for five minutes when he tried to attack her, leaving after he found out her husband was in the bedroom," Droney said.

He said the woman could not identify DeSalvo among several other inmates at Bridgewater State Hospital, where DeSalvo was taken after his arrest on charges not connected with the stranglings.

"Every psychiatrist that I talked to said the one who committed the stranglings was a homosexual," said Droney. "In every case in which DeSalvo was involved—and we talked with women as far away as Rhode Island—outside of molesting women in a sexual way he has never even slapped the wrist of one."

Gavin Presidential Organization Disbands in New England Area

BOSTON (AP) — An organization to draft retired Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin for the presidential nomination has suspended its efforts in New England, an administrative aide in the organization said Thursday.

Members of the organization were notified in a letter signed by Miss Dudley Hall, an aide to Donn Mitchell of Belmont, the chairman.

"General Gavin is and will continue to speak out and express his views and concern about international policies and domestic conditions but in the position of a non-candidate," the letter said.

Miss Hall told a Boston television station WBZ the decision was prompted by difficulty in raising funds and by the reluctance of Gen. Gavin to commit himself.

She said the decision was reached late last month. At that time Miss Hall said the group had the signed support of some 25,000-36,000 persons. Campaign offices had been set up in Lexington and Cambridge.

The TV station quoted Mitchell as saying he felt the draft Gavin movement had served its purpose as a catalyst. He did not elaborate.

Gen. Gavin, who resigned from the state Democratic Advisory Council last August in a disagreement with President Johnson's Vietnam policies, had been mentioned as a possible Republican candidate in the New Hampshire primary election.

Gavin said he supported Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York for the nomination.

Some of his own supporters, however, have asked him to help Sen. Eugene McCarthy, D-Minn., in his drive for the presidential nomination.

"This support I look upon as a disaster, for McCarthy is going to wind up supporting President Johnson," the station quoted Gavin as saying.

Gavin is the president of Arthur D. Little Co. of Cambridge, a research firm.

LONDON (AP) -- Prime Minister Harold Wilson's government boasted Thursday Britain soon will be the strongest military power in allied Europe and foreshadowed greater British influence in North Atlantic Treaty Organization affairs.

New Physics Studies Revealed By Graduate School Newspaper

Wide-ranging questions and some answers provided by high-energy physics studies are explored in the first issue of Massachusetts research, a new publication of the University of Massachusetts Graduate School.

In 12 pages of text, photos, and diagrams, the publication tells something of the how and why of high-energy physics research, fills in background on equipment and methods and details the contributions being made by the high-energy physics research project at UMass which is supported by the Atomic Energy Commission.

The publication is the first in a planned series that will explore major research areas in the sciences, social sciences and humanities at the University. It is being sent to educational and research institutions throughout the country and to educators and public officials in this state concerned with research and education.

Eleven UMass physics and astronomy department faculty and graduate students are in the second year of a research project aimed at practical verification of theoretical predictions about the particles and forces within the atomic nucleus, supported this year by a $155,000 AEC grant. Using specially-constructed University equipment and the University's CDC 3600 computer, the team is analyzing more than a million photographs of nuclear events taken at the Brookhaven National Laboratory.

The new publication examines the first results of this project—the answering of certain basic questions on the nature of how subnuclear particles named sigma minus and sigma plus decay as a result of high-energy interactions. The UMass findings confirm theories first advanced in the late 1950's and have been presented in a series of papers and at conferences in Berkeley and Heidelberg.

The raw data for the UMass study was gathered at Brookhaven's 33 billion volt Alternating Gradient Synchrotron (AGS) and 30-inch bubble chamber. AGS-fired particles that leave trails as they interact in the supercooled hydrogen of the bubble chamber can be photographed to provide a visible record of particle events. A year of picture taking at Brookhaven was needed to provide the one million photos of nuclear events for the UMass study.

About half the scanning, measuring and computer calculation has been done at UMass; additional analysis has been done by cooperating physicists at Yale University and Brookhaven. The UMass team is now moving to a new area of strong inter-action physics with the acquisition of a new sample of 120,000 photos from Brookhaven. A like number are being studied by collaborators at the University of California in Riverside.

"Save the Children" Committee Presents Program in Mahar Sunday

On Sunday, Feb. 25 at 7:00 p.m. Dr. Robert Liverman, a psychiatrist at the Massachusetts Mental Health Center will give a lecture to accompany the showing of a movie entitled "The Survivors." Dr. Liverman is representing the Committee of Responsibility, Inc. To Save War-Burned and War-Injured Vietnamese Children.

The Committee's program is a simple one. Recognizing the great need for reconstructive surgery among the civilian casualties of Vietnam, and the conditions existing in that country that limit the delivery of precisely those services that are most urgently required, COR members will bring those children of greatest need to this country until care is adequate in Vietnam.

In this capacity, COR is neither a peace group nor a protest group. It simply is a humanitarian group aimed at helping children and bringing to the foreground the medical needs of the survivors of Vietnam.

A non-profit, charitable organization, COR has its national headquarters at 777 United Nations Plaza, New York, and a Boston office at 131 State Street.

The Committee, non-political in purpose, is basing its program on that of Terre des Hommes, a private Swiss Philanthropy which has evacuated over 150 children from Vietnam, 30 of whom have been followed up after their return to Vietnam.

The fifteen-minute film vividly details the plight of civilians in Saigon, the refugee camps and the hospitals. The color sound film was made in Vietnam in April, 1967. Admission is free to the public. The lecture and movie will be presented in Mahar Auditorium.

Negro IQ Down Says Prof.

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Dr. William Shockley, Stanford professor and Nobel Prize winner, declared Wednesday night that IQ tests have shown a five point decline in intelligence of American Negroes since World War I.

The statement was disputed by two other panel participants in a conference at San Jose College.

Grant Awarded To Mount Holyoke

A grant of $50,000 has been awarded to Mount Holyoke College by the Rockefeller Foundation for the 1968 ABC program, President Richard Glenn Gettell announced today.

ABC is a summer program which offers academic and cultural opportunities to promising high school girls who want and need "A Better Chance." Participants are selected from among students recruited by the Independent Schools Talent Search.

Because of lack of available funds, there had been some doubt if the College would have an ABC program in 1968. Grants in support of the program, including one from Rockefeller Foundation, expired at the end of 1967.

However, members of the college community were determined to have a program this summer and showed their determination by raising over $22,000 themselves. This money consists of voluntary gifts of students, faculty, administration, alumnae and friends of the College as well as proceeds from numerous benefits held at the College. Over $12,000 has been pledged by the students alone.

This will be the fourth summer Mount Holyoke has had an ABC program. Each year approximately 70 girls have been enrolled in the program.

A Dental Deficiency

A serious deficiency exists in our total medical coverage at UMass. It is the infirmary's complete lack of a dental staff and facilities. It is a common policy of the infirmary in the event of a dental emergency to call in a private dentist from the outside providing there is one available. And even when one is located chances are good that the patient will have to be taken to the dentist's office since the infirmary is completely without proper dental facilities.

When asked the reason for this inadequacy, Dr. Robert W. Gage, the Director of the University Health Services, stated that lack of adequate space was the main reason for this deficiency. Part of the infirmary staff, including the whole of the psychiatric division, now occupies a single floor in Brooks because of the lack of adequate space in the infirmary. The space problem, Dr. Gage added, is magnified each year as the size of the University community increases.

Currently there is a study being conducted by the Bureau of Building Construction to determine the feasibility of an additional wing to be added to the present structure. The cost of the addition is put at $15,000 with a tentative completion date of 1970.

It is obvious that the University community cannot go two years without at least temporary facilities to meet our dental needs. The addition of an interum dentist and dental facilities would seem to be the most likely solution. And when it can take as long as a month to get an appointment with a private dentist in town, it is apparent that something must be done now to meet the immediate needs of the University community.

The Travel Tax

Last year, American citizens paid 3.6 billion dollars more to foreigners than they paid to Americans. This is one of the main reasons President Johnson has proposed a travel tax on tourists venturing abroad. All money between seven and fifteen dollars a day spent in a foreign country would be taxed at a five per cent rate while over fifteen dollars would be taxed at thirty per cent. An excise tax would also be placed on airplane and ship tickets for destination outside of the United States.

If this request becomes law, it will add additional burdens to government officials and tourists. More federal employees will be needed to handle paper-work and financial transactions. American citizens in foreign countries would have to worry not only about the awesome Customs Department but also about their daily outlay of expenses.

Travel to Europe especially, aside from the cost of air and ship fare, is possible not only for the wealthy but for middle-class citizens and students. Although it may be a little inconvenient for American standards, a tourist can easily live on a budget of five dollars per day except perhaps in July and August. There are special rates on railways and busses. Hotels and amusements are for the most part designed for the European salary which makes expenses very convenient for Americans.

It is not so much what Americans spend in Europe and elsewhere as the fact that they don't spend the money here. Travel to the U.S. is highly impractical for other than wealthy foreigners. In order to get a suitable hotel room, a person has to pay ten to twenty dollars a day. Meals and activities are high. About the only way even Americans can afford a vacation here is with an all-weather tent and a hot plate.

A program to encourage trips to the United States and to decrease the cost of travel and accommodations for foreign travelers, seems much fairer to the American tourist and advantageous for Europeans and others than a travel tax.

Campus Situation Calls for Cool Heads

Members of the Board of Regents and State College Board of Trustees report that not only their mail but their social lives are filled with attacks upon the institutions they govern. "I am damned sick and tired of having everybody jump on me about the university every time I go to a dinner party," one regent said recently.

The centennial fund raising drive of the U C Berkeley campus is faltering, and lack of confidence in the campus is said to be a major reason. Not enough corporate advertising could be secured to publish a Sunday newspaper supplement on the occasion of UC's one-hundredth birthday.

The legislature seems to be "hawkish" on the subject of student conduct, and extreme legislation which might have been pigeon-holed at earlier sessions is given a chance of passage this year.

A State Senate subcommittee has overreacted to performance of The Beard at Cal State Fullerton by demanding that two professors involved in the presentation be fired and threatening punitive legislation if this is not done.

Both State College Chancellor Glenn S. Dumke and Cal State Fullerton President William B. Langsdorf have pointed out that such firings would be serious violations of academic freedom.

Another proposal, being studied by the Senate Judiciary Committee, would establish a statewide California Campus Patrol, with local campus police chiefs bypassing the state college presidents and university chancellors to report directly to a commissioner in Sacramento, appointed by the governor.

Chancellor Murphy, who testified against this proposal, called it "an intolerable separation of authority and responsibility." But he later told the regents, "the very fact that this proposal could develop visibility, could develop the dignity of a serious proposal. . .carries a very interesting and important message. The people of California are getting more than just upset. They are getting angry and they intend, by one means or another, to return the campuses to law and order."

But if the university and the colleges are already enforcing their rules and regulations adequately and punishing violators what is it the public is angry about?

One suspects that people are upset because campuses have become centers of opposition to the Vietnam war and sources of criticism of American society in general.

Many Californians seem to believe that the task of the colleges and university is to teach students skills with which to make a living and to do only that. They do not believe the campus should be a center of independent inquiry and criticism.

Youth Has a Stake

They are wrong, for why should young people ignore the Vietnam war and the draft which has such overwhelming importance in their own lives? And why should bright, able students and scholars such as those California is fortunate enough to possess fail to study the racial conflict which tears at our cities and our national life?

While The Times may disagree with some of the students' opinions and with some of the scholars conclusions, we believe that this process of questioning and criticizing is fundamental to an academic community in a democratic society.

The problems of the community beyond the campus form a chaotic laboratory in which students and professors must be permitted to work if solutions to these problems are ever to be found.

Crackdown Is Possible

There is an alternative course, and California seems dangerously close to embarking upon it.

This is to suppress campus dissent, to pass restrictive laws and to stiffen police measures, to crack down on forms of campus activity and opinion which the public finds distasteful.

If this happens, the small number of extremists to be found at some public campuses will have won, for they will then be able to enlist the support of many sympathetic students and faculty members who are not themselves extreme. Small scale incidents will grow rapidly to large scale confrontations and the cause of moderate men will be lost. And with the loss of their cause, education will have begun a disastrous decline.

In this climate of opinion budgets would be cut, able teachers and researchers would depart, and one of the most valuable institutions in California, its system of public higher education, would crumble into mediocrity or worse.

This need not happen if we keep our cool. The Times believes we should give authority, and the flexibility to make that authority meaningful, to the chancellors of the university campuses, and to the presidents of the state colleges.

In troubled times they have proved to be able men indeed. They, and the overwhelming majority of their faculty members and students, are deserving of the continued, earnest support of California's political leaders and its people.

Age Has Nothing to Do with It

To the editor:

It is not only the nineteen-year-olds who are dissatisfied with the gist and detail of what they are being taught. Age has nothing to do with it. What matters is that within all non-exact disciplines of thought—such as economics, sociology, political theory, educational theory and psychology—something essential has been missing from the very beginning.

Those disciplines ought to have been created with due regard for a number of religio - philosophical fundamentals: the aim of individual existence, the optimum path of social evolution, the nature of individual existence before and after life on earth, man's non-carnal attributes, ethical imperatives, and the role played by the Supreme Being, if such a one does exist. Although some of the non-exact disciplines have been created in deference to some of those fundamentals, none has taken due account of all of them. Moreover, there has been a tendency for practicians of each discipline to act in disregard of results found within others.

It is true that each of the non-exact disciplines could, if it wanted, defer to Christian doctrine or mundane philosophy. But the former, by the super-human elevation of the ideals it established, has always been impracticable as a foundation for specialized thought. And as to mundane philosophy, it has often been marred by excessive antagonism towads established religion. Also, it has been debarred from effectively expressing itself on certain subjects of great importance, which were considered the exclusive preserve of the churches.

All the non-exact disciplines of thought, being without proper guidelines, have been subjected to the influence of unworthy motives. Consequently, the growth of all the disciplines has been lopsided. Consequently, we have all been ill governed and ill taught for several generations. The present generation, being under the cumulative impact of all the nonsense said and done by its elders, is worse off than they are. I regard this as the root cause of the present turmoil, on campuses and in cities across the nation.

The remedy, of course, consists of forming a new philosophy, accompanied by a reconstruction of all the non-exact disciplines of thought.

There Is an Opposition

To the editor:

We think that it should be shown that there is opposition to the anarchist policies on campus. This advocation of total power is a definite sign of irresponsibility. To take over the administration is merely a joke perpetrated by the "new left" on campus. It would do nothing but harm the University and our own educations. We were always under the impression that students attend a University for the purposes of bettering themselves, not for the purpose of liberalizing the University.

We also have yet to find anyone who has been forced to attend this institution. It is also our belief that until the students themselves feel they are more competent than the current administrators, they should concentrate on improving their minds. Then, and only then, is any one in a position to criticize rules and administration policies, which were made by men far more educated than we.

Protesting at the Cage—1978

Amherst, Mass. 1978—A meeting protesting lack of faculty and administrative rights was held last night on the UMass campus in the Curry Hicks Cage. The protesters were joined by four high-level students to hear the grievances of the faculty and administration.

The meeting was chaired by a student, Bob Smith. When Smith told the audience that he hoped the meeting would be productive, one of the faculty leaped to his feet and pointed an accusing finger at Smith. "You dirty student," he shouted. "We were promised you would be nothing but a moderator. Where do you get off injecting your hopes that this meeting will be productive?" The teacher sat down and the meeting continued.

Dean Field was the first to speak. "The administration has waited a decade for the wanton destruction in Southwest to stop. I proclaim that the next person caught with damaged University equipment will be executed. And I don't mean next week and I don't mean tomorrow; I mean now." The faculty and administration erupted in a mass of whistles and applause.

A member of the legislature arose next. He glared angrily in the direction of the President of the Student Senate, the highest government official in the state. "The state legislature has not agreed with everything the Student Senate has done in the past. If the Senate does not act to our satisfaction, we're going to burn the Council Chambers, now!"

One of the professors grabbed the mike. "We faculty are sick and tired of unprepared students. The next student who comes to any class unprepared must be expelled from the University. We demand perfection from the students and we demand it now."

President Lederle was the final speaker. "Somebody's been recruiting my staff," he cried. "I know this to be a fact. Whenever my back is turned, a spy from another school sneaks into Whitmore and tries to take Tippo away from me." The president was bordering on tears at the thought of this conspiracy.

Just then, the President of the Student Senate, who was trying his utmost not to offend anyone, politely denied Lederle's charges and offered to remove the spy who was trying to recruit Tippo, if Lederle would simply name the culprit.

"Name the culprit. Why should I have to do that? Who are you anyway, some kind of fascist? I'm an administrator and I have the right to make any accusations I please. But I don't want to be unreasonable in my demands. I don't demand you rectify all the unequities of our social system, now. You have until tomorrow at 2:00."

Demonstrating Is the Thing to Do

This is NOT an indictment against demonstrators as a whole, but against those who fail to uphold the dignity and sincerity of responsible demonstration thereby weakening its effectiveness.

To the editor:

Demonstrating is the thing to do these days. After all, without some petty argument to pick with that black-guard, Authority, you're just not "with it." Why, if you don't waste precious time and energy mouthing sensationalism—especially inaccurate sensationalism—then what purpose is your life serving!

The demonstration syndrome is enshrined in distortion: take a worthwhile, sincere cause and see how effectively you can disguise it in half-cocked, inflammatory euphemisms. That way, the impressionable and immature will be certain to blindly follow your bandwagon.

Maturity? Responsibility? Harumph! You've got to be joking! No, life's meaning evolves from "free" thinking—from vocalization of righteous protests and demands against the unjust dogmas of civilization.

Yes, demonstrating is great—it makes you highly respected and admired. Besides, it makes people think you are a hardworking, constructive individual, striving to improve the world.

Our Representatives?

To the editor:

After the meeting which occured Monday night at the cage, we developed the feeling that the so called "student representatives" were advocating an anarchy. We are willing to admit that they have grievances which have some truth claim in them; however, we disagree with the means by which they want to go about getting these changes. We also do not believe that they were the real representatives of the students of the University. We do not consider them our representatives. Do you?

A Mistaken Idea of Student Rights

To the editor:

I was very disturbed to see my picture in Friday's Collegian as part of a group yelling "Get 'em out". At no time during the demonstration did I say such a thing publicly and if I said anything of the sort to anyone with me, the Collegian is guilty of misquoting and eavesdropping.

Many of the demonstrators, I believe, have a mistaken idea of "Student Rights". Every student at this University is here voluntarily, as a result of accepting an offer of admission from the school. In addition, most of the cost of our education is subsidized by the State. But this does not mean that the students should be denied any voice in deciding the rules of the University.

The main purpose of a university is to serve its students, i.e. to educate them and prepare them to improve the world. The faculty and administration, therefore, are being paid to serve the students. Only when the Administration fails to formulate policy in the best interest of the students, and instead becomes subservient to tradition or politics, do the students gain the right to protest.

Flexing Our "Fiscal Biceps"

To the editor:

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian recently printed an article on the election of new officers for the paper. Comments ranged over a vast spectrum of campus life and some were directed towards the Student Senate and its budgeting procedures concerning the Collegian. The implication was that the Senate has been trying to flex our "fiscal biceps" at the paper. I have been in the Senate for over three years and can truthfully say that one area that we have not been at all arbitrary about is in budgeting publications.

Quite a bit of student tax money is involved in the Collegian, and we would be derilect in our duty were we to simply rubber stamp budget proposals. I cannot remember ever having cut anything of significance from the paper's financial requests. We have carefully scrutinized these proposals yet never have denied any legitimate requests.

This year the Collegian budget proposal is going to be much larger than ever before. New budgeting procedures that will insure that all interested students will be able to comment on the budget are in effect this year. Your student senator will be able to give you more information on this.

Mr. Weinerman noted that he maintained a policy of honesty in all his dealings with the campus paper. The Senate also must maintain such an air of objective sincerity in its dealings with the University community. It has in the past and there really is no basis for allegations about Senate infringement of publications.

We Respect the Proper Channels

We the undersigned officers and members of the Class of 1970 Executive Council are in basic agreement with the tenets held by those recently involved in the Student Union demonstration and the meeting in the Cage. We feel that there is need for change in many aspects of University policy including open housing, meal tickets and residence halls. However, we disapprove strongly of the behavior of the so-called "dissenters" and the means with which they have attempted to effect the changes they desire, i.e. ultimatum.

We respect the proper channels of University government: Student Senate, Faculty Senate, Administration and Board of Trustees and see these groups as the most expedient means of change.

Educational Goals Are Examined In Berkeley's 'Muscatine Report'

"In this world of high-powered technology and of sweeping social and economic forces, the promise of the future is not stasis but accelerated a change. The campus should have built into it the capacity for continuous adaptation; it should have built into it a continuous tradition of trial and experiment." Such is the stated purpose of the forty-two recommendations presented to the Academic Senate of the University of California, Berkeley, in EDUCATION AT BERKELEY: Report of the Select Committee on Education ("The Muscatine Report"), now published in its complete form by the University of California Press.

Created in 1965 to examine the educational aims of the Berkeley campus and to discover new means for implementing those aims, the nine-member Select Committee, headed by Charles Muscatine, spent almost a year considering suggestions offered by students, faculty, and administrators for insuring the University's responsiveness to rapidly changing conditions while protecting its traditions of higher learning and scientific inquiry.

High on the list of problems confronting the campus was a sense of alienation affecting much of the student body. Since the size and largely non-residential character of the campus precluded the development of the close community spirit which is central to the operation of smaller institutions, many students had turned to the Free Speech Movement of 1964 for a sense of identity in a meaningful cause.

Although the most plausible means of restoring to these students a feeling of participation in the intellectual life of the campus was closer faculty-student contact, this relationship was least evident where it was most needed—among the lower division students, particularly freshmen, who were less able to cope with feelings of isolation and loneliness.

Also in need of extensive reform was the curriculum. Stringent degree requirements based on outmoded concepts of the "liberally educated man" proved in most cases to be more stifling than helpful and to alienate students even further.

The most important solution proposed by the Committee concerned the establishment of a Board of Educational Development which would authorize and support experimental interdisciplinary courses and degree programs which were outside the jurisdiction of any existing college or department. It would achieve the Committee's prime objective by providing for sustained self-study and constant experimentation in the University.

The report reaffirms the central place of teaching in the University. While stressing the necessity for creative research to stimulate superior performance in the classroom, the Committee recommended written proofs of teaching ability as new requirements for faculty promotion, in addition to evidence of research capabilities.

Among the proofs would be student evaluations of their courses and opinions of faculty colleagues who had observed classes. More responsible opportunities for practical experience in student teaching was encouraged, not just for Teaching Assistants but for all graduate students.

UMass Varsity Trailed Early

Redman Runners Outdistance UConn

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

STORRS—The UMass varsity and freshman track teams traveled to Storrs last night to avenge the losses suffered at the hands of the UConn Huskies last year and both teams were successful. The varsity, trailing in the scoring after being blanked in the shot put and the pole vault, came back in the broad jump, high jump and running events to top U-Conn 61-43. The solid performance of the frosh team resulted in a 62-41 win.

The UMass team got off to a good, surprise start when Bill Wylen and Dave Schlatkos placed first and third respectively in the 35 pound weight, usually a UConn stronghold. The Huskies then swept the shot put and pole vault to take the lead; but this did not last long. Rocco Petitto and Bob Morong took one and two in the broad jump, and John Ariensen and Paul Nyman placed first and second in the high jump and the Redmen were on the way.

Tht strong field of dash men, Steve Burrell, first, Dave Marble, second and Steve Chase, third, took all three spots. Following this performance was Marc Levefer, who took first in the hurdles in 7.9 seconds to tie the UMass record for the 60 yard hurdles.

The longer running events began with UMass enjoying a good lead. In the mile, Greg Bowman went up against UConn's top runner, John Vitale. Bowman stayed on Vitale's tail for the first seven laps of the eight lap race. Then he moved by him, but Vitale's strength paid off as he took back the lead with a quarter of a lap to go and held on for a two second win.

The 600 was a different story as John Anderson and Bob Hasselbaum turned in excellent performances to take first and second against UConn's Flanagan.

In the two mile, Vitale came back and turned in a strong performance to better UMass' top two miler Charlie Lang. In the last event before the relay Dave Evans and Diego Gonzalez ran strong races as they took first and third in the 1000. The varsity relay team of Bill Donaldson, Anderson, Steve Burrell, and Hasselbaum ran to an easy victory to top an all-around good performance Coach Ken O'Brien was quite satisfied with the entire team's performance. "They did what they had to do," he said. He had praise for both Anderson and Hasselbaum, who both excelled in the 600 and the relay, Evans and Gonzalez, the 1000, and high jumper Nyman. The coach said he was "extremely happy" with the performances of Wylen and Schlatkas in the weight throw.

The Little Redmen also put out an all-out effort in downing the Little Huskies. Standing out in the frosh list of stars was Ron Wayne who ran three races, took one first and two seconds for 11 points.

Coach O'Brien said he was pleased with the total performance and singled out the jobs done by Heywood, Wayne and the relay team.

Tomorrow both the varsity and frosh teams travel to UNH ot battle another Yankee Conference rival. Coach O'Brien feels UNH has a stronger dual meet team than UConn and could possibly force UMass down to the relay.

UMass will have to stop UNH in her strong points, the broad jump, hurdles, weights and pole vault. The strong weight events that the Little Redmen might come up against should be offset by the middle distance and distance runners of the frosh.

Icemen Take Win Streak On Road

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Looking for their longest winning streak of the season, the UMass hockey team will travel to Vermont tomorrow for a 7 p.m. game against Norwich Academy.

Chances for the Redmen to boost their two game winning streak at the expense of the Cadets are pretty good. Norwich has had a miserable season, winning one while losing 15 going into a contest with A.I.C. Thursday night.

One bright spot in the Norwich lineup is goalie Tom Smestor who is leading the division in total saves. Last year, he was one of the leading goalies in Division II.

UMass has had little trouble scoring goals in their last two games coming up with 13. The team's passing was accurate against Amherst for the first time in quite a few games.

Goals by Bill McMann and Dave Goldberg got the Redmen to a 2-0 first period advantage. McMann's came on a pretty play as he slapped home a rebound of a Mike Coyne shot.

Amherst rallied to knot the score by early in the third period on goals by Bill Thompson and John Potter.

Don Robinson broke the deadlock 54 seconds after Potter's goal converting a Jeff Sanborn pass

Billy Fallon tallied the winning goal on a flip shot that Amherst goalie Terry O'Malley gloved then proceeded to drop into the net. Jeff Sanborn put the Redmen into an insurmountable 5-2 lead with his 17th goal of the year.

Potter closed out the scoring with his second goal late in the game. O'Malley had a busy night in the Amherst net making 5 saves while UMass goaltender Pete Scoville had 32.

VARSITY SWEATERS

Varsity sweaters are in for all varsity football, soccer and cross country team members. Pick them up at the Athletic Equipment Issue Office Window.

Gymnasts Travel to Syracuse

After losing by two points to the Midshipmen of the Naval Academy last Saturday, the UMass gymnasts will travel tomorrow to Syracuse, New York, for a 2 p.m. match in Archibald Gymnasium.

The Redmen, currently 3-3 on the season, will be looking to raise their record above the .500 mark. Syracuse University has a 1-5 record in the Eastern Gymnastic League. Springfield College is now in sole possession of third place in the league having completed its season with a 4-3 record. While the Redmen are meeting Syracuse, the Naval Academy will face Army. A win by each team would result in a three-way deadlock for third place in the Eastern League.

Coach Erik Kjeldsen will stick with the same lineup of the last four weeks. Bob LeClair and Steve Brown, two of the tri-captains, along with Toby Kasavana and Joe Reed will be competing on the long horse.

On the parallel bars, Joe Godwin, Dave March, Reed and Brown will be competing for the Redmen. George Seibert, March, Reed and Brown will represent UMass on the horizontal bars.

Skiers Sponsor Racing Derby

Sunday the skiing Redmen will co-sponsor with Amherst College a three race UMass Winter Carnival Alpine Ski Racing Derby at Haystack Mountain in Wilmington, Vt. Starting time for the Amherst two run slalom is set for 10 a.m.

The UMass two run giant slalom will begin at 1 p.m. and the AIC Giant Slalom will start at 3 p.m. Varsity teams from Amherst, AIC and UMass will be in contention for bronze, silver and gold medals.

The Little Redmen will ski against the Amherst College Junior Varsity on the same courses also for bronze, silver and gold medals.

Collin and Jim Garstang along with Dave Kamilla, Mike Zanoll and Dick McHugh will ski for the varsity. Ned Kelley, who is still nursing a bad ankle, will not race until the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference next week end at Wildcat Mt. in New Hampshire.

UMass is favored to win at Haystack having won four out of six meets against Amherst, AIC and other schools. Amherst also is very strong having won the other two meets in league competition so far. Amherst, last years league champions, is seeking to keep the title.

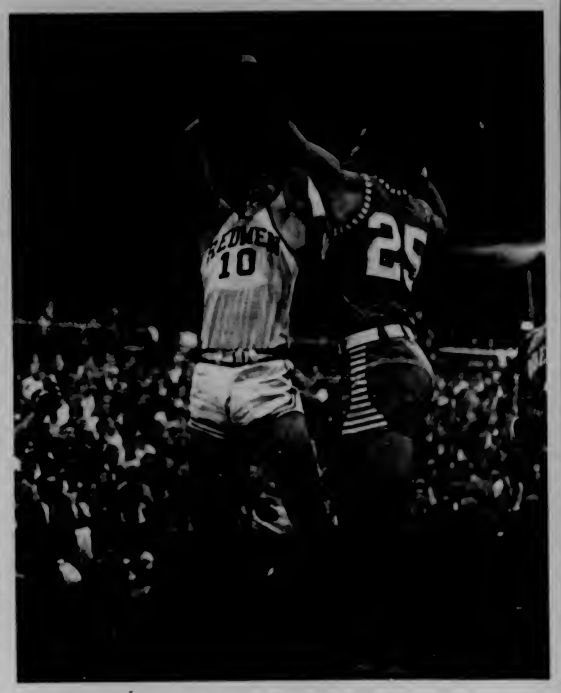
Redmen Ruin Rhody, 76-68

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

A coronation turned into a tight race as UMass dominated previously undefeated in conference play Rhode Island by an overwhelming 76-68.

Playing tight defense and getting the shooting punch from Captain Billy Tindall the Redmen drew to a first half lead. It was simply a case of the entire Redmen unit outplaying John Fultz and Larry Johnson of URI. Fultz, with help from Johnson and Joe Zaranka, gave the Rams a quick 7-3 lead. At this point Tindall staged an exhibition that spurted the Redmen to a 16-10 lead. In this rush Tindall contributed nine points.

After this display the game settled down to a hard-nosed affair. Peter Gayeska, playing the finest game of his career, held in check Art Stephenson and contributed nine points in the rest of the half. He completely dominated Stephenson on the boards, out rebounding him 9-1.



For Rhode Island Johnson was keeping them close. He scored on six long range jumpers. The Redmen were unable to break the game open; their largest lead was only nine points and Rhode Island left the floor trailing 36-30.

Three minutes into the second half, Rhode Island drew to within one on the strength of a Johnson bomb. At this juncture Tindall hit from the side and Stephenson picked up his fourth foul hitting Gayeska, and two field goals by Tindall and Ellerbrook brought the bulge back to eight, 45-37.

After that Rhode Island could never get closer than seven. The only trouble the Redmen had was when Tindall picked up the fourth foul with 11:29 to play and Gayeska fouling out three minutes later. Dick Samuelson spelled Gayeska and Girotti replaced Tindall. Thanks to the floor generalship of DiSarcina the Redmen stayed on top.

Towards the end of the evening Rhode Island was employing a half court press and DiSarcina was shredding it apart. He finished the evening with nine assists and 14 points. Many easy layups resulted from his pin-point passing.

In the last 3:18 Tindall thrilled the capacity throng with four driving layups. He finished the evening with 29 points playing only 34 minutes.

TWO, THE HARD WAY — Joe DiSarcina strains to put in a jumper over the outstretched arm of John Fultz.

This was a total team effort. Along with the heroics of DiSarcina, Tindall, Gayeska, Ray Ellerbrook and Gary Gasperack must be commended for their timely offense and tough defense respectively. Jim Girotti and Jack Gallagher, along with the dependable Samuelson, did capable jobs when called upon to help alleviate the foul situation.

REDMEN RANTINGS —Jack Leaman was whooping it up in the locker room. All he could get out was, "Sensational, sensational!" He praised Gayeska, saying, "He's the hardest worker on the team. He played his finest game tonight."

The crowd was counted at 3700, but don't believe it. The Redmen faithful were hanging from the balconies to watch the win.

Ernie Calverly, speaking on the game, said, "UMass certainly deserved to win. They completely outplayed us on the boards. We were lucky to be trailing by only six at the half."

Little Redmen Win, 70-67, Over AIC

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

Three clutch foul shots in the last minute and a half by Bob Dempsey proved to be the winning points as the UMass freshman basketball team edged the American International frosh, 70-67, last night at the Cage. The win was the tenth of the season for the Little Redmen against six losses.

UMass found itself in a tough game last night as the A.I.C. frosh, who had been defeated once this season by the local frosh, were determined not to let it happen again. Down by as much as eight in the second half, the Springfield team made a strong run at upsetting the Little Redmen.

Led by Fran Maloney, A.I.C. closed to within one, 65-64, with 2:11 left. Jon Kruper, who played his finest game in weeks, hit a jumper to boost the margin back to three. Maloney canned a foul and the score stood 67-65 with 1:46 left.

It was then that Dempsey began his heroics, canning the first of his fouls. Maloney, however, who was brilliant the whole second half, came back with a driving layup, to bring the Yellow Jackets to within one with 1:25 to play. The remainder of the game was frantic.

A.I.C. gained possession from a missed UMass shot, but missed four shots down their end. Dempsey gained possession for the frosh with a diving save at the end line. UMass, however, missed a foul attempt with 38 seconds left, and the ball was tied up for a jump. Frank Schaffeld won the tip for the Little Redmen and it was then that Dempsey iced the triumph for UMass with both ends of a one and one opportunity.

The first half was marked by poor shooting on both sides. The game was tied six times in the half as neither team could string any consistent scoring together. At the 7:02 mark, however, the Little Redmen began a six point run that helped carry them to the dressing room with a 33-29 halftime lead. Kruper and Ken Mathias each scored ten points in the half.

Early going in the second saw Tom Doyle of A.I.C. lead the Aces back in the game as the lead exchanged hands several times. UMass made, however, their decisive streak of the game, outscoring the Yellow Jackets, 9-2, midway in the half, and that streak held off A.I.C. for the rest of the game, with Dempsey providing the clincher.

Kruper led UMass scoring with 20, with Mathias adding 19 and Bill Greeley, his shooting in the beam, scoring 14. Maloney had 22 with Dick Fekete and Doyle having 16 and 13 respectively.

URI Hoop Coach Calverley Resigns

University of Rhode Island basketball coach, Ernie Calverley, Wednesday announced his resignation of that post, effective at the end of the current season, to devote his full time to the post of Assistant Athletic Director, a post he was held for several years. Rhode Island meets UMass in a key Yankee Conference contest tonight at the Cage.

ERNIE CALVERLEY

Calverley, ending his 11th season, has been instrumental in leading the Rams to the Eastern prominence they attained during his own illustrious playing days at URI. His coaching record, going into tonight's game with the Redmen, is 152 wins against 123 losses.

Under his direction, the Rams have won one Yankee Conference title outright, and have tied for the crown on two other occasions. They are presently two games ahead of UMass with three conference games to be played in this year's race.

During his college days at URI, Calverley was one of the country's foremost stars. He led his alma mater to one of basketball's great upset wins, by winning the 1946 National Invitational Tourney. His two-hand set shot from the backcourt that won one tourney game, goes down as one of basketball's great moments.

Calverley held the URI scoring record of 1868 points until that record was broken by one of his own products, Steve Chubin. Besides Chubin, Calverley has tutored such stars as, Dennis McGovern, Dave Ricereto, Charlie Lee and Art Stephenson.

Before coming to Rhode Island as coach, the veteran mentor served as coach of the Providence Steam Rollers of the old National Basketball Association, coach at Bryant College and freshman coach at Providence College.

Calverley's resignation takes New England basketball fans by surprise since he has gradually become one of the foremost coaches in the east. No successor has been named and reports have it that none will be named until July, since Rhode Island sources have stated that Calverley will stay in his title of coach until then, presumably to aid in recruiting chores.

Speculation also has it that Calverley's resignation will coincide with a N.I.T. invitation for the URI team, should they sweep their last four games.

Hoopmen Travel to Maine Tomorrow

By GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

Fresh off last night's clutch win over Rhode Island, the UMass basketball team finished up its Yankee Conference schedule tomorrow night against Maine at Orono. The game will be broadcast live on WMUA starting at 7:25 p.m.

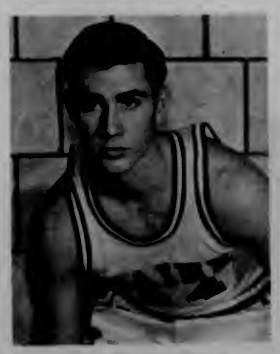
UMass handed it to Maine in their first meeting at the Cage by a score of 78-39. However, the Black Bears always give the Redmen trouble at Orono where the court is ten feet shorter than the regulation 95 feet, giving the home team an advantage.

Maine has been having its problems this year, and is currently in fifth place in the Conference.

Leading the Black Bears is 6'3 guard Jim Stephenson, a junior captain who scores around 20 points a game behind an excellent jump shot. Stephenson was the second leading scorer last year in Conference play.

After Stephenson, the Black Bears don't boast much. The tallest players are 6'4. One of them is center Hugh Campbell, a fair rebounder with an occasionally successful lefthanded hook shot.

The other forward is 6'4 senior John Eisenhard whose scoring potential is improving and whose rebounding potential is one of the better on the team.

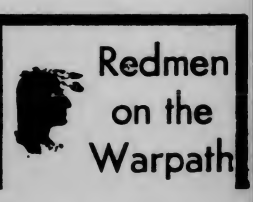


The center is 6'4 junior Greg Burns, who sat out last season after a good freshman year two years ago. He has good speed for a big man and is sometimes troublesome off the boards.

Maine, which uses a unique 1-4 offense to counterbalance its lack of height, plays 5'8 senior Dave Smith as the lone guard. Smith does all the ball handling and is often used against the opposing team's press. He is not a scoring threat.

Other guards who will help Smith in the backcourt include senior Tom Farrell, a good ball handler, and sophomore Tom Lane, a fine outside shooter.

The game will round out UMass' Conference season, and the Redmen now have to hope that Vermont or Connecticut beat Rhody next week. Rhode Island plays Vermont at Burlington tomorrow night, a place which the Redmen would like to forget. Vermont's overtime win earlier this season was very very costly.



UMass will probably bank their hopes on next Saturday's Rhode Island - Connecticut game at Storrs.

DVP to Present Urban Affairs Symposium

ROBERT C. WOOD
Undersecretary of Housing and Urban Development

LEO C. CUSICK
General Manager of Boston MBTA

A symposium on urban affairs and the crisis in the cities will be presented at UMass by the distinguished visitors program. The distinguished visitors program is financed and operated by the undergraduate students at the University for the purpose of keeping the University Community sensitive to the world in which it exists. Chairman of the committee is Allen J. Davis, a senior from Westbury, Long Island, New York. Chairman of the Syposium is Christopher D. McGahan, a junior from Greenfield, Massachusetts.

The first speaker will be Mr. Leo J. Cusick, formerly with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, now general manager of Boston's Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority. Mr. Cusick's speech will be delivered at 8:00 p.m., this Thursday, in Mahar Auditorium of the School of Business Administration. He will speak on "New Concepts of Urban Transportation".

On March 3 the Honorable John Convers, congressman from the First Michigan District (Detroit) will speak at 8:00 p.m., in the Student Union Ballroom. Detroit was the scene of violent riots last summer.

Following this speech, on Tuesday, March 5, there will be a panel discussion on "Human Freedom in the American City." Participants will be: Ivan Ashley, anti-poverty coordinator for the Commonwealth Service Corps; Attorney Louise Day Hicks, unsuccessful Boston mayoral candidate and former school committee chairman; Monsignor Francis J. Lally, editor of the Pilot, official organ of the archdiocese of Boston, and chairman of the Boston Redevelopment Authority; and Dr. James Q. Wilson, professor of government at Harvard University. The moderator of the panel to be held in the School of Business Administration auditorium 120, will be Dr. William C. Havard, chairman of the UMass Government Department.

On Thursday, March 7, Mr. Edward Logue, former administrator of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, will speak in Bartlett Auditorium on "The City and Urban Renewal." Mr. Logue was also unsuccessful in his bid to win Boston's mayoralty last fall.

Senator Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut will be the next distinguished visitor. As chairman of the Senate sub-committee on executive reorganization of the government operations committee, he has undertaken an extensive, wide-ranging inquiry into the crisis in American cities. He will speak on Sunday afternoon, March 10, at 3:00 p.m., in the Student Union ballroom.

Two days later, at 8:00 p.m., in the School of Business Administration auditorium 120, Mr. Nathaniel Goldfinger Director of the AFL-CIO Research Bureau, will address himself to the role of labor in the evolving urban policy. Mr. Goldfinger is the author of "The Urban Crisis."

The Honorable Theodore Roosevelt McKeldin, twice mayor of Baltimore and twice governor of Maryland, will deliver a lecture on "Intergovernmental Relations: The Local View." McKeldin was appointed by President Johnson to serve on his Advisory Committee on Intergovernmental Relations. He was recently named chairman of Urban Coalition for Baltimore.

Monday, March 18, will see Robert C. Wood, undersecretary of Housing and Urban development, speaking on Intergovernmental Relations from the Federal viewpoint. Wood is the first person to hold this position in this newly created department. He was formerly at the Joint Center for Urban Studies of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University.

The last event of the symposium will be another panel dis-

Former CBS President to Speak On the Role of the Journalist

Fred W. Friendly, former president of CBS News and now director of broadcast journalism at Columbia Graduate School of Journalism, will speak at UMass this Friday on the role of the journalist in a changing society.

Noted for his writings on the responsibility of the journalist, Mr. Friendly will be projecting some possible changes for future mass media and the challenge they will present to the journalist.

The talk and question and answer session will be held in Mahar Auditorium, UMass, and is open to the public. Sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, Mr. Friendly will be the opening speaker for the Five-college communications symposium taking place that weekend.

The purpose of the two day Symposium, March 1 and 2 is to challenge some of the existing concepts of the mass media and present new ideas for mass communications, according to Symposium Committee chairman Jim Foudy, UMass '68.

Open to the public, the program will present a series of seminars and panel discussions in the Student Union beginning at 9 a.m. March 2. All seminars are being conducted by professional journalists and will be an attempt to start a dialogue about the methods of mass media, according to Foudy. College editors and broadcast managers from Western Mass. campuses have been specifically invited to attend. And the entire program is open to the community.

Mr. Friendly comes to the Five-college area after a long distinguished past with the mass media industry.

Born in New York City in 1915, Friendly entered broadcasting in Providence, R. I. in 1938. After serving in WWII he joined up with Edward R. Murrow in 1948 for a 12 year television partnership that brought to the new media some of its most distinguished hours.

In 1962, Friendly was awarded the Special George Foster Peabody Award. The award read in part: "More than any other individual he has brought a dynamic meaning to the phrase 'electronic journalism'... Television owes a debt to Fred Friendly not only for his broadcasts but for the broadcasts of other TV journalists on other networks and stations which have been stimulated by Mr. Friendly's pioneering."

President of CBS News from 1964 to 1966, he quit that year over a dispute with management which insisted on airing a fifth rerun of "I Love Lucy" instead of Ambassador George Kennan's testimony in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on Vietnam.

Friendly is now the first Edward R. Murrow Professor of Broadcast Journalism at Columbia and is TV consultant to the Ford Foundation.

President Lederle Interviewed on WBZ Newsmakers

By DON EPSTEIN
Managing Editor

U Mass President John W. Lederle said Sunday night he favors "some sort of random taking of students between the ages of 19-26 rather than have the impact of the draft centrally on the older students."

Graduate enrollment at the University will be down 25% next year because of recently announced draft deferment regulations, he said.

"Grad students should not have a special status," he said, but added that "we think it should not have a sudden impact on the older ones."

Dr. Lederle was interviewed over WBZ radio's Newsmakers 1968 program.

Asked whether the University discriminates in favor of Negroes, Dr. Lederle replied "we feel that the role of UM, the people's university, is to reach these students." He told of a Negro girl from Fall River who only scored 350 on her College Board verbal exam yet rated second in her graduating class from high school. Upon further investigation the University discovered that this girl came from a home where English wasn't spoken.

Concerning student demonstrations and protests against the Vietnam war, the UM President said it shows evidence of youth's concern "about the basic justification for our being there.

"It's a sign they care," he added. Dr. Lederle stated that today's students are more interested and concerned in all the problems of life.

Commenting on the recent controversy of a UMass-Boston professor urging his students to attend an anti-draft meeting last October, Dr. Lederle said he knew of no instance where a professor disbanded his class and urged students to take part in an anti-war demonstration.

Asked to comment on the proposed legislative probe of the faculty at the school's Boston branch, Dr. Lederle said, "I see no reason why professors should be neuters and not have a position on matters of public policy."

He defended the right of educational institutions to provide the opportunity for recruiting by any organization including all branches of the military and Dow Chemical. Peaceful picketing is fine but violence "we will not tolerate," Lederle said.

In recent weeks, certain legislators have attacked the University's right of fiscal autonomy. The UM President said, "without fiscal autonomy UM would not have moved forward as it has. We are now attracting outstanding men. This is a crucial thing; it places the buck with the trustees and the administration. Without fiscal autonomy the decisions were made by junior administrators in the state house.

"We welcome any investigation," Lederle said. "We have an open book."

Concerning state revenue problems and the increased cost of higher education Dr. Lederle commeted, "The big problem in Massachusetts is that we do not have an adequate revenue base. The increase from taxes (sales tax) has not really aided public education." Lederle continued, "we're not getting the kind of money that's needed to provide for the kind of program that the people need."

Dr. Lederle stated that although UM has been able to maintain a faculty-student ratio of 15:1, the area that the University has fallen behind in is the necessary support staff for an increasing student enrolment of 1500 per year. This support staff includes people working in the dorms, placement and financial aid oflice, and library. Because of inadequate funds, Goodell Library now has only 600,000 volumes, when for a school of this size, a million volumes is needed.

Concerning U Mass - Boston, Dr. Lederle said, "We're not dragging our feet. Finding a location is always a problem in a big city." He stated that there are still people who don't believe that the need exists for a low price, high quality educational institution in Boston.

"We want to come into Boston by invitation", Lederle said. "In a location mutually desirable to all."

Asked about increased student freedom, Lederle said, "We don't want to run the University like West Point or Annapolis," He continued, "Part of getting a college education is learning how to live. At the University we are trying to minimize regulations and restrictions."

Buses Collide on Indiana Road; Twenty-Nine Injured, Four Dead

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP)—Two chartered buses collided in drifting smoke on the Indiana Toll Road west of here Sunday, injuring 29 persons. Moments later an automobile accompanying the caravan collided with a semitrailer truck at the crash scene and burst into flames, killing four persons.

Indiana Toll Road police said all but one of the 29 injured bus passengers were treated at a South Bend hospital, then released.

State police said three busloads of a Black Muslim group from the Cleveland-Youngstown, Ohio, area were traveling westbound to Chicago when the crash occurred in smoke caused by a farmer burning corncobs near the major east-west highway.

President's Rule Is Proclaimed In Uttar, India

NEW DELHI (AP) — The Indian government proclaimed President's rule Sunday in Utter Pradesh State—the third state to come under the direct rule of New Delhi. The other two are Haryana and West Bengal.

Pres. Zakir Husain dissolved the Utter Prodesh government and suspended the state assembly. The action followed the resignation of Chief Minister Charan Singh on Feb. 17 and the inability since then of any party or coalition to achieve a majority to rule.

The Uttar Pradesh population is estimated at 80 million.

Smith College Choir to Combine With Trinity College Glee Club

Two musical events are scheduled for next Sunday at Smith College, Northampton. The Smith College Choir and the Trinity College Glee Club will present a joint program of classical works for mixed chorus at 4 p.m. in the Helen Hills Hills Chapel; and a faculty recital by William Wittig, flutist, will be given in Sage Hall at 8 p.m. Both concerts are open to the public, with a nominal admission charge in effect for the afternoon concert only.

The performance by the Smith Choir and Trinity Glee Club will be a repeat of their concert given in Hartford on February 18. Catharine Melhorn of Smith's music faculty and Robert Gronquist of Trinity's will conduct a program of four works, featuring Stravinsky's Mass, accompanied by the Peabody Conservatory Wind Ensemble.

Two works by Purcell will be presented, Jubilate Deo and Funeral Music for Queen Mary II, which will be accompanied by the Trinity Brass Choir. The program will conclude with Laetatus Sum, a psalm by the 17th century composer Claudio Monteverdi.

Smith College music faculty members who will assist Mr. Wittig in the Sunday evening recital are George Walker, pianist, Philipp Naegele, violinist, and Ernst Wallfisch, violist. The program will open with Hindemith's Sonata for Flute and Piano, followed by Roussel's Joueurs de flute.

The third work will be Song and Dance 1958 (Revisited 1968), composed by Edwin London of Smith's music faculty, and the program will close with Serenade Opus 25 for Flute, Violin and Viola by Beethoven.

William Wittig, who joined the Smith faculty this year, is a graduate of Oberlin Conservatory where he also earned his master's degree. He studied in France under a Fulbright award and taught for several years at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana.

He has played with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra and has appeared as flute soloist with the Indianapolis Woodwind Quintet. Locally he has been an ensemble coach at the Cummington School of the Arts and at Greenwood Music Camp in Cummington.

Sunday evening, March 10, the Smith-Amherst Orchestra will present a concert in the new Music Building at Amherst College in Amherst. Edwin London will conduct the first orchestral performance in the new facilities.

Greek Cypriots Ballot In Presidential Election

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Greek Cypriots voted for a president Sunday and forecasters predicted that President Makarios would receive more than 90 per cent of the ballots.

Officials estimated that ballots were marked by more than 225,000 of the 250,000 electors. The large turnout was believed to indicate widespread backing for Makarios.

Results were expected to be known early Monday on this eastern Mediterranean island over which Greece and Turkey nearly went to war last November.

No disturbances were reported despite tensions stemming from an incident Friday night in which supporters of Makarios broke up a rally for his only opponent, Dr. Takis Evdokas, and pelted the candidate with yoghurt and fruit.

Evdokas, 41, a psychiatrist, was the candidate of the Enosis Front, a small faction that would try to settle the island's political problems by merging it with Greece.

Evdokas has accused Makarios supporters during the campaign of using intimidation tactics on the voters. Foreign observers said they saw no sign of coercion at the polls.

Makarios, 54, a Greek Orthodox archbishop, remained aloof during the campaign. He has been president since Cyprus became independent of Britain in 1960.

Makarios told the voters his re-election would enable him to pursue a compromise solution of the long-standing differences between the 500,000 Greek Cypriots and the 100,000 Turkish Cypriots.

The Turkish Cypriots played no part in Sunday's voting. Under Cyprus' constitution, the president is chosen only by Greek Cypriots while Turkish Cypriots vote separately for a vice president. Communal differences led to the withdrawal of Turkish Cypriot officials from the government four years ago.

Workhouse Publishes Brochure Extolling Establishment's Virtues

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Allegheny County workhouse officials have put out a brochure extrolling the virtues of their establishment. They want more inmates.

Edward J. Lesko, a member of the board of managers at the jail in suburban Blawnox, explained the situation Saturday to the county commissioners at a budget hearing.

He said the workhouse has vacant cells which could be occupied by criminals from other counties and thus earn $5.94 a day from the committing counties.

However, the state charges only $4 a day at the Western State Correctional Institution in Pittsburgh.

"We have to compete for business," said Lesko.

"That's why we got out the brochure advertising our place. We're telling anyone about what a nice place we're running."

Detectives Search for Cash Thieves

LONDON (AP)— Detectives fanned out over London Sunday night to seek an expert gang that pulled off Britain's biggest cash raid since the great train robbery.

Post office officials worked all day adding up the loss in Saturday night's raid on a London postal sorting office and finally came up with a figure of $336,000 in used banknotes.

It was the biggest raid in hard currency since the great train holdup in Aug. 1963, when a highly organized gang got away with $7 million. Only about a quarter of the loot has been recovered.

Detectives said they believed the 6-man gang that struck Saturday was helped by inside information.

Four men wearing stocking masks walked into the Paddington sorting office when only a skeleton staff was on duty. They ignored bags full of coins and made straight for a number of sacks containing used banknotes.

A fifth member of the gang who preceded his colleagues into the office was dressed in a postman's uniform. A sixth waited outside the building in a getaway car.

The raiders, armed with clubs, forced 6 postmen into a strongroom. Two men who resisted were struck and had to receive hospital treatment.

Red Sox 'Impossible Dream' To Be Shown at Newman Center

The 1967 Boston Red Sox were an unbelievable team that brought to Boston fans what was considered by most to be an impossible dream. No one could believe that the team could come from ninth place to a pennant in one year under the direction of a freshman manager.

The "impossible dream" had happened and Sox fans wanted to remember it as long as they could; in fact they still want to remember it. With this in mind, the home television station of that fabulous team made a special broadcast tribute to the team; a broadcast that is bound to be remembered for a long time by all those who saw it.

A movie of this broadcast, called The Impossible Dream, has been made available to only certain, select groups. It is a movie narrated by the Red Sox own announcer Ken Coleman, with the sights and sounds of the season never to be forgotten by any Bostonian or by any Red Sox fan.

Red Sox Manager
DICK WILLIAMS

This movie is coming to UMass. The Newman Club has been one of the few places selected by Red Sox public relations director Bill Crowley to be able to show this movie.

Nixon Disheartened By Latest Gallup Poll Popularity Reports

WHITEFIELD, N.H. (AP) — Richard M. Nixon said Sunday he is "not particularly encouraged" by the latest Gallup Poll which showed him running even in popularity with President Johnson.

The survey, published Sunday, gave each man 42 per cent, with 16 per cent undecided.

Nixon is campaigning in New Hampshire for the state's presidential primary election March 12.

Asked by reporters to comment on the poll, Nixon said:

"In the past we have not been discouraged when the polls were unfavorable. And we are not particularly encouraged by the polls today.

"The polls are not going to determine the Republican presidential nominee."

He also was asked to comment on New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's statement indicating he would accept being drafted as the GOP nominee.

Rockefeller said in Detroit "I'd face it," if presented with a draft.

Nixon said, "As for Governor Rockefeller's statement, the only current relevance would be the impact it might have on the intensity of the write-in vote in New Hampshire."

While Rockefeller has said he is not a candidate for the presidency, a group of New Hampshire supporters have organized to give him a write-in vote in the primary.

Nixon estimates the write-in potential at between 20 and 25 per cent of the vote.

London Police Battle Demonstrators Against Immigration Curb on Negroes

LONDON (AP)—More than 100 police battled with fighting demonstrators and white bystanders during a march on No. 10 Downing Street Sunday to protest new moves aimed at curbing colored immigration.

The police, on foot and mounted, struggled to separate the rival groups for and against legislation being rushed through by the Labor party government to limit a flood of Asian immigrants from East Africa.

Shouts of "Nigger, go home" were countered by cries of "Fascist swine."

Some arrests were made. Twenty policemen barred the entrance to Downing Street, where Prime Minister Harold Wilson lives, and behind them were arrayed more than 50 others.

The protest march included members of Asian immigrant societies and white civil liberty organizations. Some were of the long haired beatnik type.

When the procession reached Whitehall after marching through the center of London it found more than 500 counter-demonstrators waiting for them and chanting: "Get them out, send them home" and "Get the Reds out."

Fighting quickly broke out. Police finally succeeded in herding the two groups to opposite sides of the wide thoroughfare, from which they continued hurling insults at each other.

Police let a small group of demonstrators go to No. 10 to hand in a letter of protest against what they called "racial discrimination." Also allowed through was a group of white counter-demonstrators who want immigration halted.

They were led by George Farley, 61-year-old bus driver, who told newsmen: "I am representing the working class. There are 2,000 people where I work and they all want them stopped."

This view explained the switch of a number of left-wing laborites who previously demanded an end to racial discrimination. They say they have been overwhelmed with complaints from white electors in the districts they represent against the influx of Asian and West Indian immigrants.

The Conservatives, who first introduced legislation to slow the flow of colored immigrants, are similarly split over the bill introduced last week by Home Secretary James Callaghan to check the flood of Asian immigrants with British passports from East Africa.

Callaghan's bill is aimed at the thousands of Asians in Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania who were given British nationality as a safeguard against the African governments when they acquired independence. The bill restricts immigration by the British passport holders to 1,500 a year.

The British government, faced with high unemployment caused by austerity measures and fearing racial unrest as less money is available for social spending, aims to push the legislation through Parliament by Thursday.

Asians have been fleeing East Africa in ever-increasing numbers because of new Kenya labor laws favoring Africans. More than 300,000 Asians living in Kenya alone chose to keep British citizenship when the nation became independent.

The exodus took on frantic proportions Saturday when Kenya slashed the Asians' basic travel allowance from $600 to $240, reflecting Kenya's growing concern about the currency drain.

U. S. Birthrate Drops to Lowest Point, Says Population Bureau

WASHINGTON (AP) — The birthrate in the United States reached its lowest level in recorded history last year, but the Population Reference Bureau said this was not necessarily due to new contraceptive devices.

Robert C. Cook, bureau president, noted the previous record low in births occurred in 1932-33 when oral contraceptives and intrauterine devices did not exist. Cook remarked, "I believe this demonstrates that the decline is due, not to contraceptive advances, but to a realization on the part of younger married couples in America that rearing children in this complicated and expensive world presents big problems."

The National Center for Health Statistics show the birthrate at 17.9 per 1,000 population, a decline from the 1966 low of 18.4. Numerically, there were 3.53 per million births in 1967 and 3.61 million in 1966.

The center said the rate probably will go down even more this year.

"People in the United States are reducing their fertility for a variety of reasons. One of the most important, I am sure, is to do a good job of raising and educating the children they choose to have," Cook said.

Wilkins Demands South Carolina Governor Admit Error in Shootings

ORANGEBURG, S.C. (AP) — Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People NAACP, Sunday called on South Carolina Gov. Robert McNair to admit that the fatal shooting of three Negro students at Orangeburg by state highway patrolmen early this month was "a tragic error."

"I expect that as a man he is sick as some of us are about this," Wilkins said, "but let him say the state was wrong and see where we can go from there."

Wilkins cautioned his audience "you do not have to burn the town down" to achieve its civil rights goals.

He spoke in White Hall on the South Carolina State College campus, about 200 yards from the spot where state troopers shot three students to death and wounded more than 30 the night of Feb. 8 in an encounter that climaxed four nights of violence.

His address to the State College NAACP chapter, counseling contlued legal and moral pressure to achieve civil rights demands without violence was applauded by a capacity throng of about 1,500.

Wilkins spoke on the eve of resumption of classes at the predominantly Negro college for the first time since the confrontation between state officers and students, including some from adjoining and also predominantly Negro Claflin College, where classes already have resumed.

Pass-Fail Needs Reform

Before the pass-fail option can become a useful implement of reform, change is necessary within the option itself.

Theoretically, the incorporation of pass-fail into the University's academic program is a reform measure. But in practice, it merely reflects the genuine desire of both faculty and students to update and improve a nearly obsolete grading system. The desire cannot be fulfilled, the change cannot be more than minimal, until the pass-fail program itself is revised and reformed. Although it is actually too early in the semester to evaluate the success or failure of the program, it is not too soon to question and predict its general effectiveness.

According to the Student Handbook, "any full time student who has completed his sophomore year shall be eligible to use a pass-fail option in one—and only one—course each semester. This option is open to all eligible students in all courses except those needed by the student to satisfy core or distribution requirements of the University or of his school, courses in a student's major (unless his department rules otherwise), or any course in which an instructor refuses to admit students on a pass-fail basis." Those who accept the option and do passing (A through D) work in a course will receive the appropriate number of credits and a grade of "P", which will in no way be counted in the cumulative average. Failing work, on the other hand, will be treated as it is outside the option; that is, a grade of "F" and inclusion in the cumulative average.

In general, then, a course which a student is taking as an elective is open on a pass-fail basis. But because the option depends on the discretion of instructors and major departments as well as on the discretion of students, there are exceptions to the rule, some of which seem to oppose the very purpose of pass-fail.

This brings us to an analysis of the program's purpose. The pass-fail option is not intended to relieve the student of the burden of studying, but rather to allow him to strengthen his skills in areas where he feels that they are weak. It is meant to encourage enrollment in courses which students would not ordinarily take within the usual grading system, to enable students to take courses which interest them without fear of penalization for inability or inexperience. The purpose of pass-fail is, in fact, to help the student achieve that "well-rounded" education that the University seeks to provide.

With this purpose in mind, some of the exceptions to the pass-fail program appear rather questionable. We would expect to find perhaps several exceptions from each department. We can understand why so many of the sciences, due to the nature of their material and the objectivity of their grading systems, are not being offered pass-fail. But it is odd that such courses as introductory art and music, courses which a student would be likely to take on a pass-fail basis, are excluded from the option. And even more surprising is the history department's total rejection of pass-fail for all of its courses.

There is no obvious reason why an interested student should be denied his pass-fail rights in all history courses. Nor is there any indication in the program's design that what was to be the option of student or instructor would become the option of an entire department. An explanation is called for, one which the history department, due to a series of chronic meetings over the past few weeks, has been unable or unwilling to give. Their comments would perhaps provide some enlightenment.

But more than explanation, the success of the pass-fail program depends upon expansion. Exception must be limited to those instructors who doubt the workability of pass-fail for their particular courses; the choice cannot be left to one or two department heads. Moreover, the option must be made available in nearly all courses outside a student's major, thus demonstrating greater faith in student discretion. Only then will the pass-fail program become a measure of reform rather than a reflection of the need for reform.

Tonkin Issue Reheated

Defense Secretary McNamara's appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for testimony on the Gulf of Tonkin incidents of August, 1964, did little more than heat up a longstanding controversy. And the public still lacks a clear view, between a security cloak on one hand and broad allegations from high places on the other.

The administration is obviously miffed at the persistent needling of Sen. Fulbright, who questions the reality of the gunboat attack of Aug. 4, 1964, that led to the first U.S. air strike against North Vietnam. Mr. McNamara's statement, released over the senator's protests after the hearing, cited "highly classified and unimpeachable" evidence there was an attack that night and that it was made by North Vietnam.

It is interesting that the committee is not disputing that such an attack had occurred Aug. 2, in daylight. The layman searching for answers might wonder, then, why the committee is reluctant to believe the North Vietnamese, having experienced no retaliation, would undertake a night attack two days later. Or why Sen. Morse contends the North Vietnamese "had every reason to fear" the U.S. destroyers. If Washington was looking for an excuse to send bombers to North Vietnam, would not the first attack have been sufficient?

The tug-of-war over this prelude to the bombing of North Vietnam reflects the whole issue of military or civilian control of national defense. And it has produced no real evidence so far that military decision-making belongs anywhere but with the military.

Re-examining Older Drivers

To the editor:

My feelings, in general, on re-examination for elderly drivers have been expressed on many occasions and it is a matter of record that the Registry has introduced legislation and has spoken in favor of re-examination for drivers over 70 years of age. While such legislation did not receive approval (partially because of the age discrimination feature) the photographic license law which becomes effective on January 1, 1969, will provide an opportunity to physically re-examine a driver who must appear for a license renewal. This, in effect, means that a physical appearance re-examination will occur every 4 years together with a re-examination on vision and rules of the road.

No one would dispute the fact that most people begin to suffer significant physical impairment by the time that they reach 70 years of age—and increasingly so beyond that age. The problem may be heart, vision, hearing, vascular disorders, arthritis, rheumatism, mental alertness, physical coordination or numerous other age-connected disorders. Many elderly drivers are aware that these illnesses affect their driving and an increasing number of them are voluntarily relinquishing their licenses. However, we feel that a more reasonable and logical approach would be to require re-examination by a physician after a certain age before a license could be renewed—not leaving it up to the driver or to the Registry to make the decision as to whether he is in proper condition.

Supporters of Quiet Change

To the editor:

The advocates of Student Rights who spoke at the Cage Monday night seem to feel that there is mass support behind "Now Power" and fiery ultimatums, and that those silent ones among us are in the clutches of apathy. I would say the real support is behind change, not ultimatums, and the silence of many students indicates, not apathy, but a hearty respect for the stable process at change through representation and orderly debate upon which our student and faculty senates now operate.

Perhaps many, as myself, who viewed these fiery threats of ultimatum were reminded of the behavior of a pouting child who is made to eat vegetables before dessert.

The Baker House Metamorphosis

To the editor:

Unbeknown to the campus at large there has been a slow change in the attitudes and behavior of the once infamous Baker Boys. After several years of semi-barbaric behavior during which time we earned the nickname of the Animal House, Baker is emerging as a leader in the Central Area. Word begins to slowly filter back about the gentlemen of Baker House.

Since bad news always travels a lot faster than the good, and I am specifically referring to a poem that was published concerning Baker written by the Van Meter girls, I wanted to let the outlying districts, such as Southwest and The Girls Quad, in on the change. What is the reason for the change? A lot is to be said for the guidance of our house father Ray Bender. His dynamism and true concern have finally shone through after a dark winter.

First semester was hard. There are some who hate to see old times go and old traditions lost, no matter how bad they may be. But as time goes on Baker House finds that leadership and responsibility, though more work is much more rewarding socially and academically than its destructive counterparts.

Our "slum" has had a face lifting and the Baker Boys are becoming Baker Men.

HOT AIR BALLOON REGATTA — Competition for the MacArthur trophy will begin among intercollegiate hot air balloonists in late May.

Hot Air Balloon Regatta Competition Scheduled

The first intercollegiate hot air balloon regatta is being planned for late May, 1968. Competition is for the MacArthur Trophy, a small crystal prism of Steuben Glass which is submerged in a bowl of champagne when presented to the winning pilot.

To capture the trophy one must pilot a hot air balloon. The balloon is a 50 foot high man carrying Montgolfier type hot air balloon. Events of the regatta will be: distance race, a one hour flight below 2000 feet; spot landing contest, a half mile flight toward a target; balloon hurdles, half mile over simulated obstacles and sky vault, a precision 1000 foot ascent against time.

Balloons for the first regatta are to be supplied by The Aerostats, the only hot air balloon school in the world, located now in Connecticut. Balloon envelopes are made of modern nylon in a variety of vivid colors, and can be manufactured in college colors. The passenger compartment of the balloon is a traditional wicker basket which has been reinforced with nylon and steel cables. Control of the "ups and downs" of the balloon is managed by changing the temperature of the air within the balloon envelope, using an in-flight air heater which burns liquid propane carried with the balloon. With practice a good pilot can hover his balloon within inches of the ground.

The Aerostats conduct lessons which lead to the regular federal pilots license which is required. Prerequisite is a medical exam by a physician designated by the Federal Aviation Administration and a student pilots license, now automatically issued when the physical is taken. Lessons are conducted in Connecticut, or by special arrangements in groups of ten on campus. Sport balloons are transported by sliding it into the back of a station wagon once the envelope is rolled and stowed in its wicker basket.

Most balloon flying takes place early in the morning or late in the afternoon when winds are generally lowest. Inflation of the balloon is accomplished by using the in-flight burner to inject heated air into the horizontally deployed envelope. Inflation takes less than ten minutes and costs less than one dollar. The pilot steps into the basket, adding more heat. For more information write to The Aerostats, Box 342, East Hartford, Conn. 06108.

Surgeons Rejoin Arm of Boy

BOSTON (AP) — An operation to rejoin the partially-severed arm of an 18-year-old Malden youth was termed 'a qualified success" Sunday by a spokesman at Massachusetts General Hospital.

The victim, James Cain, was operated on Saturday night by a team of surgeons led by Dr. Lef Ottinger. The youth had caught his arm in a pancake batter mixing machine Saturday night at a Saugus restaurant where he worked.

The hospital spokesman said it would be several days before doctors were certain the arm would heal completely, but "it looks reasonable."

Cain was reported in "fine" condition Sunday following the operation.

McCarthy Charges LBJ With Projecting Violence

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP)—Sen. Eugene McCarthy, said Sunday that President Johnson has "projected year after year of continuing violence," and said the government has taken "almost no significant action to remedy the basic conditions which lead to riots" in the nation's cities.

The Minnesota Democrat, campaigning to upset Johnson for the party's presidential nomination, said the nation is on "a course of inaction in the face of danger."

"If we continue on this present course," he said, "We may well witness a bloody fulfillment of the President's grim prospect —a prospect of mounting lawlessness, troops and tanks in our streets, and increasing fear and desperation among many of our people."

"McCarthy said there is a need for a "full-scale and determined effort to win the war at home—a war which today we aren't even fighting."

His remarks came in a speech at the Alpine Club as he continued his hunt for votes in the state's March 12 primary. Renewing his criticism of U. S. policy in Vietnam, McCarthy said:

"Our South Vietnamese allies do very little fighting. Their leaders are stealing hundreds of millions of dollars of your money for their private fortunes. And we are gradually destroying the civilian population, whose hearts and minds we are supposed to win."

"In three years under the late President Kennedy," McCarthy said, "America was on the move. Now the fabric of that great achievement is unravelling."

"All around us we see that the last five years have brought decay to replace progress, near despair to replace hope, and failure in war to replace success in the pursuit of peace," he said.

McCarthy said the great issue in his contest with Johnson "is not Vietnam. It is not rising violence in the cities, or rising prices. It is one of leadership and the direction of this nation."

St. Louis Symphony to Perform Works of Schuller and Mozart

Major orchestral works by Schuller, Mozart and Prokofieff will be presented by the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra in Northamptton Thursday evening. Eleazar De Carvalho will conduct the orchestra in John M. Greene Hall at 8:15 p.m., Lee Luvisi appearing as piano soloist.

Tickets for the concert, the third event in the Smith College Concert Course, may be obtained through the department of music, Sage Hall. Those tickets remaining on the evening of the performance may be purchased at the door.

The program will open with Fanfare for St. Louis by Gunther Schuller, a new work commissioned by the St. Louis Symphony for the opening of the orchestra's new home, Powell Hall. The composition for woodwinds, brass and percussion was completed on New Year's Day 1968, and given its premiere performance by the orchestra on January 24.

Pianist Lee Luvisi will be heard in the program's second work, Mozart's Concerto No. 21 in C, k. 467, and the concluding selection will be the Symphony No. 5, Opus 100 by Sergei Prokofieff.

Mr. Luvisi was graduated from the Curtis Institute of Music to become its youngest faculty member, and is now artist-in-residence at the University of Louisville. He was a Laureate of the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Concours in 1960, and has appeared with many of America's leading symphony orchestras.

Brazilian-born Eleazar De Carvalho has conducted the St. Louis Symphony and directed its musical activities for five years. He is also conductor of the Brazilian National Symphony, is a member of the Brazilian Academy of Music, and holds a doctor's degree in music from the University of Brazil. Known as a leading interpreter of modern music, he is also a composer with two prize-winning operas to his credit. Mr. De Carvalho spent several summers at Tanglewood as protege of the late Serge Koussevitsky, and later became head of the orchestral division.

The next musical event at Smith College will be the senior piano recital of Miss Patricia Blanton of Memphis, Tenn., on Friday, March 1. She will play in Sage Hall at 8 p.m.

London Police 'Arrest' Armored Protest Car

LONDON (AP) — Traffic police "arrested" a deadly looking armored car in the middle of London on Saturday.

The 7 - ton WW II vehicle, bristling with gun barrels, was being used as part of a demonstration staged by a London group which is trying to persuade people not to visit military-ruled Greece this summer. They parked it outside the Greek travel bureau.

A policeman came over, looked around, saw what looked like a faulty exhaust, then gave the car's driver a ticket. The driver had rented the armored car from a film effects company.

Solo Recital to Be Presented By Smith College Senior

The first solo senior recital of the year at Smith College will be presented by Miss Patricia Blanton of Memphis, Tenn., pianist Friday. The public is cordially invited to hear her play three major works at 8 p.m. in Sage Hall on the campus in Northampton.

To open her recital Miss Blanton will play Johann Sebastian Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C Major from the Well-Tempered Clavier, Volume I. Her second selection will be Sonata No. 3 in E by Ross Lee Finney, and her concluding work will be Beethoven's Sonata in E-Flat Major, Opus 7.

Miss Blanton has studied piano during her four years at Smith with Lory Wallfisch of the music faculty, a teacher as well as keyboard performer. A music major, Miss Blanton is participating in the Honors Program, writing her thesis on "The Orpheus Legend in Music." She is a dean's list student and has appeared in a number of chamber music ensembles at the college.

Farmer Claims Contact with Spacemen

AMARILLO, Tex. (AP) — A 29-year-old farmer from Loco, in the Texas Panhandle, underwent a voluntary polygraph test yesterday intended to help confirm or deny his story of contact with human-like space creatures.

Carroll Wayne Watts, the farmer, was questioned by L. R. Wynne, owner of the Amarillo Security Control Co. and a member of a state board which licenses "lie detector" operators in Texas.

The test was commissioned by the Houston Post with results for release at 10:30 p.m. CST Sunday.

While Wynne charted his reactions, Watts displayed and examined the series of black and white Polaroid photographs which the farmer said confirms his experiences.

The truth examination was the idea of Dr. J. Alley Hynek, chairman of the astronomy department at Northwestern University and civilian adviser to the Foreign Technology Division of Wright-Patterson AFB, Dayton, Ohio.

The FTD office is the Air Force clearing house for reports of Unidentified Flying Objects 7 UFO's and is known publicly as Project Blue Book.

Hynek said his preliminary examination of some of Watts' pictures revealed no obvious fraud. "If this is a hoax, it is a very, very clever one," he said.

"In fact, it would be such a clever hoax that it would be almost as interesting as what this farmer claims has happened to him."

Insisting that he did not want his story or photographs published until he was assured of proper confirmation, Watts showed the pictures to the Associated Press and the Post and told his story.

Last March 31, he drove to an abandoned house owned by his uncle and located near Watts' own modest farm in the desolate rolling plains of far Northwest Texas.

A light near the house had made him suspicious of thieves, but he said the lights of his pickup illuminated a dull, gray cylindrical object, 80 to 100 feet long, eight to ten feet high, floating 18 inches above the ground.

Watts said he rapped on the side.

"I expected it to open up, and I'd see a whole bunch of Air Force men sitting in there working," Watts said. Instead, he said, the door opened to reveal only machinery, including a device with a disembodied voice that said it would give him a painless physical exam.

Watts fled, but on the night of April 11, an evening illuminated by lightning from a spring storm, he left his house to chase the light again.

This time, he said, his truck stopped and he found an ovoid craft hovering behind it. The door stood open and four men beckoned for him to take his physical.

Watts said he agreed to the physical because he feared what would happen if he did not and because two Air Force officers who quizzed him about the first alleged incident had offered no answers to what he had seen.

The spacemen, the farmer said, were 4½-to-5-feet tall, muscular, clad in white coverall type suits, and had wrap-around eyes, superficial ears and noses and slit-like, smiling mouths which did not move when they talked.

The farmer said the small craft conveyed him to a place where he glimpsed rifle-like objects on his way to the machine's examination.

Standing named before the device, he was probed gently with delicate wires.

Watts said that as the spacemen stood in another room in a silent huddle over the results, he slipped a cubicle object he thought was a paperweight into his hip pocket.

Moments later, Watts said, one of the spacement returned and reached into the pocket. Watts said he grabbed the man's arm and was struck unconscious. awakening in the ovoid craft which returned him to his truck.

American Legion Demands Target Restrictions Be Lifted in Vietnam

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — The American Legion "demands that all political restrictions be lifted from the military as to the nature and scope of targets to be destroyed in North Vietnam," its national commander said Sunday night.

William E. Galbraith, the national commander said, "We have been listening to the advocates of stalemate long enough.

"We think it is time the administration started to pay more attention to those who consistently have supported this war, with less attention to the dissenters."

The North Vietnam port of Haiphong should be closed "by whatever military means considered most feasible and effective," he said.

His remarks were made in a speech at the annual dinner for the national commander given by the state branch of the American Legion.

At a press conference prior to the dinner, when asked if the Legion advocated use of nuclear weapons in the Vietnam war, Galbraith replied:

"We would not advocate, nor do we have a resolution to advocate the use of any kind of tactical nuclear weapon."

Galbraith said the defeat of Communists in Vietnam is "in our national interest."

Galbraith said at the press conference he would support Gen. William C. Westmoreland's call for 50,000 to 100,000 additional troops for Vietnam.

He said he also favored calling up National Guardsmen and Reservists if necessary.

"This is the purpose of having the Guard and the Reserves," he said, "to bolster the strength and the defense of our country."

Frosh Wrestlers Romp To Remain Undefeated

By BOB LUMADUE
Staff Reporter

DURHAM, N.H. — Coach Tunner Brosky's freshmen wrestling team continues to intimidate the opposition, and Saturday afternoon at New Hampshire was no exception as they scored five falls, a default, a forfeit, and two decisions against one decision loss, to win 41-3. There was no contest at 191 lbs., as George Zguris moved up to heavyweight and pinned Bob Steele in the third period. UNH did not have a 191 pounder, and UMass does not have a heavyweight.

Earle McCartney's parents drove from New Jersey to see him wrestle and it's a good thing they weren't late as Earle registered the fastest fall of the meet in just 55 seconds. In a fast moving bout at 115 bs., Nick DiDomenico was leading 22-3 when he pinned his opponent. Tom Young and Bob Freeman continue to show superior style to the opposition and both responded with first period falls.

At 177 Dennis Mulligan filled in for the injured Bob Willman and won a well earned 5-4 decision on riding time. Tom Andrewes has looked very strong the last two dual meets, and this time he rolled up a decisive 11-1 decision.

Summary:

Nick DiDomenico pinned Scott Ordway in 5:43 at 115 lbs.

Phil Davis won a forfeit at 123 lbs.

Howie Kaplin won by default from Don Smith in 6:20 at 137 lbs.

Mike Brauner was decisioned by Don Stahlman 9-2 at 152 lbs.

Dennis Mulligan decisioned Dave Elmore 5-4 at 177 lbs.

No contest at 191 lbs.

George Zguris pinned Bob Steele in 7:06 at unlimited.

A full house is expected Wednesday night at Boyden Auxilliary Gym to watch the frosh close out the last home dual meet. Freshmen wrestle at 6:00 p.m. and the varsity goes at 7:30 p.m.

Swimmers Edged

Going down in the last relay, the UMass swimming team was edged by Connecticut, 56-48, Saturday afternoon at Boyden. The score was 49-48, as this last event began.

UMass took a lead in the event and held it through three laps. However, Sullivan of UConn, the anchor man of the Husky team and one of the best swimmers in New England came from behind and swept the event and the meet for UConn.

The close meet did not pass without several fine performances by UMass swimmers. Ken Novak, who has swum consistently well all year, won the 50 yard event. Bob Asquith was a two-time winner. He first took the 200 yard individual medley in the fine time of 2:10.6.

Asquith later won the 200 yard backstroke in another fast clocking of 2:09.2.

Al Northrup, the fine sophomore won the breastroke event, his second consecutive win in the event.

Finally, diver Dave Larson, took both diving events, the high and low board, a feat he has accomplished several times before this season.

The next meet for Coach Rogers and his teams are scheduled for Saturday afternoon at Boyden against M.I.T.

Frosh Trackmen Defeat UNH

By JOEL FOX

DURHAM, N.H. — The UMass freshman track team, sweeping three running events and getting strong support in the field events, trounced the New Hampshire frosh, 71-33, here Saturday.

The closest match of the day was the broad jump which saw UNH's King win over Clarence Gaynor and Dave Canterbury of UMass on the last jump. King broke the New Hampshire frosh record with a leap of 22'5½". Gaynor and Canterbury were only an inch behind. King also came back to hand high jumper Cal Carpenter his first defeat of the season.

Soon after the field events were completed, the Little Redmen runners took over and pulled away from New Hampshire. Ed Heywood tied the frosh sprint mark for the UNH Cage in winning his event. Gerry Spellman took the hurdles in a fast 7.7, two-tenths of a second off the record set by Marc Levefer of UMass the year before.

Next came the distance and middle distances. The Little Redmen crushed the Wildcats 35-1 in these races. Ron Wayne, Tom Derderian and Mark Hurley swept the mile. Dedrerian, Hurley and Dave Eiber cleaned up in the two mile and Gaynor, Elliot Stevens and Paul Taylor took the three 600 spots.

Wayne and Stevens came back to take one-two in the 1000. The frosh iced up their impressive victory by setting a UNH frosh relay record of 3:32.5. The frosh end ther short dual meet season 2-1.

Wrestlers Win, 26-17, Over UNH

By BOB LUMADUE
Staff Reporter

DURHAM, N.H. — The varsity wrestlers won their fifth dual meet last Saturday afternoon against the University of New Hampshire at Durham, 26-17, against six losses. The action was one sided in the lightweights as the Redmen were leading 18-3 after Brian Urquhart's decisive win at 145 lbs.

A pin by Fred Fitzpatrick, and another hard fought decision by Glenn Cummins at unlimited was all the scoring UMass could do in the heavyweights, although great improvement is being shown by Coach Homer Barrus upperweights compared to the early season. Captain Gene Paltrineri scored the fastest fall of the meet with a pin in 1:19 over Dave Austin.

Coach Erv Hess, who was the interim UMass coach two years ago while he was doing graduate work, moved his regular 137 pounder away from Paltrineri hoping that he could get a victory at 145 lbs. Brian Urquhart responded with perhaps one of his finest bouts of the year with a decisive 9-0 decision over Carpenter, and the key win for the day.

Glenn Cummins came through again with the best effort late in his bout with a takedown with one second on the clock to wn a 3-1 decision. As in the Dartmouth meet Glenn repeatedly did more wrestling on the hardwood than on the mats. His pressure was relentless, and he finally caught Vince Martino in the center of the mat as the buzzer sounded.

Summary:

Bill Goodwin won a forfeit at 115 lbs.
Dave Wade won a forfeit at 123 lbs.
Paul Pearl was decisioned 10-1 by John Romei at 130 lbs.
Gene Paltrineri pinned Dave Austin in 1:19 at 137 lbs.
Brian Urquart decisioned John Carpenter 2-0 at 145 lbs.

Ernie Smith was decisioned by Jim Denham 5-4 at 177 lbs.
Dick Gnatek was decisioned by Jerry Morrill 7-3 at 191 lbs.
Glenn Cummins decisioned Vince Martino 3-1 at unlimted.

The next and last home meet this year will be Wednesday night with W.P.I. at Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

74-66 Win Gives Redmen Best (8-2) Conference Mark

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

ORONO, ME.—Substitutes Jim Girotti, Dick Samuelson and John Dreyer starred as UMass stopped upsetminded Maine, 74-66 in overtime before a packed house of 2800 here Saturday night. The underdog Black Bears came very close to giving their Winter Carnival fans a victory, but UMass' superior bench was the difference.

The Redmen broke fast and seemed to be in command early in the first half. Peter Gayeska, Ray Ellerbrook and Bill Tindall sparked the visitors to 22-13 lead for the first ten minutes. When Tindall sat down with four fouls at the eight minute mark, however, UMass lost control of the backboards and the home club came alive.

High-scoring Jim Stephenson and Boardmen Hugh Campbell and Greg Burns paced Maine as they outscored their guests 22-7 in the next six minutes. Redmen turnovers also played a big part in this spree.

Accurate foul-shooting by Gayeska and Joe DiSarcina cut Maine's margin to two at halftime, as the Black Bears held a 37-35 edge.

Soon after intermission, it began to look like elimination from the Yankee Conference race for UMass as Tindall picked up his fifth foul and Gayeska became ill. With the loss of these two steady rebounders, it was up to the young backcourt of Ellerbrook and DiSarcina and a forecourt of John Dreyer, Gary Gasperack and Jim Girotti to avoid an upset. This they did to the best of their ability, committing only two turnovers in the second half.

Maine wasn't giving up though. They managed to hold on to a small lead for 12 minutes despite UMass' full-court and half-court zone pressing. During this time, DiSarcina of the Redmen and Burns of Maine were the standouts, each scoring seven points and picking off five rebounds.

With 7:45 to go, Ellerbrook's corner jump shot knotted the score at 54 all. A minute later, Gary Gasperack came through with a big three-point play. This was followed by a Girotti layup, via DiSarcina, and UMass was up by five with five minutes to go.

Campbell fouled out but someone named Russ Vickery came off the Maine bench and promptly through in a jump shot. Black Bear guard Tom Farrell also canned two 30 seconds later, after the Redmen missed several close-in shots. DiSarcina made two free throws, but Stephenson hit a 20-footer and Farrell tied up the score at 61-61 with a free throw.

With a little over a minute and a half remaining UMass decided to hold for one shot. Samuelson, Girotti, Gasperack, Ellerbrook and DiSarcina froze the ball until only 14 seconds remained and then called time out.

After inbounding the ball, the Redmen were unable to penetrate and Gasperack's buzzer jump shot bounced off the rim.

In the exciting overtime, the second nerve-racking five-minute sentence served by Coach Leamen of the season everyone played well for the victors.

Girotti, who had seen little action in recent games, scored four points and brought down two big defensive rebounds. Samuelson picked up four points. Gasperack picked off two missed shots and converted two free throw attempts. Ellerbrook had one very big rebound and a free throw. Last but not least in fact, probably the most, DiSarcina dribbled, passed and rebounded exceptionally. He was also the man whom the other four looked for when the pressing Black Bears climbed all over their backs.

All the above plus the fact that three more Maine Players fouled out added up to the final score of UMass 74, Maine 66. It was supposed to be an easy victory, but it turned out to be one of the most exciting games of the season, and maybe the most pleasing to Coach Leaman, in light of the clutch performances of all the players.

Ellerbrook led the Redmen with 19, followed by DiSarcina and Gayeska with 13 and 12 respectively. Tindall and Gasperack also had nine apiece.

Stephenson headed the Black Bears scoring list with 20. Burns had 13, Farrell popped for 11 and the hard-working Campbell managed ten.

GARY GASPERACK — JIM GIROTTI
Cornermen spark overtime win.

UMass has now finished it Yankee Conference season wit a 8-2 mark. This ties their be previous performance in th league. Now the Redmen mus sit, wait and hope that Connecti cut will beat Rhode Island nex week. A Huskie win would giv UMass a half-share of the Bear pot.

Gymnasts Crush Syracuse To Place Third in East

By JOHN GEDSUDSKI
Staff Reporter

SYRACUSE, N.Y.—Dominating all but one event, the UMass gymnastics team defeated Syracuse, 174.7-139.7, here Saturday. The win was the sixth for the Redmen in dual meet competition against four losses.

The first event of the meet, the floor exercise, turned out to be the most closely contested of the meet. Dick Del Gallo took first place with a 9.2 score. Engles of Syracuse, an outstanding performer throughout the afternoon took second, while UMass' Joe Godwin took third and Joe Reed fourth.

UMass took the big lead they never relinquished, when in the side horse, the Redmen took the first three places. Bob Leclair scored the highest score in UMass history, a 9.50 to place first in the event. Fred Babakian took second while Clarence Fraser, a local product from Syracuse, placed third.

In the rings, Del Gallo took his second event, placing first with a 9.25 score. UMass finished a sweep of the event as Joe Reed, Glenn Seibert and Dave March finished third and fourth respectively.

UMass continued its domination of the Orangemen when, after Engle took first, in the trampoline, Toby and Mike Kasavana along with Joe Sward took second and third. Engle came back to lead Syracuse to its only win in the long horse, as the best the Redmen could muster in the event was a fourth by Toby Kasavana.

Steve Brown found the winning trail again for UMass when he took first place in the parallel competition scoring a 9.15. March took third and Reed fourth.

UMass ended off a fine day when it took the horizontal competition, March tying for first place. Brown and Seibert tied for third.

The meet finished UMass' dual meet season and gave them a 6-4 overall record and a 4-3 Eastern record, good for third place in the league. This sets the stage for the three day Eastern championship meet this week in Annapolis, Md.

Runners Edged by UNH, 60-44

By JOEL FOX

DURHAM, N.H.—A late comeback bid fell short, as the UMass track team was defeated by New Hampshire, 60-44, here Saturday. Down by a lopsided 35-1 after the weight throw, shot put, pole vault, and broad jump events, the team outscored New Hampshire, 37-11, and brought the meet down to the last two events before going down to defeat.

The tide began to turn in UMass' favor when John Ariensen and Paul Nyman took first and second in the high jump. Following this, Dave Marble and Steve Chase came in second and third in the 60 yard dash and Marc Levefer again won his specialty, the hurdles. Senior co-captain Greg Bowman ran a strong mile in 4:20.5 but was beaten at the tape by the Wildcat's Esterbrook.

The 600 yard run was all UMass as three top Redmen runners, John Anderson (1:12.9) Dave Evans (1:13.3) and Bob Hasselbaum (1:13.6) took all three positions. The Redmen also had great performances in the two mile as Paul Hoss and Mark Gelinas took first and second. Coach O'Brien was happy with both runners as Hoss ran a good time of 9:27.6 and Gelinas ran a strong race, picking up important points, as he admirably filled up the gap left by the ailing Charlie Lang.

The Redmen had now closed the scoring gap to 46-38 with just 1000 and relay to go. UMass still had hopes for a victory but they vanished when UNH's Varner slipped by Diego Gonzalez at the finish of the 1000, to take second behind UMass ace Dave Evans and supply the needed points for a New Hompshire win. UMass then entered a "B" team in the mile relay which was defeated by UNH.

Coach O'Brien expressed disappointment with the loss but was happy with the comeback bid the team put on after the initial pressure of being down by 34. The coach was pleased with all the UMass performances, especially John Anderson who ran a fast 600 and came back in the relay to run a 49.6 quarter mile. The team finishes its dual meet season with a 1-2 record.

LBJ Outlines Program for Transportation Agency

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — President Johnson handed Congress Monday a plan for setting up in 60 days a new agency to handle a $570 million mass transportation program for cities.

No legislation is needed. A new Urban Mass Transportation Administration will come into existence automatically within the end of 60 days unless the Senate or House vetoes the proposal.

Administration officials said they know of no strong opposition.

Mass transit activities now are concentrated in the Department of Housing and Urban Development HUD.

In the interest of stronger, more effective operations, the bulk of them—and about 50 employes—would be shifted to the proposed new agency.

A new, $29,500-a-year administrator of mass transportation will operate alongside the heads of the Coast Guard and the federal aviation, highway and railroad administrations.

HUD will be left with some planning and research functions related to meshing mass transit into city planning.

The new agency will take over a program which White House officials said runs to $140 million in the present 1968 fiscal year and is budgeted at about $200 million for 1969. The administration also is asking advance appropriations of $230 million for fiscal 1970.

Total so far: $750 million.

The new Mass Transportation Administration will take over the awarding of grants to cities to pay two-thirds of the cost of buying and testing a new type of subway car, for example, or of pioneering some new kind of transit system. Intercity projects, such as a high-speed Washington-New York rail system are not included.

Johnson said in a message to House and Senate: "To combine efficiently the facilities necessary for our urban centers and to improve transportation within our cities, state and local government agencies should be able to look to a single federal agency for program assistance and support."

He added, "The reorganizations included in this plan will provide more effective management of transportation programs.

"It is not feasible to itemize the reduction in expenditures which the plan wil achieve, but I have no doubt that this reorganization will preserve and strengthen over-all comprehensive planning for developing urban areas while simultaneously insuring more efficient transportation systems for our cities than would otherwise have occurred.

"I strongly urge that the Congress allow the reorganization plan to become effective."

Congress had kept an eye out for a farm message from the President Monday but got mass transit instead. Thus the farm program was expected Tuesday.

Perhaps as a prelude, Johnson proclaimed Tuesday that the week of July 21 will be National Farm Safety Week.

McCarthy Campaigns Today in Boston

Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., has been campaigning yesterday and today in Massachusetts as part of his fight to win the Bay State primary nomination for President on April 30.

McCarthy is visiting Boston, Worcester, and Newton with the strength of the recent endorsement of his candidacy by the Americans for Democratic action and supporters of the former campaign for Senator Robert Kennedy in New Hampshire. McCarthy is opposing President Johnson on the grounds that his policies are "destroying a nation and a culture" in Vietnam, ignoring the urgent needs of the cities and the poor at home.

In his speeches Monday, McCarthy said that a coalition government could be set up in South Vietnam with National Liberation Front participation.

He said that if the South Vietnamese objected to that plan, the United States should say it would reduce its support.

McCarthy, making a one-day tour of Masachusetts, stopped at a Newton country club to speak to a crowd of 1,000—most of them housewives—and to answer audience questions. His statements on the coalition government were in answer to questions.

McCarthy's principal visit of the day was to Worcester, the second largest city in Massachusetts, for several receptions and a speech at Holy Cross College.

Earlier concluding a four-day tour in New Hampshire in quest of votes in his campaign for the March 12 presidential preference primary, McCarthy called for more education and a job getting program for the poor in the large cities as an answer to urban riots.

Men with "decent jobs and with a real stake in their society do not riot," McCarthy said in Nashua, N.H., before going to Massachusetts.

Urban poor could be employed to build new parks and schools, the new streets and housing that our cities need, he said.

He went on to say, that this year's presidential election could establish some foreign policies for a generation to come.

Speaking before an overflow crowd of well over 1,000 students and faculty members at Holy Cross College, McCarthy said his candidacy offers voters a referendum on the Vietnam war, on priorities the United States should establish and on what the role of the country should be in this century and in the next.

Between frequent stops in in Washington to speak or vote on legislation, the Minnesota Senator has made almost daily cross-country trips in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination. Senator McCarthy has called for a "restructuring of the nation's moral and financial priorities" both in domestic and foreign affairs.

Shakeup Is Reported in Vietnam Army

SAIGON (AP)—Two of So. Vietnam's four corps commanders have been replaced in the highest level shake-up in the So. Vietnamese army in two years, an official spokesman disclosed Tuesday.

A spokesman for the Vietnamese joint general staff and Maj. Gen. Nguyen Van Manh has been replaced as commander of the 4th Corps, which includes the Viet Cong-infested Mekong Delta below Saigon.

He said Lt. Gen. Vinh Loc, a member of Vietnam's former royalty, has been replaced as commander of the 2nd Corps. The 2nd Corps, largest of the 4 corps areas, includes the central highlands and a 300-mile section of the central coast.

The two generals wielded considerable power as corps commanders. They had been powerful members of the military junta that ruled Vietnam until a constitutional government was elected late last year. After the election, they and other generals continued to exert influence on the government out of proportion to their powers under the new constitution.

British Government Rushing Through Bill To Cut Asian Migration from Kenya

LONDON (AP) — Cold, confused and quiet they come, Asians from Kenya, victims of a vanished empire confronting Britain with a crisis of conscience.

More than 600 landed at London Airport on Monday from Nairobi, Kenya's capital. Among them was a delegation of leaders of Kenya's Asian community. They will try to dissuade the government from rushing a bill through to cut Asian migration from Kenya drastically to 1,500 entry permits a year.

The chief of the delegation, Dr. Gurihuran Sandilu, called the measure "Unnecessary, wrong, immoral and cruel." It would limit the number of Asians from Kenya allowed to enter Britain, even though they were given British passports when Kenya became independent.

Sir Dingle Foot, a former legal officer in the Labor government, called the bill racist in its effects. The Archbishop of Canterbury is trying to soften the curb.

But the weight of the government, backed by a large but inarticulate mass of supporters in working-class districts that normally vote Labor, is expected to push the bill through by Thursday. The Asians are trying to get here before it becomes law.

The roots of the problem go deep into Britain's imperial past. Indian laborers were first taken to Kenya in the 19th century to help build the East African Railway.

In the 1920s Indians were encouraged to go there as clerks, shop keepers and to fill other posts Africans could not fill.

During he Mau Mau anti-white rebellion in the 1950s, many Indians sided with the British. The African nationalist leadership also resented them because Indians held many of the white collar jobs desired by Africans.

When Kenya became independent in 1963, the Indians, many of them born and raised in Kenya and educated in English-speaking schools, were offered British citizenship.

The new Kenya government gave the Indians two years to decide whether to apply for Kenyan citizenship or keep their British nationality. When this grace period expired, it began restricting the types of jobs that could be filled by Indians.

The numbers of Asians arriving in Britain rose. In 1966 there were 6,846, in 1967, 13,600, and in January of this year they came in at a rate equal to 35,000 a year. About 100,000 Indians are left in Kenya. Leaders of their community say less than half want to come to Britain.

But the very fear that they may lose their right to come to Britain has stepped up the influx.

The government argument is that a flood of Asians from Kenya would exacerbate Britain's racial problem, straining housing, schools and medical services in towns where an estimated one million nonwhite Commonwealth immigrants have already settled. And British workers fear competition for jobs by the Asians.

News in Brief

JERUSALEM (AP) — Foreign Minister Abba Eban offered Arab states Monday "a form of negotiations" that he said Arab governments have used in the past in an attempt to settle the Middle East crisis.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Eban meant that Israel had agreed to meet Arab diplomats in direct talks, with U.N. peace envoy Gunnar V. Jarring as chairman.

At the U. N., Sec. - Gen. U Thant announced he is recalling Jarring for conferences on "prospects for entering a new stage" in the attempt to obtain an Arab-Israeli settlement.

There was no word from Egypt or Jordan, Israel's chief antagonists in the June war, that they would accept the Eban formula. They have steadfastly refused to negotiate directly with Israel.

CHICAGO (AP)—Ranking Illinois Democrats, irked by the candor of Adlai E. Stevenson, III, met Monday to choose their candidates for governor and U.S. senator in what may be the slatemakers' toughest task in 20 years.

Stevenson, 37, a son of the late ambassador to the U. N. and twice Democratic nominee for president, startled party leaders Friday by saying he might disagree with Pres. Johnson's stand on Vietnam if he were slated to run against Sen. Everett Dirksen, the Senate majority leader.

Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and other Democratic leaders postponed the final decision to Monday night or early today.

WASHINGTON (AP)— Brightening prospects for a compromise outweighed Monday the failure of a second move to cut off Senate rebate on civil rights legislation.

The vote to halt the debate was 56-36, or six short of the necessary two - thirds majority. Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N.H. voted for the cut-off this time. Otherwise there were no switches.

The outcome was anticipated, but both before and after the vote key senators spoke hopefully of reaching a compromise on a civil rights protection bill and a proposed open-housing amendment.

LONDON (AP) — While Avery Brundage insisted in London Monday that no one country or group of countries can prevent the Summer Olympics from taking place, 32 African nations voted in the Congo to withdraw from the Mexico Games.

A number of African nations already have announced their intention to boycott the Games, which start Oct. 12, but the Supreme Council of Sports, meeting in Brazzaville, decided that the 32 affiliated countries should take such action as a body.

Russia has not announced any action it intends to take but has indicated it might support any boycott by the African nations. A Russian veto could result in other Iron Curtain countries pulling out.

ORANGEBURG, S.C. (AP)—Two Negroes Monday integrated Orangeburg's only bowling alley 3 weeks after attempts to break down its racial barrier touched off violence that left three dead.

Harry K. Floyd, owner of All-Star Triangle Bowling Lanes, admitted his first two Negro bowlers 4 days after a federal court placed him under a nondiscrimination order.

Integration of the facility followed the first day of classes at S. Carolina State Coll. since the Feb. 8 encounter between Negro students and state patrolmen that ended with 3 Negroes dead and more than 30 wounded.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A crowd of 1700 Univ. of Fla. students demonstrated in favor of the state's striking school teachers Monday and carried posters criticizing Gov. Claude Kirk.

The student rally came in the midst of the sixth day of a statewide walkout by some 24,000 of the state's 55,000 teachers. The walkout has shut more than a third of Florida's 1.3 million public school pupils out of their classrooms.

"Kirk is a 4-letter word" and "Kirk is still in fantasyland," proclaimed the signs of 2 demonstrators. "If Kirk wins, we lose," said another.

As the students demonstrated in Gainesville, Kirk toured poverty areas of Miami, Tampa and Jacksonville and vowed he would not be forced into negotiations with the teachers.

"Send me a working teacher," he told Fla. Education Assoc. Executive Sec. Phil Constans in a telegram.

Lowenstein Will Discuss McCarthy In Smith Lecture

Allard Lowenstein, a leading New York reform Democrat and organizer of the "McCarthy for President" movement, will speak at Smith College on Wednesday evening, February 28.

Lowenstein, founder of the National Conference of Concerned Democrats, a focal point of the anti-Johnson sentiment in the party, will talk on "The McCarthy Challenge" in Sage Hall at 8 p.m. His appearance will be sponsored jointly by the Pioneer Valley Citizens for McCarthy and the Smith College Young Democrats.

Lowenstein played an instrumental role in persuading the Minnesota senator to oppose President Johnson in the upcoming 1968 primaries. The meeting, which may also be addressed by General William Wallace Ford, chairman of the Pioneer Valley Citizens for McCarthy group, is open to the public.

Lowenstein has been an active figure in New York City politics during the 1960's; he served in the Kennedy administration and worked closely with the Rev. Martin Luther King on the board of the Southern Christian Conference. He worked in the Mississippi freedom movement in the summer of 1964 and has participated in other civil rights activities.

At present he teaches constitutional law at the City College of New York

Carni Queen Calls Self Liberal and Extroverted

Miniskirted Stephanie Bourbonnais, UMass Winter Carnival Queen of 1968, is a freshman from Seekonk, Mass., who describes herself as "too extroverted".

Stephanie wants "to be doing something" while she's here. Now a government major with a 3.4 cume, she said, "I want to go on to law school. I like to talk."

Her numerous activities on campus explain why she doesn't "have time to take full advantage of all UMass offers." Stephanie participates in the Student Union Special Events, Freshman Executive Council, Women's Affairs, was a member of the Homecoming Court, and is now a pledge at Chi Omega.

She likes UMass, especially the broad, open-mindedness of people here. Describing herself as a liberal girl, Stephanie said she "believes in civil disobedience but not the way people are going about it."

Her reign during Winter Carnival has kept her busy, but her date has been "really good" about the things she's had to do. Stephanie attended all the conconcerts, activities, and went to Bradley Field to welcome entertainer Johnny Carson to the University.

Stephanie Bourbonnais is "happy and very surprised to be Winter Carnival Queen" she said, as she put on her red Winter Carnival garter and headed for the Cage.

Professor Feels Students Need Some Administrative Regulation

Students should be more concerned with intellectual power than with administrative power, acording to Dr. Philip L. Gamble of the Economics Department. Gamble said in his office in Machmer Hall last Wednesday that the demands for student power came from a minority of the students. Gamble has talked to many students who feel that open-housing is an imposition on the majority of the students, and while they do not want open-housing completely abolished, they feel that it should be regulated by the University.

Gamble added with a smile, "Speaking as a parent, I think the administration should not leave the regulation of open-houses up to the dormitories—a uniform policy must be adopted."

Gamble said that the administration should act in loco parentis. In reply to John Siegal's demand for the removal of active spies such as counselors and house mothers, Gamble said, "every hotel has rules regulating the conduct of the guests and also a house dick for the protection of the guests, their property and the hotel. If there had been more supervision in the Abbey, it would not have burned down." Gamble also said that Siegal's demands for dormitories on a monthly rental basis and for meal tickets on a monthly or weekly basis ignored "the economic facts of life."

Gamble added that the administration has not always lived up to its responsibility in regulating student life. He has personally reported incidents in which students have been endangered, and the University officials have done nothing. However, this is not an indication that we should abolish the administration, but means that officials should see that students receive the protection and supervision they need. Gamble said, "Young people should become independent, but they acquire judgement slowly, and do not automatically become adults upon graduation from high school. Maybe I'm just a square, but my concern is for the students."

Goddard Advises LSD Possession Be Made Crime

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. James L. Goddard, commissioner of food and drugs, Monday supported legislation to make possession of LSD a misdemeanor. But he repeated his personal opposition to the proposal and said he doubts it would deter youthful users.

Goddard told a House Commerce subcommittee he strongly supports administration proposals to toughen penalties against manufacturers, sellers and distributors of LSD and other dangerous drugs.

But he made clear that the administration's proposal to make simple possession a crime is based on arguments from law enforcement officials that this would help them move against sellers and pushers.

Rep. Tim Lee Carter, R-Ky., a physician, commented that on the basis of LSD usage surveys it might be necessary to proceed against nearly two million students if possession is made a crime.

In his statement to the subcommittee, Goddard said he had argued that "it would be unwise to provide penalties which might mark a large number of young people just entering adulthood as criminals because they were found in possession of a small amount of drugs for personal use."

But he said "The conclusion was reached that a penalty for personal possession would be an effective instrument for law enforcement . . . therefore, I support the administration proposal."

Goddard said there is "some evidence there is a decline in usage of LSD" because young people are beginning to recognize its dangers.

College of Arts and Sciences Offers Smaller Classes for Honor Students

Smaller classes will be offered at UMass. Next semester several introductory courses in the College of Arts and Sciences will have special sections with limited enrollments of 10-15 students. These sections will be open only to honor students and freshmen with high predicted averages.

Dr. E. H. Emerson, director of the Honors Program, stated in a recent interview that "The Honors Program wants to do more for superior students already here at UMass by providing better education for these students." Dr. Emerson mentioned Philosophy 106 as an example.

Offered for the first time this semester, Philosophy 106 was open only to honor students. The small number of students in this class allows for more discussion and individual expression.

Spanish 107 will have a special section for honor students next semester. Dr. Emerson said that he was arranging similar sections with other departments in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Emerson also discussed a poll conducted by the Honors Program concerning student opinion on honors work. Questions relating to senior honor theses, honors colloquia, and general knowledge of honors programs were asked. The lack of knowledge about honors work and the large percentage (90%) of students who had taken senior honor projects and found them very worthwhile were two interesting results from the poll, according to Dr. Emerson.

Dr. Emerson also said that these findings prompted him to "publish what exists and to find out what needs to be done" for honor students in the monthly newsletter, which was started two months ago.

Dr. Emerson concluded that the efforts of the Honors Program "to become more responsive to the needs of honor students will make the University as a whole more responsive to the needs of all students at UMass," not only honor students.

Laotian Military Outpost Seized By Viet Cong

PAKSANE, Laos (AP) — A mixed force of No. Vietnamese and Laotian Communists have seized a Laotian military outpost 30 miles north of this Mekong River garrison on the border with Thailand.

The assault Sunday night part of a Communist offensive in Laos that is believed coordinated with Red moves in Vietnam — brought consternation in Thailand, a U. S. ally troubled by Communist guerrilla activity.

In Bangkok, Thai Premier Thanom Kittikachorn said he was "seriously concerned" that Communist combat units were within striking distance of northeast Thailand.

But to reach Thai territory the Communist force would have to overrun Paksane and Laotian military commanders expressed doubt they would try that.

The strategy of the No. Vietnamese and their allies in Laos — the Pathet Lao — was not immediately clear.

Paksane is about 65 miles southwest of the border of central No. Vietnam and 30 miles northeast of the Laotian administrative capital of Vientiane. Its main highway links Rt. 6 which runs directly to Hanoi, North Vietnamese capital.

Coordinators Try 'Personal Touch' Lecture Given

Personal attention and helpful advice are available to the student throughout the week at the office of the Area Coordinator. In an interview in her office in Leach House Friday, Mrs. Isabelle Gonon, Northeast Area Coordinator, explained the duties of her office. She, and her assistant, Mr. Walter Silva, are available to all undergraduates in the area who need advice or counseling in academic, social, or personal problems.

Mrs. Gonon, former Assistant Dean of Women, was appointed as Area Coordinator when this office was set up last year. Her duties include the direction and supervision of residence hall staff and working closely with house governments and counselors. Her work with the dormitories enabled the area's President's Council to help determine the future of Lewis, which is destined to be renovated next fall. The administration is working on their advice to maintain Lewis as a woman's dormitory and convert a different woman's dorm in the area for men.

Mrs. Gonon helps students by advising them about requirements for car permits, gives validations for adding and dropping courses or advises a student where to go for information or help with a problem.

One of the problems that students come to Mrs. Gonon with is the question of dropping out of school. She talks to the student and helps him make plans for the future, and leaves the door open for his return to the University.

The office of Area Coordinator is a liaison between the students and the administration. They perform the mechanical things that used to be done by the Deans of Men and Women, and they work to give the student a personal touch with the University.

Amherst Sees Rebirth Of Traditional Pub

The "beer that pickled dear old Dad" and the establishment that served it to him are as much a part of the American scene as the Women's Christian Temperance Union that once tried to put the country on Dr. Pepper.

Beer was an established part of the daily routine for the American working man at the turn of the century. Even the elite "400" sometimes imbibed.

Never to be forgotten is McGinty's, the place which tempted Jiggs to sneak away from Maggie for some of its corn beef and cabbage.

During the height of its activity, the WCTU managed to close down the legitimate drinking establishments, but the drinking went on none the less in speak easies.

After the repeal of prohibition the corner bar, an establishment not always appreciated for its contribution to the moral and spiritual well-being of its patrons, grew and flourished.

Today, a new trend seems to be underway, the rebirth of that fine old English custom: the pub. In Amherst "Bobby" Hillson recently opened his version.

"The Pub," located on East Pleasant Street, suggests its British forerunner by exposed beam ceilings, a stone floor, and a bust of an English Beefeater.

College songs, "everybody's" favorite tunes, and the newest hits resound from the piano. Patrons lift their voices in song as requests are played.

Seated around large tables or in cozy booths for two, friends experience the fellowship possible in the relaxed atmosphere. Greetings are called between booths as old friends are recognized.

In the best "look but don't touch" tradition, waitresses clad in mini-mini's provide diversion for the males. To be commended for their attention, they promptly refill huge mugs with light or dark beer, imported or domestic. Pretzels are free.

The food runs from hearty roast beef sandwiches to steaks right from the grill. Man-size appetites are satisfied for reasonable fare.

After the long sojourn in the wastelands of hard-liquor serving dingy bars, the pub is welcome for its new approach to drinking. Maybe "dear old Dad" would not have gotten so pickled if he had gone to a pub where good cheer and hearty eating are fostered.

Repression Leads to Youth's Violence

Generalissimo Franco of Spain has recently raised student tuition in Spain's universities as punishment for student rioting in favor of student's control of their environment. His action bears a resemblance to Ronald Reagan's actions in California.

Both men are authoritarians, unwilling to listen to the voices of the young. Both are willing to punish public dissent by oppressive acts rather than try to understand that it is their very refusal to heed public outcry which leads to rioting. It is the obstinance and conservatism of such men as Franco, Reagan, Johnson and American legislators which drive those who favor change to riot as a last resort.

Reagan and Franco are both unwilling to serve the people, to create a new society. The Spanish leader once stated that nothing must be allowed to erode the principle of authority, Reagan is of the same ilk. They are both evidences of the widening gap between the generations which is worldwide. It is the reluctance of the old to realize that a new world is evolving which creates social disorders.

Observer: From Here to Fraternity

With the radical change in draft policy decreed last week by President Johnson, the United States will soon have an army composed of college men. The prospect must make the generals as well as the drill sergeants wake trembling in the night. Let us look ahead two years. The scene is Fort Short. General Crunch is conferring with Captain Sharp.

"I want those sit-ins cleared out of the chow hall by noon, Sharp, get the M.P.'s over there with riot weapons and use tear gas if you have to."

M.P.'s Are Unavailable

"I'm afraid the M.P.'s are not available, sir. If you will remember, General, you had them restricted to quarters for 72 hours following their panty raid the other night on the WAC barracks."

"Well lift the restriction immediately. On my authority."

"I'm afraid it's going to be more difficult than that, sir.

"How so, Sharp? Speak up."

"Well, sir, following their restriction, the M.P.'s met in the barracks shower room and voted to petition for the right to establish fraternities on the base. The M.P.'s have been granted a charter from Delta Kappa Omicron, and say they will picket the general's garden party next week unless they are granted the right to take meals at the Deke House.

"Where in God's name is the Deke House, Sharp?"

"That's what they now call the M.P. barracks, general."

"What's happening to the Army, Sharp? Privates wearing beards in formation. Cooks running experiments with D.N.A. in the mess-hall kitchen. Nietzsche outselling comic books in the post exchange. Clerks telling me that my orders are full of dangling participles."

"It's a far cry from what they taught me to expect at the Point, sir."

"And now this business of grading the officers."

"Have the men gone ahead with that, sir?"

"The first grades circulated in the barracks last night. Listen to this: 'R. Myron Palpate's sex lectures show a deplorable sloth about keeping up with recent developments in the field. Palpate's research appears to have ended with John O'Hara. The jokes with which he tries to cover his embarrassment about physiology reflect the generally antique social viewpoints which permeate Fort Short and make it imperative that its accreditation be reviewed at once."

"Am I graded, sir?"

"Let me see. Mm. Here is it. 'Captain Uriah Sharp's course on shoe polishing, shirt creases and bedmaking are among the most revealing available at Fort Short for students of psychology, sociology and education interested in observing the effects of four years at West Point upon a second-rate mind.' You've got them interested, Sharp. Keep up the good work."

"Thank you, sir."

"Now, about this sit-in in the chow hall. What are they protesting? The cold bologna and cheese for Sunday evening mess?"

"No, sir. They are demanding a voice in administration of the base. They say that the present administrative system reduces them to the status of children and fails to take into consideration their individual needs, particularly as to what work they would like to do, what countries they would like to be stationed in and which wars they think are worth fighting."

"What do they think we're running here, Sharp?"

It's Dehumanizing

"They say they resent the loss of dignity involved in having all decisions made for them, sir. They say it's dehumanizing to be regarded as nothing more than a serial number."

"Listen to that uproar out there, Sharp. What's going on out there?"

"Oh, that's the clean-speech movement, sir. They're picketing your office today. I forgot to tell you. They're demanding the right to be addressed by the noncoms in clean language.

"Something else I forgot, sir. The Spinoza Association—that's Second Platoon, A Company—requests that you participate with them in a panel discussion on the thesis, 'All war is immoral.' Also, the Second Battalion has petitioned for the right to entertain girls in the barracks after taps. Sir, is something wrong?"

"Sorry, Sharp. Shouldn't make a spectacle of myself like this, but now you know. Even generals can cry."

This May Help

"If I may suggest, sir. I've found something that helps—the Army being what it is these days, sir. You simply light it like this, sir, and—that's it— inhale very deeply—."

"I ought to break you for this Sharp."

"Thank you, sir."

"But I won't. You're not going to get out of the Army that easily."

Be Patriotic, Support McCarthy

To the editor:

The most effective way for students at Massachusetts colleges to work for a negotiated peace in Vietnam is by supporting the New Hampshire and Massachusetts Presidential primary campaigns of Sen. Eugene McCarthy.

Many students, however, have asked: "Why should we support the senator when he has no chance of winning the Democratic nomination? Why work for a sure loser?"

The answer to that question is: Sen. McCarthy's campaign is not designed to wrest the Democratic nomination from Lyndon Johnson. Sen. McCarthy is probably aware that it is virtually impossible to deny renomination to a politically skillful incumbent President.

A strong McCarthy Presidential primary campaign will instead exert pressures for a negotiated settlement in Vietnam in three areas:

First, a large vote for the senator will speak to Lyndon Johnson in a language he understands well—the language of power. It will say to him that anti-war sentiment may jeopardize his re-election and thus induce him to de-escalate the war and activate long-overdue steps to begin peace negotiations.

Second, an extensive and vigorous McCarthy campaign will persuade many voters that the Administration's Vietnam policies are inimical to the national interest and will thus increase popular dissatisfaction with the President.

Third, and most important, large pluralities for Sen. McCarthy will encourage Republicans to nominate a candidate who will advocate those responses necessary to bring a secure and honorable negotiated peace to Vietnam.

If one feels that these are not adequate reasons to work for Sen. McCarthy, he would do well to consider the alternative: What would happen, he should ask himself, if the senator's campaign should fail utterly? What would happen if he received only tiny percentages of the vote in the New Hampshire and Massachusetts Presidential primary elections?

The answer is that Lyndon Johnson would feel perfectly free to continue dangerous escalation of the war and to spurn suggestions for meaningful peace overtures.

The answer is also that the Republicans would perceive little necessity to offer a candidate who would more effectively bring a peaceful end to the Vietnam war.

For if Sen. McCarthy's campaign should fail miserably, both the strength and the quality of opposition to the Administration's war policies will be discredited. Protest will then be called foolish and impotent.

And there will be little hope for peace in Vietnam. For if the McCarthy campaign fails—and if the President refuses to modify his present policies and if the Republicans do not nominate an alternative to the President—what can one then do to end the war?

The answer certainly cannot be radical action, for such action would necessitate revolution, and the vast majority of Americans are quite unready for revolution. Hence, radical politics would invite villification of protest and would therefore be counter-productive to its own ends.

The only alternative action to end the war is electoral politics—and, at present, the McCarthy campaign.

Winter Carni Snowless Success From Bonfire to The Byrds

By BOB GORMAN

Although the campus was without snow most of the students and visitors who crowded the campus for the five days of Winter Carnival 1968 considered it to be successful.

The events began Wednesday night with a bonfire and a basketball rally outside the Student Union. Stephanie Bourbonnais, the blonde five foot tall freshman from Seekonk, was crowned as Winter Carni Queen. Following, there was a 15 minute fireworks display over the Campus Pond.

Later in the night The Buckinghams and the Boston based Pilgrims were featured in a dance in the Student Union Ballroom.

Thursday's events began with a pancake breakfast in the Hatch lasting all morning. In keeping with the theme of the weekend, "Our Favorite Things; 1900-1968", an old and new fashion show was given in the Ballroom in the afternoon. During the show seven co-eds modeled 26 outfits dating from 1900-1968.

A Folk Nite was sponsored by the Winter Carni Committee Thursday evening. Student folksingers performed in the "New Hatch" and moved into the Ballroom when the Hatch closed. The informal show went on until 1 a.m.

"Your Father's Mustache" with Your Father's Mustache Banjo Band and the Great Friendship highlighted the Friday night show in the Student Union. The 7:30 and 10:30 shows provided a 1930 atmosphere with waiters serving pitchers of soda and baskets of peanuts and pretzels.

The lack of snow caused the cancellation of the snow sculptures and three of the winter olympic events Saturday. Last year was the first time in four years that there was snow for Winter Carni.

Last week one of the frats ordered snow to be trucked from Vermont for the snow sculptures. However, when the contest was called off, they cancelled their snow order.

The sleigh rides and the snowmobile rides that were planned for the Campus Pond area had to be put off due to the lack of the white stuff.

Speed skating, barrel-jumping and a "Powder - Puff" Derby were all held as scheduled on the Campus Pond. The "Powder-Puff" Derby attracted some 200 viewers who watched the 12 co-eds play hockey with brooms.

Sunday night Johnny Carson was the star of the two concerts in the Cage. Both shows at 7:00 and 10:30 were packed with a responsive audience. Carson brought "Doc" Severinson and the NBC Orchestra, singer Ce-Ce Grant and dancers Bud and CiCi Robinson with him.

At the same time a dance was held in the Student Union. The Reign and folksinger Paul Pena

Amidst the sound of peanuts cracking and glass mugs clattering "Your Father's Mustache" began Friday night in the Student Union Ballroom.

The two shows at 7:00 and 10:30 p.m. featured Your Father's Mustache Banjo Band from Boston and The Great Friendship. Also part of the show were waiters clad with arm bands and "straw hats", old fashioned posters and a general atmosphere of the 1920's.

Throughout both shows the waiters served pitchers of soda and baskets of peanuts and pretzels to the audience who were seated at tables with checkered and solid red tablecloths.

Your Father's Mustache Banjo is a five piece band with two banjos, two horns and a tuba. Along with this was a 250 pound welterweight singer who could match Kate Smith for vocal ability any day.

The two banjo players, one man and one woman, played high speed instruments that could beat anything Bonnie and Clyde offered. The band combined pro-

The Great Friendship provided a sound that seemed close to the Association or the Jefferson Airplane. One woman called from New Jersey just to reserve tickets for their performance, according to Lois Fry, Program Director for R. S. O.

When the second show rolled around, the waiters and both groups were ready for a real performance. As soon as the Banjo Band came on stage the audience became a complete part of the show.

As the waiters and the four "audience boosters" danced up and down the aisles, the audience sang, clapped, stomped and in general had a good time. By the end of the show people were giving free peanuts and pretzels to everyone including the police in attendance.

Probably everyone there came away with the same feeling that they had one of the most fantastic times for what they expected. At any rate it was old fashioned.

Winter Carnival 1968 was closed Sunday night with a 5:30 concert in the Cage. The Righteous Brothers, The Byrds, Glen Campbell and Frankie Welker were featured in the 3½ hour concert.

The old fashioned air surrounded the five days and made the weekend a memorable one.

CARSON HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE ENCHANTS SATURDAY NITE AUDIENCE

By RONALD J. LaBRECQUE

The press has called him the "loveable Svengali of the nighttime television set" and tertainment magic it was that Johnny Carson used to captivate the Saturday night audice at the Cage. With Carson in the show were Doc Severinsen and the NBC orchestra, nger Cece Grant, and dancers Bud and Cici Robinson.

It was the same personable 43-year-old entertainer pleasing the crowd Saturday eveng who earlier that afternoon spoke with area reporters. Carson has been labeled as a ner and reticent when off stage but showed no indication of being properly called as ch during his twenty-four hour Amherst stay.

During the informal press conference held in the cocktail lounge of his motel Carson oke freely on a variety of matters which ranged from his future in television to the mpus marijuana problem.

Carson said that his "Tonight" show isn't geared to any particular group and its sole rpose is to entertain. He has been criticised for shying away from controversial subcts in his late night discussions with guests. He explained that after a day of problems people don't want to hear more at midnight, they only want to be entertained".

And entertained they are. onversation is the byword of e Tonight show and Carson s mastered the art of interewing. He said that a good inrviewer is a good listener and ractices what he preaches, elictg responses from his guests, ever attempting to "out do" hem.

The University of Nebraska raduate is phenomenally quick o reply with a witty comment nd makes use of his talent often. Discussing his future in television e was asked what he would do f he found out tomorrow that BC was closing the Tonight how. He immediately replied sue". Carson said that he was ure of staying on the show for t least two years but "didn't now" about five years. He exlained that he would like to exlore all facets of entertainment nd that it was possible for an ntertainer to become "stale" remaining in one particular area.

The Saturday night audience as able to view a less restricted arson than is seen by the televi on audience. Concerning censorship on television Carson exlained that it was becoming nore liberal. "A few years ago ou couldn't even say damn on he air", he added.

When asked for his opinion on he widespread use of drugs he xplained that he placed them into two categories; the so-called hard drugs and marijuana. Queried about his feelings on the legalization of marijuana he said that "it should not be. All the data is not in. If nothing else it is psychologically addicting. What do you need it for?"

The main topics of conversation concerned the Tonight show. Carson stated that he was the ultimate authority in deciding who is to appear because "I have to be out there". One of the major grievances with the show is the large number of commercials. The entertainer explained that "you have to have commercials on the hour and the half hour, I don't know how you are going to change that". He went on by saying that it is the revenue from advertising which supports the show. The Tonight show is the "biggest money making show on NBC" he commented.

Talking about Ed McMahan Carson said that they were close friends having worked together for ten years and their was no substance to their nighttime razzing of each other on the air. He stated that it would hurt the show if McMahan were to leave.

Carson has a writing staff of four people and said it is "pretty much of a day to day operation with them in preparing the script for the Tonight show". He said that the writers prepare his opening monologues which he edits.

Carson was asked how the Tonight show was able to obtain such notables as Richard Nixon and Robert Kennerdy. He explained that there is a list of availables and these people are invited. When asked if there were people who felt they had outgrown his show he said that there were.

Asked if he watched the Tonight show he stated that he did "sometimes, when there was a particular sketch or guest."

During a dinner party following the Saturday night performance at which the guests included Junior Class President Wayne Thomas and Winter Carnival Queen Stephanie Bourbonnais Carson said that the UMass audiences were "Two of the finest I have ever performed for".

Performers Reveal Personality Through Music in Sunday Show

By RONALD J. LaBRECQUE

Intriguing personalities were revealed through the music of the Righteous Brothers, Byrds, and Glen Cambell in Sunday night's concert as three examples from the spectrum of pop music brought to a close Winter Carnival 1968.

Glen Cambell is a soft-spoken, confident and talented young singer who is going to replace the Smothers Brothers as host on their program for the summer months. The Alabama born folk singer presented to the UMass audience what he later said was the trend in today's music—a reversion to the soft and sweet and country and folk. After his performance Cambell stated that the "Loud rock and roll" is on its way out. He cited as an example the enormous popularity of the instrumental "Love is Blue". Displaying his dislike for the "psychedelic scene" he commented on the lack of talent in a number of the so-called top 40 musical groups.

The singer said that performing for college audiences "is fantastic, there is an awareness in them that can't be found in a teenybopper audience". He says his favorite female artist is Dion Warwick and enjoys "a good blues band".

His gentle conversation complimented his stage manner. An easy going brand of comedy in which his motto is to "pick on them all" adds to his vocal and guitar abilities.

Righteous Brothers

Jimmy Walker and Bobby Hatfield have only been working together for a few months but there is no doubt that the talent which was associated with the original Righteous Brothers has not been lost.

The two boys are exuberant, outgoing, friendly people off stage. Their music exhibits a variety of emotions and it is only their unique talent which sets them apart from your best friends. Backed by a versatile West Coast orchestra the two boys proved themselves both as a duet and in solo numbers.

Unbounded talent and friendliness describe the Righteous Brothers who exhibit these qualities both on stage and off.

the Byrds

Led by Roger McQuinn, the Byrds show a concern and awareness for what is happening around them. Their music is totally expressive of their feelings. Their offstage manner is cautious as they set themselves apart from the people who surround them in the presence of strangers but an awareness of the oftimes lack of sincereity present in "fans". Gram Parsons, the newest member of the group tests the strangers he finds in the dressing room after their performance with a few confusing comments but soon opens up to speak freely about the group and music in general.

Their Sunday performance was called loud and lacking talent. The boys didn't communicate with the audience, they didn't joke. The music was loud but there is no doubt about the talent and vast amount of creativity which they displayed in their performance. Their music has been called the best of the pop scene in America by the Beatles. In it is the expression of their personalities, the manifestation of their feelings.

They say what they have to say best in their music. "Mr. Tambourine Man", "I'll feel a whole Lot Better", and "Eight Miles High" tell what reporters try to elicit from them in the dressing room.

Kevin Kelly, the drummer, commented on the trend of today's music stating that "the groups are doing what their personalities direct them to do, as the people change so does the music."

The music of the Byrds has been called Folk-rock. Jim McQuinn doesn't like the label. He doesn't want to label it.

As I See It

The Rich Definitely Do Get Richer

By J. GUIDO GRAIFF

About two years ago Playboy Press published a rather interesting book entitled How To Be Rich written by none other than Mr. Moneybags himself, J. Paul Getty. The only problem I could find with this book is that it doesn't give any answer on how to be rich. After all why should J. Paul reveal his secrets.

But, being the miser I am I invested around four dollars and hoped to make a fortune. The first chapter must have been written by Getty to brag about his enormous luck. Titled "How I Made My First Billion," (by the way if you were to spend $1000 a day it would take you about 2000 years to spend 1 billion dollars. It has been rumored that Getty is worth in the vacinity of 8.4 billion dollars, give or take a few bucks.) it primarily deals with his wildcatting in the Oaklahoma oil fields striking gusher after gusher and challenging large oil firms by bidding against them for land.

Well, Mr. Getty did fairly well, he decided to retire at the ripe old age of 24. He got himself a nice caddy and proceeded to live the life of a dandy. All this fun bored him so at 26 he decided to get out of retirement and go back to work. He didn't believe in working behind a desk, he was always drilling with the workers and getting himself filthy with oil. After coming out of retirement things really stated to roll for J. Paul Getty.

The depression was not depressing for Mr. Getty, he began to buy, buy, buy, convinced that the economy would eventually climb out of its rut. He was right. In 1932 he bought 1,200 shares of Tidewater Associated Oil Company at $2.50 per share. In 1940, Getty owned 1,734,577 shares, which gave him a shade over one fourth the voting stock. By 1951 he owned enough stock to have numerical control. Today Tidewater's assets exceed $800,000,000. Among his other purchases was a small oil company which in 1937 had a net income of only $6,400,00. Today? Well its assets exceed $330,000,000.

Getting pretty well fed up with the first chapter I skipped over to another chapter entitled "You Can Make a Million Today". This was what I was looking for, at last I'll get the answer. Envisioning myself on a hugh yacht with barrels of champagne and crates of caviar I began to read. While reading the chapter my yacht quickly sank. The only real "tips" that were given were "one generally does more business in 15 minutes over a cup of coffee than he can possibly do in three hours over a six martini lunch," and that salesman can fly just as comfortably tourist class than first class. Mr. Getty also said that there are many little items which can be cu back almost 50% and would result in saving a good amount of money. J. Paul is definitely no spendthrift.

J. Paul Getty's book turns out to be a fair autobiography of a truely interesting man, but as far as telling How To Be Rich is concerned it falls short; like about four dollars worth.

General Dissatisfaction Expressed With Student Governments in Nation

(AP) — Are student governments at universities around the country failures as they are now constituted? Are they due to be radically changed — or even abolished?

All evidence points to the affirmative, says the South End of Wayne State University, Detroit.

A growing number of students is expressing dissatisfaction with their "representative" governments and their overall lack of power. Many are disappointed with their inability to effect change in the areas of academic reform and basic university restructuring.

At Wayne, frustration is becoming increasingly evident. Two Student-Faculty Council members have resigned from the Executive Board and others are contemplating resigning. Many others do not intend to run for re-election.

SF-C Chairman Chuck Larson shares the disenchantment. "Student government can never be relevant to students at Wayne as long as they allow the administration to develop the guidelines for its operation," he said.

"The SF-C is constituted by means of a charter granted by the President of the University. He has the power to change it at his discretion and has done so in the past."

Larson said he recommends reorganizing the SF-C "by giving students the opportunity to decide what mechanism they want to represent them. This mechanism would be established and would not negotiate with the administration for the right to exist."

"It destroys a student's self-respect and is degrading," Larson said, "to have to go to the administration and ask them for the right to have a voice. It is an inalienable right of all people, including students, to control their own destinies."

Mark Shapiro, SF-C representative at the Convention of the Michigan Association of Student Governments, said he found "that the majority of student governments around the state were even in a worse plight than we are. It is apparent that student governments are undemocratically formed—not on the basis of one man-one vote."

The University of Michigan's Student Government Council, in an attempt to gain control over the activities it undertakes and allow for greater financial freedom, is incorporating under university regulations.

Its chairman, Bruce Kahn, expressed dissatisfaction with student government in general, suggesting student unions instead or possibly no organization at all.

"Apathy is rooted into the nature of education at American universities," Kahn said. "There will be no change in universities until the American student becomes radicalized.

"Often student leaders themselves are at fault. Many are interested in personal power rather than student power."

Ed Schwartz, president of the National Student Assn., expressed the sentiments of a growing number of students at a national conference on student power:

"The lesson is clear — you cannot keep any group in subservience in a society which purports to be free without that group applying the standards and hopes of democracy to its own condition. The labor movement said that in the 30's; the black people have said it in the 60's; the students will say it in the late 60's and beyond."

Council Cites Weaknesses In Secondary Programs

The Western Massachusetts English Council (WMEC), an association of English teachers sponsored by the University of Massachusetts, claims a number of weaknesses exist in English programs in the region's secondary schools.

The claim was made in a recent newsletter that published results of a survey by the council's Committee on Professional Standards. The group sent queries to 192 English department heads and WMEC members and based its findings on the replies it received from 112 of the 192.

Department heads, in addition to filling out the questionnaire, were asked to cite those areas, policies, procedures and practices which they felt impede movement toward the better teaching of English in their system.

According to the newsletter: "Comments made by department heads reveal a number of weaknesses in existing English programs, classes too large, very little agreement on the characteristics of an effective English program: poor libraries, weak preparation of English majors to teach secondary school English, low budgets, too much paper and clerical work."

Survey replies indicated the following, according to the newsletter:

The average number of students English teachers handle per day is 98.49; the average number of classes they teach per day is 4.48. On the average, they have 3.4 different preparations per day.

Required non-teaching duties include study hall (6 paid; 80 unpaid), cafeteria duty (1 paid; 80 unpaid), corridor patrol (2 paid; 36 unpaid); advising (7 paid; 68 unpaid, home-room (7 paid; 81 unpaid), coaching (20 paid; 32 unpaid).

Dr. Richard O. Ulin of the UMass School of Education is WMEC president. Mrs. Helen Renouf of Belchertown High School is newsletter editor.

Music Recital Tomorrow

The fifth in a series of eight student music recitals will be presented by the University of Massachusetts music department Wednesday, Feb. 28, at 7:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

The 11 music majors will perform works by Handel, DuParc, Bach, Schuller and Chopin. The recital is open to the public without charge.

Soprano Linda-Lee Waelde, will be accompanied by graduate student Raymonde A. Sullivan of Worcester on the piano in Handel's Recitative and Aria from "Floridante," and "V'adoro, Pupille" from Julius Caesar.

Four movements of Bach's Sonata No. 2 for Two Flutes and Cembalo will be performed by Deborah Ortlip, fulte; Joseph Contino, flute; and Aron Pressman, piano. Contino and Pressman are faculty.

Soprano Ilene Progen will sing DuParc's "Romance" and "Le Manoir de Rosemonde" with Roger Spadafora, as piano accompanist.

Three movements from Schuller's Suite for Woodwind Quintet will be performed by Deborah Ortlip, flute; Gerald Chenoweth, clarinet; Norman Vexler, oboe; Jeanne Lyman, bassoon; and David Horne, horn.

The recital will close with Roger Spadafora, piano, playing Chopin's Phantasie, Op. 49.

Redistricting Vetoed Again

BOSTON (AP) — For the second time, Gov. John A. Volpe vetoed a Senate redistricting bill Monday, saying that it would needlessly cut up nine cities, as well as create districts which would be out of balance.

The House is expected to override the veto with its wide majority of Democrats. The Republicans have 14 seats in the Senate, barely enough to uphold a veto.

NOTICE

There are presently part time jobs available under the College Work-Study Program for students who meet the financial need criteria. If interested see Mr. Siegrist in the Placement and Financial Aid Office.

Faculty Group on Peace Presents Festival of Vietnam War Films

A series of six documentary films on the war in Vietnam will be presented by the Faculty Group on Peace and War February 28 through March 1 at the University of Massachusetts.

Two different programs will be shown. The first program includes Sons and Daughters, Toys and The Survivors. It will be presented Wednesday, February 28 at 8 p.m. in Mahar auditorium and Friday, March 1 at 8:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 20.

The second program includes Vietnam Oil Slick, Vietnam: Journal of a War, The Magicians and The Survivors. It will be shown Thursday, February 29 at 8 p.m. in Bartlett auditorium. Admission will be 25 cents.

Sons and Daughters, a 90 minute study of a community (Berkeley) torn by an unpopular war, was filmed in the San Francisco Bay area during the International Day of Protest, October 15 and 16, 1965. The film is a melange of train - blocking, teach-ins, anti-war planning, and selected unused TV footage of the war. One distributor of the film calls Sons and Daughters the 'Walt Whitman of our time'.

Toys, a Canadian import, depicts the effects of a war on children. The Committee of Responsibility, an organization formed to help heal some of the victims of the war by bringing badly burned South Vietnamese children to the United States for intensive care, has produced The Survivors.

Vietnam Oil Slick, produced for National Educational Television in 1965, shows contradictions between the optimistic AID worker and the cynical narrator. The Magician, a highly praised allegorical film from Poland, about youth and war, will also be shown.

Vietnam — Journal of a War, produced by the British Broadcasting Company in May 1966, tells the story of the Vietnam war with narrated war footage on topics such as the Buddhist revolt and civilian casualties from bombing as well as with interviews with people closely connected with the war.

The Faculty Group has stated that it is sponsoring a "Cinema of Conscience", in the belief that it is inadmissible that any person on campus can claim indifference or blind obedience to authority as valid options on this 20-year war. A Group spokesman stated that it hopes that each student will "let his mind undergo a reappraisal, perhaps an agonizing one, of the future course of action that our country should undertake in Vietnam."

Hospital Tour To Be Presented At Belchertown

A Special guided tour of Belchertown State School for the mentally retarded will be conducted this Saturday. Mrs. D. A. Grover, Supervisor of Volunteer Services at the School, will conduct the tour.

This tour is designed to give students a first-hand view of an institution for the mentally retarded. In the past, this tour has encouraged many students to join the Belchertown Volunteers.

A bus will leave for Belchertown from the Newman Center at 1:15. No expense is involved. For more information please contact Aline MacDonnell at 6-6586 or Leonard Radin at 6-9783.

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has approved sabbatical leaves for 45 faculty members for the 1968-69 academic year, it has been announced by UMass Provost Oswald Tippo.

A sabbatical leave is a period granted a faculty member relieving him from his university teaching responsibilities and freeing him for independent study, research and writing.

Some of the leaves are for the entire academic year, but many of the professors will be leaving for just one of the two semesters. About half of the leaves will involve travel outside the country to such places as Europe, Africa, New Zealand and Malaysia.

The College of Arts and Sciences heads the list of sabbaticals with 28 profesors receiving leaves. In the English department, Prof. Morris Golden will spend a year in England conducting research on the works of Swift, Johnson and Wordsworth; Prof. David R. Clark will travel to Ireland to transcribe, edit and prepare the plays of W.B. Yeats for publication; Prof H. China Scholar Delivers Rally Day Speech At Smith; Awarded Honorary Degree

Mary Clabaugh Wright, professor of history at Yale University and a leading American scholar on Far Eastern history, delivered the Rally Day address at Smith College on Saturday, February 24, and was awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Speaking at the traditional celebration at Smith in honor of Washington's Birthday, Mrs. Wright addressed more than 2,000 members of the faculty, student body and trustees on the subject of China. Mrs. Wright said of the Chinese revolution, "We have not seen the end of it yet, nor will we even after the death of Mao Tse-tung."

Of George Washington she said that he lived in an age of enlightenment but that he was not one of the men of enlightenment of the 18th century, that he knew of China but lacked awareness of it. She commented further that she doubted his knowledge of China exceeded Lyndon Johnson's.

Mrs. Wright asserted, "If I had the time, I believe I could persuade you that 60% of what the Chinese have done since 1949 has been good; 30% may not be what we would have done, but perhaps has been the best possible under the circumstances."

Next she raised the question, "Is the other 10% worth our making an enemy of China?" Mrs. Wright concluded stating, "We are walking, perhaps running, down the road toward a thermonuclear holocaust." She suggested a toast to the tradition of the conservator, and the men of enlightenment and their heirs who reserve their most acid criticism for their own society.

With her husband, Arthur F. Wright, who is also a history professor at Yale, Mrs. Wright traveled to the Far East just prior to World War II to gather research material. The couple were in Japanese-occupied Peking on the day Pearl Harbor was attacked and later were sent to a Japanese prison camp where they remained for the duration of the war. Mrs. Wright is the first woman ever appointed to a tenure faculty position on the Yale faculty of Arts and Sciences. She is adviser on Far Eastern Literature in the University Library and director of the undergraduate major in Chinese studies.

In conferring the honorary degree upon Mrs. Wright, Smith College President Thomas C. Mendenhall said, "On a wider understanding of modern China by Americans depends in no small part the world's chances for peace in our time. Nothing can further this understanding more than an extensive knowledge of her history, and no historian has done more to enlarge our understanding through history than you. Your masterly study of the last stand of Chinese conservatism a century ago widened our comprehension of conservatism as a movement in China and the west, demonstrated the impossibility of grafting an effective modern state onto a Confucian society, and thus illumined the tragic failure of the Kuomintang at Restoration.

Mrs. Wright is the author of a major book on 19th century China, "The Last Stand of Chinese Conservatism," and at present is doing research on the Chinese Revolution of 1911. She will conduct a conference on the subject next summer in which a number of international scholars will participate.

Rally Day at Smith College, held traditionally on the weekend closest to Washington's Birthday, brings to the campus a distinguished person in either government or education, to address the Saturday morning convocation. In addition the Rally Day Show, written and produced by the students, is given two performances and special parties are arranged by the individual houses on campus.

With Winter Carni all over, UMass students and faculty can look ahead with a light heart to the joys of spring on the campus with our own variety of quicksand. In the middle of any puddle it can look as large and as deep as the Pond.

DRUG GUN IS TESTED

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Stopping human violence with dart-shooting tranquilizer guns is getting closer to practical use, an Emory University psychiatrist said Monday.

Dr. William C. Conner said he believes the drug apomorphine injected by dart gun can be effective in controlling rioters. However, he said he doesn't think it can replace a policeman's service revolver.

Conner said the method of delivering the drug is being improved through design of a revolver that can fire five darts in rapid succession.

In a demonstration, the subject reported feeling "chilly" in 25 seconds from the time he was "shot" in the thigh. And within three minutes he was overcome by nausea and was prone.

The dart gun, powered by a carbon dioxide cartridge, is said to be effective up to about 35 feet.

OPEN RECORDS BILL URGED

BOSTON (AP) — A state police lieutenant said Monday he believes nearly half the $800,000 stolen in the Boston Common garage would not have been taken if the garage authority had been under the public records law.

Lt. Edward Schofield told the State Administration Committee Monday the bill would have also allowed detection of wrongdoing sooner.

He testified for the attorney general's office for a bill to make records of all public authorities open to the public.

Sen. William L. Saltonstall, R-Manchester, also supported the bill saying many new authorities will be set up under a 1967 law allowing them to aid in industrial expansion.

"We need to be careful on authorities that there is no question about the quality of its work," he said.

Joseph Lydon, legislative counsel for the Massachusetts Port Authority, opposed having the bill applying to that authority.

Logue to Speak at Amherst On Modern City Development

Edward J. Logue, former administrator of the Boston Redevelopment Authority and candidate in 1967 for mayor of Boston, will speak Friday (March 1) at Amherst College in the third lecture of a series on the government and development of the American city.

Mr. Logue, who is now visiting Maxwell professor of government at Boston University, will speak on the topic, "Can the City Be Governed?"

His talk will be at 8 p.m. in the Converse auditorium.

Before coming to Boston as redevelopment administrator in 1961, Mr. Logue had held a similar post in New Haven since 1954. He has also practiced law in Philadelphia and was legal secretary in 1949-51 to Chester Bowles as Governor of Connecticut and Mr. Bowles' special assistant during his earlier service as U.S. Ambassador to India.

A 1942 graduate of Yale University, Mr. Logue also received his law degree from Yale following service from 1942 to 1945 with the U.S. Air Force.

The urban lecture series concludes next week with the presentation March 6 of "A Utopian Vision of the American City" by Philadelphia architect and planning consultant Louis Kahn and a panel discussion March 7, featuring Mr. Kahn and Professor James S. Ackerman of Harvard University, on "City Planning Practice: The Conservation and Promotion of Human Values in the Future Urban Environment.

Charlie's Life Revealed As Life of Riley, and More

It's a dog's world for a little curly, gray dog named Charlie. Belonging to Prof. G. R. Richason's family, the University of Massachusetts campus has become Charlie's playground, and many UMies have become his friends.

Charlie looks like a Wirehair Terrier, but he's a melting pot of many breeds. He was born in a barn where he lived for weeks, but moving to the Richason's home, Charlie discovered grass and people.

He was content to patrol their yard, chasing birds and squirrels as most dogs do, but Charlie is unique in his own ways. He doesn't run; he leaps, and his walking career literally started backwards!

Charlie became a tramp dog to give his family the cold shoulder when he had to share their love with another dog. As a result, Charlie wandered to UMass and found a friendly world around him.

Besides attending lectures in Bartlett Hall, physical education classes in Boyden, and distracting audiences as he pranced about at this year's Convocation, Charlie was part of the cast of "Carnival," even travelling with the show to New Hampshire.

He lived at Kappa Alpha Theta whenever he chose to where he always found ready company, food and a warm bed.

Now residing with the Richason's again, Charlie is receiving guests. Many loving UMies visit Charlie at home and hear stories about him from the people who know him best.

Watch for a magazine feature about this University dog, because the Richason's think travels with their Charlie are worth sharing.

Redmen Tangle with Scrappy N. U. Huskies

Small-College Power N. U. Making NCAA Tourney Bid

By GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

Going into the final week of the season with a winning record in sight, the UMass basketball team travels to Boston tonight for a game against small-college power Northeastern at 8:15. WMUA will broadcast the game live.

Coach Dick Dukeshire's Huskies have a 17-7 record and are hoping for a berth in the NCAA College Division tournament. Tonight's game against major college UMass could mean the difference between a bid or no bid to the tourney.

Northeastern is always tough to beat, and the Redmen will definitely have their hands full tonight. The Huskies are a well-drilled team and will fast break whenever possible. They also use a full-court press extensively.

Their leading scorer and best all-around player is 6'3 senior forward Harry Barnes from Roxbury. Barnes has an excellent jumper from 15 to 17 feet and his jumping ability makes him tough off the offensive boards.

Barnes can play anywhere on the court, and he is especially dangerous near the basket since he has a wide repertoire of moves. Northeastern fans are hoping that the quick and agile Barnes gets a nomination for the Little All America team.

The other man to watch is guard Leo Osgood, a junior who comes from Roxbury. Osgood, who played his high school ball at Jamaica Plain, is a fine all-around performer. He scores well, he is a good shooter, he is fast and he is a slick ball handler.

Osgood was injured for a good portion of the season but he has returned to form. The 5'11 guard, who is also a good leaper, was last year's ECAC Division II Sophomore-of-the-Year.

The center for Northeastern is Mike Wallent, a 6'5 senior from Abington. The Huskies' captain is the best rebounder on the team, and he is especially strong on the offensive boards. Wallent plays one-half of Northeastern's double post.

Northeastern, which actually uses one guard, Osgood, plays two other forwards. One of them is Carleton Chandler, a 6'5 junior from Marshfield who is a good rebounder and must be blocked out on the offensive boards.

The other forward position is undecided. It might be 6'5 sophomore Fran Blais, who has come off the bench to do a fine job in his las few games, or 6'3 Junior Glen Field, a fairly good shooter. Also expected to see plenty of action is 6'4 junior Art Christopher.

This is the next-to-last game for UMass, with the season finale coming at home Saturday against Boston University. If the Redmen can win at least one of these two games, they will gain their first winning season in three years.

Billy Tindall can make a few strides in the UMass record book this week. The Redman Captain has 450 points on the season, giving him a chance at becoming the third UMass player in history to hit the 500 mark. Tindall also needs 20 points to pass Doug Grutchfield into second place on the career scoring list.

Tindall is curently averaging 19.6 for the Redmen. The other UMass starters tonight will be guard Ray Ellerbrook (15.6) and Joe DiSarcina (10.5), center Peter Gayeska (9.2) and forward Gary Gasperack (4.0).

HUSKIE HOMECOMING—Three people from the Boston area Coach Jack Leaman, Milton, Joey DiSarcina, Burlington, and Peter Gayeska, Somerville, will be returning to the Hub tonight for a basketball game against Northeastern.

Ski Team Takes Spill At Weekend Slaloms

After a hard practice session Saturday at Thunder Mt., the UMass ski team traveled to Haystack in Wilmington, Vt. for a meet with Amherst College and American International. Three races were slated, a slalom and two giant slaloms, but due to unforeseeable delays, the last giant slalom had to be dropped.

Although the two aces that were held were official Eastern Amateur Ski Association sanctioned races, they were not part of the regular scheduled meets. Hence the results do affect the league standings. As it turned out this was fortunate for UMass.

The UMass ski team is currently leading the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference, while Amherst is a close second. Had this been a regularly scheduled meet, Amherst would have put the conference championship out of reach. As it was, the UMass team made enough mistakes for the entire season.

Collin Garstang started out with the fastest time in the two run slalom, but Jimmy Garstang, Dave Kamila and John Hurd took falls and were either disqualified or did not finish. Amherst placed second, third, fourth and fifth in this event to secure the lead position.

In the giant slalom, Amherst again came on strong with a decisive team victory. The fastest time was turned in by Michelle Bar, an Amherst student, who has skied most of his life in the French Alps. Bar had difficulty in earlier meets both in skiing and in communicating, but his theory, "You can't lose them all", worked wonders as he took the giant slalom and placed fourth in the slalom for the best combined effort of the day.

In a great effort to make all the mistakes that they could on a weekend when it wouldn't hurt the team standings, two skiers outdid themselves. Wilkie Ward fell out of a chairlift and plummeted head first into soft snow unhurt and John Hurd locked the keys inside the station wagon used for transportation. Next week regular conference competition resumes, and the team is looking to brighter days.

Football Team Honored at Banquet

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

UMass' 1967 Yankee Conference titlist football team was last honored at a banquet held in the Student Union Ballroom. Attended by lettermen, the coaching staff and invited guests, the affair served as means to award several Redmen players for outstanding performances during the past season.

Four awards were announced tonight that had previously not been presented. The Allen Leon Pond Medal, presented each year for general excellence in football, was awarded to linebacker Paul Campbell who was not present due to his impending entrance in the service. Defensive end Kent Stevens was presented the William T. Evans Trophy, awarded to that member of the football squad who, through sportsmanship and fine play, best exemplified the person the award is named for.

Ernie Smith was the recipient of the Varsity Coaches Redmen Award, an award made by the football coaching staff to a member of the team for outstanding performances over the course of the year. Finally the Newman Center Award, presented by Right Reverend Monsignor David Powers to a well-rounded student-athlete, was awarded also to Smith.

Among the speakers of the evening was George Richason, Chairman of the University Athletic Council. Richason stated during his remarks that, in reference to the Yankee Conference scholarship situation, "I'm confident that President Lederle will persuade the other members of the conference that athletics should not be hampered by the limiting of athletic scholarships." He also stated, in speaking of UMass' four conference titles in the last five years, "I hope that the rest of the conference will not try to bring UMass back down to their level."

The main speaker of the evening was Joe Paterno, Head Football Coach at Penn. State University. Paterno, whose Penn. State team this year went to the Gator Bowl praised head coach Vic Fusia and his football program. He said, "People here don't realize the favorable impact UMass football has made around the country. Coach Fusia is especially respected by all football people."

Paterno however focused the majority of his talk on the status of Eastern football. He said, "Eastern football is as good as any football in the country. The Yankee Conference should be enlarged, because the East needs more good teams. We should play other people and expand. When we go down South or out West, we are always getting beaten by New England and Eastern boys, so we have the talent right here."

Pucksters Travel to Worcester For Encore with Crusaders

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Closing out their schedule for this season, the UMass hockey team will take on Holy Cross tonight in Worcester and finish with a home encounter against powerful New Hampshire Friday.

The team moves into the final week of its season with a 5-13 record. Their latest game was against Norwich at the cadet's campus last Saturday.

With UMass varsity coach Jack Canniff in Minnesota on a scouting trip, frosh coach Ed Polchopek took over the coaching reins.

Despite a 2-21 slate coming into the game, Norwich proved to be a much better team than the record showed as they overwhelmed the Redmen, 9-4.

The Redmen hope to put in a much better showing against the Crusaders tonight in an 8:30 game at Worcester Arena. The two teams have met once before this season, nine days ago at Orr rink, a game which the Redmen won 8-4.

In that game, the Redmen built up a 6-1 lead midway through the third period and held on for the victory. Jeff Sanborn paced the Redmen attack with two goals.

Holy Cross is leading the Worcester college area league with an 11-6 record. The league also contains WPI, Babson and Assumption, teams that are not perennial hockey powers.

Larry Murphy and Bill Butler lead the Crusader scoring statistics with 41 and 40 points respectively. These totals are good enough to give Murphy and Butler the top two spots in Division II of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference scoring race.

The Crusader defense is paced by goalie Tim Nolan. Nolan has a goals against average of 1.50. Nolan only played half of the third period against the Redmen and gave up two goals.

Board Acts On WMUA Censorship

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

The Student Communications Board last night (Tuesday) passed a motion requesting University Secretary Robert McCartney to appear before a future meeting of the Board in regard to censorship charges by WMUA.

The charges concern the administration's refusal to permit radio station WMUA to broadcast in any form the open student meeting of Monday night, Feb. 19, in the Cage.

Board member Jack Fitzpatrick (also of WMUA) introduced the motion which when passed read: "that a copy of the WMUA communications complaint be forwarded to Secretary McCartney with request that he appear before us (Board) at the next meeting to discuss charges brought therein."

The campus radio station issued a formal complaint in which it has stated that the administration "took hasty steps" to "forbid live broadcast of the open meeting Monday." And according to WMUA, the administration's (through McCartney) reasons for refusal were "fear of obscenities, of trouble breaking out and hindrance of dialogue." McCartney told WMUA that "Absoluately no live microphones would be allowed in the Cage", but could set up in a room outside the gym.

WMUA's complaint stated further that, "The reasoning given by the administration is obviously faulty. There was absolutely no possibility that any objectionable material would be broadcast. We object to this censorship and ask the support and assistance of the Communications Board in this complaint."

Discussion concerning WMUA also centered on the tape provided by the administration to the station made by Audio-Visual in place of live coverage of the meeting. It was stated that there was "no time for censorship" concerning the tape and that it was given to WMUA, "possibly for appeasement," by the administration.

The matter of the Student Senate's recent motion to "express dissatisfaction" concerning Collegian editorial policies and the specific front page editorial by Chet Weinerman on the open meeting of Monday, Feb. 19 also was brought up.

It was agreed that at a future meeting of the Board both interested Senate members and Collegian editors should attend and discuss the issue.

Board member James Foudy stated his belief that the matter "will become a major issue," and "may carry over eventually into spring budget requests" between the Collegian and Senate.

The night's meeting was concluded by election of officers. Professor Isidore Silver, Assistant Professor of General Business Law at the University was elected President Chairman of the Board. Winning the second important post of Vice President to the Chairman, unopposed, was Jack Fitzpatrick.

Outgoing President Lew Gurwitz stated in stepping down that he thinks the board has done "a fairly good job," and is a "very important committee."

The Student Communications Board elected officers last night. Professor Isidore Silver (left), Assistant Professor of Business Law was elected President and Jack Fitzpatrick, vice-president.

Dirksen Hopes Compromise Ends Civil Rights Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A compromise civil rights bill appeared to be emerging Tuesday from a six-week Senate hassle.

"Im quite certain that by noon tomorrow there will be a bill," Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois told a news conference.

He said the bill will be in two parts—one dealing with forceful interference with the exercise of civil rights and the other with discrimination in the sale or rental of housing

Dirksen declined to disclose any details of the open housing section, but he said: "It will be stronger than the one I helped kill two years ago.'

The House measure, strangled by a Senate filibuster two years ago, would have exempted real estate brokers if they merely followed instructions of exempt owners in selling or renting their property.

The Senate compromise now taking shape reportedly would provide similar exemptions except that real estate brokers would be subject to the ban on discrimination regardless of any instructions from property owners.

Dirksen said he feels there now is "a very substantial measure of agreement" on the bill, aside from the Southern opponents.

Unless it becomes unstuck overnight, he said he will join Wednesday in filing a petition to cut off the debate. This appeared likely to assure the necessary two-thirds majority.

British Bill on Immigration Passes House by Big Margin

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Harold Wilson's Labor government bill to clamp restrictions on a flood of Asian immigrants from East Africa won approval by a wide majority in a House of Commons vote Tuesday night.

Despite emotional protests by members of all three main political parties over the measure, the vote was 372 to 62 on the second reading of the immigration bill.

As the House debated the measure in London, African police broke up an unruly crowd of Kenya Asians gathered at Nairobi Airport to bid farewell to relatives flying off to Britain.

The new legislation, although it still has to go to committee for study and a third reading, is virtually certain of becoming law.

With Asians arriving at London Airport from Kenya in an increasing flow of hundreds a day, Wilson stepped in and introduced the new law which seeks to stem the flow to 1,500 a year.

The Asians coming in were holders of British passports granted when Kenya became independent from British rule.

The bill enables the government to set a yearly immigration quota of 1,500 for British citizens who were not born in Britain and whose parents, though citizens, were not either.

Critics say the proposal has the effect of distinguishing between white and nonwhite holders of British passports.

Thousands of Asian residents of Kenya have fled the former British colony because its government, pressing an Africanization program, has denied them work and business permits.

With passage at a second reading, the bill will have to clear the routine third reading vote, the House of Lords and then receive royal assent before becoming law. Labor leaders said they could push this through by Thursday.

Cuban Ship Rams Own Boat In International Waters

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — A Cuban ship lowered three men in a lifeboat off the coast of Virginia Tuesday, rammed the boat, then radioed it had recovered the boat and the men and was leaving the area, the Coast Guard reported.

The Coast Guard said it did not know whether the men were alive or who they were. The episode occurred in international waters.

The ramming incident was reported to have been observed by members of the crew of the United States cutter Point Brown from a distance of five miles. The Point Brown subsequently sped to the scene and searched for survivors, aided by naval aircraft, the Coast Guard said.

The Cuban vessel was identified as the 292-foot 26 de Julio.

Here is what happened, according to Coast Guard spokesmen:

The 26 de Julio radioed the Coast Guard at 2 a.m. it was proceeding toward Norfolk, Va., with 21 persons aboard, including an unspecified number seeking political asylum.

The cutter Point Brown, was dispatched to rendezvous with the 26 de Julio at the three-mile limit.

Crewmen of the Point Brown, while proceeding toward the rendezvous, observed the 26 de Julio lower a lifeboat containing three men, then get under way and ram the boat.

Two of the occupants were thrown into the water and the third clung to the boat, which was swamped but remained afloat.

Subsequently the sound of "what could have been gunfire" was heard and the 26 de Julio "turned about and made another pass" at the lifeboat. After the second pass, the three men could no longer be seen.

Westmoreland May Need GIs

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Gen. Earle G. Wheeler will report to President Johnson in Washington at 8:30 a.m. EST Wednesday on his trip to Vietnam and troop needs there.

Reports from Saigon and Washington have been agreeing that the U.S. commander in Vietnam, Gen. William C. Westmoreland, wants 50,000 to 100,000 more men.

White House officials have insisted no recommendations have reached the President.

Student Power Advocate

I would like to make several points concerning the meeting between the students and the administration on last Monday evening, and a suggestion for the continuation of similar meetings.

First, I want to express appreciation to the students who originated this meeting and who spoke at it. They made a large contribution to the University by their intelligent, frank, and urgent expression of student dissatisfaction. I am certain they do represent the vast majority of students in their views, though the majority present Monday night were disturbed and somewhat embarrassed by their aggressive and (occasionally) rude manner.

Their main points were valid and clear. They spoke for student power, and their argument was that only with student power will the interests of students be justly recognized. They spoke against the view that students are incapable of being the guardian of their own interests. Students know that the faculty and the administration have no special abilities qualifying them for positions of power over the social lives of the students, and that students are not children—that they are capable of responsible judgment in this same area.

Thus the students who spoke Monday were right that the students have been treated unjustly, and that the faculty (and administration) has been both condescending and presumptuous in its attitude. Secondly, the students know that the faculty and administration, though experienced and knowledgeable in their various fields, have no special wisdom, unavailable to students, on a great many matters of academic policy: questions such as pass-fail, grades in general, requirements, evaluation of courses, teaching and degree programs, and many other academic matters, are as intelligently and creatively discussed by students as by faculty (as anyone knows who has attended discussions among both groups), and often (it is sad to admit) from a more disinterested perspective. Knowing this the students naturally view their lack of power to influence academic policy as unjust suppression, and they are right, for their interests are often ignored or forgotten by their fallible elders.

Thus it is clear that the students here are unjustly deprived of power they need and deserve —their interests are deeply involved in the affairs of the University and they should exercise the right to oversee these affairs along with the faculty and administration. The students who spoke Monday evening made this point clearly and (as becomes the oppressed) forcefully. I think they are greatly to be commended.

I am not happy with some of the features of Monday's meeting. The student speakers were, some of them, rude to the administration, and at times wildly paranoid in their complaints. I think these faults have been over-emphasized, however, and I cannot be particularly disturbed by them because of the tremendous potentiality for constructive action in the energy,, the honesty, and the fervor of these students. What makes me most unhappy about this meeting is the behavior of the administration—their lack of interest in turning the meeting toward constructive ends.

I was very gratified that some of the administrators responded to the students and even encouraged further discussion at later times. Others, however, seemed to regard the meeting—all of that student interest in their University!! — as a nuisance and an irritation. Also, though generally the students have been blamed for the meeting's becoming disorderly, the responsibility for this lay with the moderator, who set an arbitrary time for the discussion to stop and then walked off the podium in a huff even before his own time-limit, completely abandoning the meeting to disorder.

Clearly there was inadequate planning for this meeting, and clearly both sides behaved less than admirably. Equally clearly, now is the time for all sides to attempt to mend these defects and engage in a series of constructive discussions. I urge the students and the administration to plan a series of such meetings for discussion of the topics brought up on Monday night. I particularly urge this of the students who are involved in the Ad Hoc Student Committee and of Dean Field and Dean Noffsinger. This semester is ripe for renewed communication and growth on our campus—I hope that all members of the University community will show their concern by working for renewed dialogue.

Yellow Journalism?

To the editor:

Too much has been written lately which has charged the Daily Collegian with "yellow journalism" in its coverage of the civil disobedience to do on campus.

The bandying of the colorful term has sent at least one of us to the history books for a clarification of the term. Hopefully, others may be enlightened, as well.

According to the late Frank Luther Mott, the Pulitzer Prize-winning historian, yellow journalism may have been founded at the turn of the century upon the familiar aspects of sensationalism—crime news, scandal and gossip, divorces and sex, and stress upon the reporting of disasters and sports; but it added to these elements certain characteristic treatment.

"The distinguishing techniques of yellow journalism," he wrote, "were (1) scare-heads, in which excessively large type, printed in either black or red, screamed excitement, often about comparitively unimportant news, thus giving a shrill falsity to the entire make-up; (2) lavish use of pictures, many of them without significance, inviting the abuses of picture-stealing and 'faked' pictures; (3) impostures and frauds of various kinds, such as faked interviews and stories, misleading heads, pseudo-science, and parade of false learning; (4) the Sunday supplement, with colored comics and superficial articles; and (5) more or less ostentatious sympathy with the 'underdog', with campaigns against abuses suffered by the common people."

Applying his own definitions to the term, Pulitzer Prize winner Mott would have had trouble coloring the Collegian yellow.

So do others who would speak from a thoughtful mind.

Post-Empire Britain's Woes Based on Economic Reasons

By JOHN M. CAHILL

"Great Britain after Empire: New Role for an Old Ally" was the topic of the Great Decisions Program held Monday night at Noah Webster House.

The program was moderated by Prof. Luther Allen of the Government department and the members of the panel were Prof. John Harris of the Government department and Prof. John Patte of the History department at Amherst College.

Prof. Harris began the program by analyzing Britain's economic problems. "Britain's economic difficulties have been developing for a number of decades," Harris stated, "but since 1960 they have become even worse. One reason for this has been the lack of natural resources in the country."

In order to deal with these problems, Britain has been forced to resort to drastic solutions. Very recently the Government announced a devaluation of the pound by about 15% and it is considering deep cuts in government spending, Harris said.

"But, because of these moves, the Labour Government has lost considerable public opinion support," Harris said. "A recent Gallup Poll showed the Conservatives 15½ percentage points ahead of Labour."

Miss Ann Fagan was the second speaker. "The loss of the Empire was a blessing to Great Britain," she said. "The Empire was not a cohesive unit; it was a military burden, and the growing independence of the colonies was a source of great anxiety to British leaders."

Despite the drawbacks to the Empire, Miss Fagan does not believe the Commonwealth system to be an improvement. "The Commonwealth," she said, "is a failure, a facade. The community of interest and the governmental similarities upon which it was based simply do not exist."

Reiterating Prof. Harris's view, Miss Fagan observed that all of Britain's problems are based in economics. Some progress is being made in this area, she said, but the reforms are being hampered by a strong national distaste for technocracy.

The final speaker was Prof. John Patte of Amherst. "The biggest problem facing Britain, today," he said, "is that of finding a role for herself. She is forced to choose between two images: that of a nation with great cultural vitality and that of a national searching for values in a new, urbanized, industrial society."

Britain, in the past, has served as a model for the rest of the world in many ways. It has been a model of governmental systems, of imperialization, and of decolonialization, but, queried Patte, will it serve as a model in the future?

"It can," stated Patte, "but only if it can learn to achieve a standard of humane social existence equal to that which has been reached by Sweden."

A question and answer followed the conclusion of the panelist's prepared speeches.

This program was the fourth in a series of seven "Great Decisions" programs. Each program is presented on Monday nights in Webster House at 7:30 p.m. Next week's program will be concerned with the problem of de-escalation in Vietnam.

Jeffersons Play at Gorman House As Extra Winter Carni Attraction

As an added attraction to Winter Carni Weekend Gorman House presented the fresh and distinctive sound of THE JEFFERSONS during its open house on Friday, February 23. Well known to many students on campus, THE JEFFERSONS are comprised of Al Tompkins, a senior government major; and Barry Wendell, a sophomore sociology major.

Both are students at the University. Their style is folk and their arrangements are imaginative. Combining traditional-collegiate folk style, popular ballads and originally written material into their performance, the group has performed at several dorms on campus (Gorman, Crabtree, Melville), The Gouch at Patterson, the Student Union Ballroom and Hatch.

They have also sung at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges. Future engagements include the Upward Bound Benefit Show to be held on March 2.

Of THE JEFFERSONS it can truly be said that their artistry with guitar and voice is only equalled by their total sound. Gorman House applaudes the talents of this new folk group.

Redmen Defeat NU on Tindall's Tap-in, 61-59

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1968

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

BOSTON—Billy Tindall tapped in a missed shot with three seconds left to give UMass a 61-59 victory over Northeastern University before 3300 at Cabot Gymnasium. It was the third time this season that Tindall has won a game for his teammates in the closing seconds.

Both squads battled back and forth on even terms for the first ten minutes of the contest. Northeastern, starting five seniors because it was their last home appearance, hit on the first five shots they took from the floor.

With the score UMass 18, Northeastern 16, the Redmen put together an eight point string of markers as Tindall and Joey DiSarcina picked up three apiece and Ray Ellerbrook canned two. The Redmen maintained at least a six point edge for the rest of the half. They led, 34-23, at intermission.

Ellerbrook, six for ten from the field, was the first half spark plug. The Redmen also hit on all eight attempts from the foul line.

After intermission, the Huskies came out of the locker room fighting mad. They threw a full court press at the visitors and also began to hit the board harder. These two manuvers enabled them to cut the UMass margin to three points after only four minutes had passed in the second half.

UMass retained its poise however, and brought their lead back up to a more comfortable margin. Northeastern was not giving up though.

They chased the Redmen ballhandlers all over the court, finally forcing the visitors to commit turnovers in the closing minutes.

Despite UMass holding as much as an 11 point lead, the Huskies fought back to tie their guest at 59-59 with only 25 seconds to go on a 20 foot jumper by Leo Osgood.

UMass then called time out. After inbounding the ball, they worked it into Ellerbrook for a 20-footer. Ellerbrook, who had been cold the entire second half, took the shot which bounded off the rim, but Tindall went high to tap in the winner.

The victory gives the Redmen an overall record of 13-11 and assures them of their first winning season in three years. Northeastern's won-loss mark is now 17-8.

NU looked very impressive in defeat and may still get that invitation to play in the College Division NCAA tournament.

BILLY TINDALL
Lightning strikes thrice.

Tindall led Redmen rebounders with ten, Peter Gayeska had nine. Billy was also the game's high scorer with 21 points. This performance ejected the Redmen UMass career scoring list, two captain into second place on the points ahead of Doug Grutchfield.

Grutchfield's total was 1,257; Tindall's is now 1,259. The all-time scoring leader for UMass is Clarence Hill with 1,369.

Pucksters Upset by Holy Cross, 5-3

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

WORCESTER—Larry Murphy and Bill Butler paced Holy Cross to an upset 5-3 decision over UMass last night, at Worcester Arena, before a sparse crowd.

Leading 3-2 going into the final period, Holy Cross increased their lead to two goals as Butler banged home a rebound after UMass goalie Pete Scoville had stopped two point-blank shots. Doug Powling narrowed the margin for the Redmen as his 50 foot screen shot beat the Holy Cross goaltender to the far corner of the net.

UMass hopes were quickly diminished as one minute later, Murphy poked home a shot between Scoville's pads.

In a last minute desperation bid, UMass pulled their goaltender, but their strategy failed as neither team scored.

Reuterman opened the games scoring for the Crusaders when he slapped home a pass directly in front of Scoville.

Jim O'Brien evened the count for the Redmen at 8:52 as he batted a Mike Coyne rebound past Holy Cross goalie Tim Johnson. Bill McMann also drew an assist on the play.

UMass had a wide territorial edge in the first period action, outshooting the Crusaders 20-6. McMannis put Holy Cross on top for good when he broke past the UMass defense and beat Scoville with a shot that just caught the far corner.

Murphy tallied the third Holy Cross score when he slid in a rebound from close range. Then Powling brought the Redmen to within a goal as he picked up a free puck and cut loose with a high shot that bounced in off Johnson's elbow.

Throughout the whole game, UMass goalie Pete Scoville had 33 saves while Johnson, in the Holy Cross net, had 32. The loss lowers the Redmen's record to 5-14, while the win ups Holy Cross to 12-6.

BLUELINE BANTER

Worcester Arena looks more like a roller skating arena than a hockey rink. The roof is approximately 12 feet from the surface of the ice.

At the bottom of the boards are wooden strips, off of which pucks bounce lively. But, directly over the strip, the boards are completely dead. At times it is more like playing in a bowling alley than a hockey arena.

There were few penalties in the game and neither team was able to take advantage of their power plays.

The next game for the Redmen will be Friday night at Orr Rink against New England powerhouse New Hampshire. This will also be the final game of the year for UMass.

Houston Cougars Remain No. 1; Extend Perfect Record to 26-0

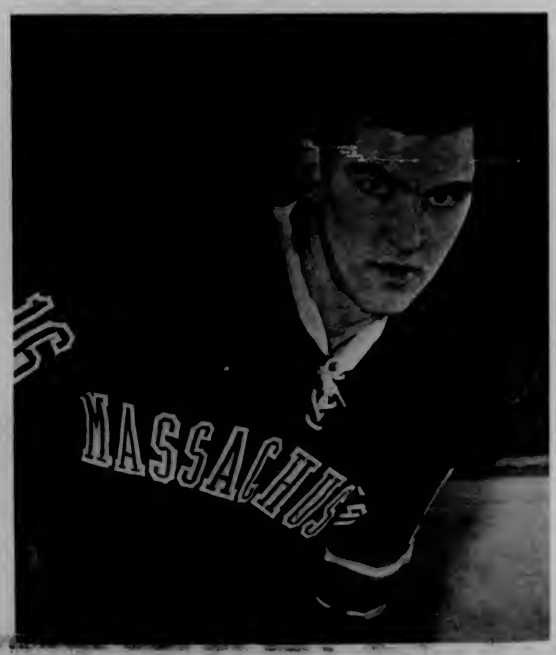
(AP)—Three of the nation's ranking college basketball teams, including top-rated Houston, got off to excellent starts this week. But Marquette stumbled just as it started to climb.

Houston lifted its season record to 26-0 Monday night by defeating Hardin-Simmons 105-82. Kentucky, No. 5, clinched the Southeastern Conference crown with an 89-57 triumph over Auburn.

Louisville, the only new team in The Associated Press' poll this week, trounced Memphis State. The Cardinals had moved into ninth place.

Marquette, however, was beaten by Xavier of Ohio 88-83 in overtime. The Warriors had climbed from 10th to eighth place in the latest vote based on games through last Saturday.

Houston received 25 first-place votes and 321 points in the balloting by a national panel of 33 sports writers. UCLA, 21-1, held second place. The Bruins collected eight votes for the No. 1 spot and 305 points.



North Carolina, 22-1, accumulated 258 points in the voting and held onto third place. There were no changes either in the next four positions as St. Bonaventure held fourth place followed by Kentucky, Columbia and New Mexico.

The Top Ten, through games of Saturday, Feb. 24 and total points on a 10-9-8 etc. basis:

1.	Houston	321
2.	UCLA	305
3.	North Carolina	258
4.	St. Bonaventure	220

Little Redmen Invade Amherst

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

Crushing Dean Junior College, 82-40, Saturday at Franklin, the freshman basketball team, now 11 - 6, goes into its final two games of the season. The Little Redmen tonight travel downtown to Amherst, to meet the Lord Jeffs at 6:15.

The meeting with the local rival was just scheduled this week, having been requested by Amherst officials as a preliminary to the Amherst varsity game against Tufts. It should be a tough encounter for UMass.

Amherst this year boasts one of its best freshman teams in years. The squad has good height and fine talent in its lineup.

Saturday afternoon, U Mass romped easily over the outmanned Dean team. The Little Redmen led from the start and never were in serious trouble. Substitutes were used freely throughout by frosh coach Peter Broaca, as an easy victory was notched.

Ken Mathias, in another fine consistent performance notched 20 points, with sharpshooting Jim Ryan adding 15, Frank Schaffeld scoring 12 and sub Stan Kinard also hitting double figures with ten.

For Dean Junior, Fred Gomes and Tom Ciprio were the only members of the Franklin team to hit double figures, each having 14 points.

Following tonight's game at Amherst, the Little Redmen have one game left against the Boston University frosh, Saturday evening.

Romney Bows Out; Rockefeller May Be In

Associated Press
Romney campaigning in New Hampshire

By JACK BELL
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Michigan Gov. George Romney, whose candidacy never caught fire, pulled out of the Republican presidential nomination contest Wednesday to clear the way for another moderate to oppose Richard M. Nixon.

Romney told a crowded gathering of newsmen that "a critical moment" had arrived at which the dominantly progressive GOP governors should select a candidate to support their viewpoint.

Romney walked away from a question as to which man he would support. But Republican leaders agreed that his action had projected Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York toward a contest with Nixon, former vice president and the 1960 nominee.

From 16 to 18 of the Republican state executives, assembling here for a National Governors Conference meeting beginning Thursday, have said that if Romney faltered as the banner-carrying leader of the moderates they could support Rockefeller.

Arriving for the governors' conference, Rockefeller insisted in an interview his position as a noncandidate has not been changed by Romney's decision. But he said he plans conferences with Republican governors. He noted that the governors "have stuck together."

While he said he is not a candidate, the New York governor said again, as he had Saturday in Detroit, that he would accept a draft. He said he had tried to talk Romney out of withdrawing.

Romney has criticized President Johnson's Vietnam war policies, calling for neutralization of Southeast Asia. Nixon has supported Johnson's basic objective of fighting Communist aggression there. Rockefeller has given past support to the President's course

Text of Romney Withdrawal Message

I have just informed the Republican governors by letter of my decision to withdraw as a candidate for president of the United States.

I have reached this decision for several reasons:

First, it is clear to me that my candidacy has not won the wide acceptance with rank and file Republicans that I had hoped to achieve.

Second, this is a critical moment. The Republican governors are not scheduled or likely to be in one place again till June. If they are to have the opportunity for meaningful consideration of candidates, it is desirable that they be able to act now or make plans to do so.

Third, I have sought the presidency only because of my deep concern about the future of our country. I am no less concerned now, but I have concluded that I can best serve my country and the ideas in which I believe otherwise than as a candidate.

I have reached this decision before the vote in New Hampshire because time is growing short.

The Republican governors have the opportunity to make a maximum contribution to the drafting of a sound party platform and to the selection of a candidate who will offer sound solutions to the problems which confront America.

We must have effective alternatives to foreign and domestic programs dealing with such major issues as Vietnam, inflation, crime, indolence, delinquency, race and power group politics.

I am ready to work with them to achieve these goals—and I am prepared to give wholehearted support to the candidate whom they will support.

I leave the campaign with regret. The opportunity to meet so many citizens has been stimulating and rewarding. I am deeply grateful to the many people who have worked so hard for me and in support of the positions I have taken.

I am particularly grateful to Govs. Nelson Rockefeller and John Chafee for their courageous and loyal support.

Of Gov. Rockefeller I add this: He has asked nothing of me and has given more than I have asked. He has supported me on his own initiative without reservation.

I shall expect to lead the Michigan delegation to the national convention in August. I expect to continue to fight for my position on issues and to contribute whatever I can to an essential Republican victory in November.

Federal Government Allocates Funds For New 28-Story UMass Library

By DON EPSTEIN
Managing Editor

Sen. Ted Kennedy and Rep. Silvio Conte announced in Washington late Wed. that the federal government's Office of Education has allocated $2 million to UMass, under Title II of the Higher Education Act of 1963, for construction of a new 28 story library tower.

The total cost of the proposed library is $14.8 million. The state will provide $12.8 million towards construction of the building designed by Edward Durrell Stone.

Present plans call for construction bids to go out in the fall. Hopefully construction of the tower will begin this December with an estimated construction time of two years. The library will be located in front of South College.

Several University officials expressed surprise over the amount of the federal government's allocation. Due to the war in Vietnam only $33 million was available in 1968. This year under Title II, of this $33 million, $2 million will go to UMass.

Nationwide 93 institutions had applied for a total of $95 million under Title II. Other schools in Mass. had asked for $9½ million. Except for the $2 million for UMass, the only other money awarded in Massachusetts was $½ million to Harvard.

Rep. Conte said, "the amount of this grant shows the high regard in which the University is held nationally."

President Lederle said that the federal and state appropriations for the library is due to the cooperation among state officials, the governor's office, the legislature, the Mass. Congressional delegation, and University personnel.

In an interview last night with the Collegian, Provost Tippo called the construction of the new library "one of the most important developments in the history of the University."

He paid special tribute to David Clay, Acting Director of the Library; Jack Littlefield, Planning Officer; and Arthur Gentile, Assoc. Dean of the Graduate School as those most responsible at the University for acquiring the funds.

Provost Tippo also expressed the University's appreciation to Senators Kennedy, Brooke, and Rep. Conte.

Pearson, Liberal Govt. Win Confidence Vote

OTTAWA (AP) — Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson won back Wednesday the confidence in his Liberal government that was jeopardized by an upset vote in the House of Commons while he was away on a Caribbean holiday.

With all Liberal MPs present, the House voted 138-119 in favor of the confidence measure introduced by the 70-yr.-old prime minister. His government had been defeated 84-82 on a tax bill February 19.

Pearson plans to retire anyway in the spring, but for his party Wednesday's vote was a crucial victory. The Liberals have still to choose a successor to Pearson and a confidence defeat, bringing with it new elections, would have badly shaken the party.

Wednesday's solid turnout of Liberals contrasted to the Feb. 19 tax vote that caught 47 of them absent. Pearson flew home the next day and charged that there had been trickery in the circumstances of the vote.

The tax bill, which had been approved in principle on a second reading, went down to defeat when Conservatives, sensing that the Liberals were caught shorthanded, responded "now" when a deputy speaker asked what time a final vote should be taken.

The 129 Liberal MPs backing the confidence measure Wednesday were supported by Real Caouette and his 7 Creditiste party

Student Senate Opposes Grad Student Draft Policy

By NICK COSTA
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night placed itself on record as opposing the policy of arbitrarily denying graduate students draft deferments and as opposing the reclassification of "objectionable dissenters."

In other business, President Jim Collins announced that at next Wednesday's Senate meeting, University officials will be available for answering questions from student members and attending students. An Academic Affairs Committee report dealing with the Cook Curriculum Report and preliminary budgets for the Heymakers and the Amateur Radio Club were presented. Fifteen newly elected members were sworn in.

Aftr prolonged committee and Senate floor debate, the student government not only placed itself on record as opposed to the revision in draft deferments of grad students but also included mention of the support of veterans in the Senate for the bill:

"the point is made that these veterans are, by supporting this motion, voting against their own interests as they are, under the current system, highly desirable as graduate students because of their non-draftability."

An amendment to the motion to offer an alternative system of drafting was defeated.

The other Senate bill took a stand against reclassification of objectionable dissenters on the grounds that this causes the military "to be regarded as being a prison and the rights of dissent are endangered."

Prior to action on the draft motions, President Collins announced an "open-question" period at the next meeting (March 6). A number of University officials have expressed willingness to participate in the program to allow any student to ask questions on campus policy. The questions, according to Collins, must be written out and delivered to the Senate Office on or before Monday, March 4.

An Academic Affairs Committee report by Chairman Chris McGahan dealing with the Cook Curriculum proposals was made. He indicated that he has been assured that each senator and each house will have a copy of the Cook Report. Senator Lew Gurwitz recommended that the Cook report serve "as something to spring from." He added, "This is a situation where the Senate can act, and not react . . ." Gurwitz suggested that interested students continue work with the members of the Cook Committee on the weak areas of the report.

Budget Committee Chairman Brad Johnson presented preliminary budgets of the Amateur Radio Club and the Heymakers (square dance club). The Senate gave initial approval to the $285.00 Heymakers request. Spokesmen Barry Allen (President) and John Newman (Treasurer) of the Amateur Radio Club answered questions on a $1,950.00 request for new radio equipment. An amendment introduced by Senator Fred Hartwell would spread

National . . .

WASHINGTON (AP)—Gen. Earl G. Wheeler, saying the enemy now holds some of the initiative, gave President Johnson and other top officials a new war report Wednesday that could lead to U.S. troop increases in Vietnam.

The White House refused to say what—if anything—Wheeler, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommended to the President in detailed war discussions.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Washington political community is wondering if President Johnson contributed to the failure of Illinois Democrats to produce a big-name opponent for Sen. Everett M. Dirksen.

Dirksen, the Senate Republican leader, apparently will be opposed in the November elections by State Atty. Gen. William G. Clark.

Emergency efforts to end a 10-day strike by 22,000 Florida teachers are under way as a similar strike ends in Albuquerque, N.M. New walkouts threaten in Oklahoma and Pittsburgh, Pa.

International . . .

LONDON (AP)—Britain's biggest unions, powerful backers of the Labor government, rebelled Wednesday against the government's voluntary plan to hold back wage demands to help make devaluation work.

The vote at a special meeting called by the Trades Union Congress seemed to give the Labor government little choice but to legislate another wage freeze, even at the risk of a collision with the unions.

SAIGON (AP)—North Vietnamese gunners shot down a big U.S. Marine helicopter Wednesday near besieged Khe Sanh on South Vietnam's northern frontier, U.S. headquarters reported Thursday. It said 22 U.S. servicemen were killed and one was wounded.

Across the country, fighting generally slackened, but the Viet Cong kept up its shelling and harrassment at military installations on the fringes of Saigon.

PARIS (AP)—A French youth of 17 was fined $60 this week for breaking windows and scrawling anti-American slogans concerning the Vietnam war on the American Cathedral in France during a demonstration last June and a woman of 26 was fined $40 as an accomplice scrawler. Together they were ordered to pay $340 more for damages. They were identified as students.

LONDON (AP) — An all-party committee has recommended to Prime Minister Harold Wilson that Britons be given the vote at age 20 instead of 21. It rejected a move by a Labor-Liberal faction to reduce the voting age to 18.

JERUSALEM (AP)—The Israeli government is spending about $1 million building and improving Jerusalem air raid shelters complete with running water and other amenities, the civil defense command announced.

OTTAWA (AP) — Preliminary estimates indicate the United States contracted in Canada last year for $305 million worth of armaments, informed sources reported. The figure represents about $12 million more than the 1966 total. The sources said Canada placed orders in the United States in 1967 for about $290 million worth of armaments, a decrease of about $42.6 million from 1966.

UMass Concert Association Presents Andres Segovia at S. U.

World famous guitarist Andres Segovia will play at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday, March 5, in the Student Union ballroom at 8 p.m., sponsored by the UMass Concert Association.

He made his first public appearance in Granada at the age of fourteen and his debut was described as a "revelation." Within a short time his name was known throughout Spain.

He arrived in New York for his debut at Town Hall in 1928 where he amazed critics with his "powers of execution and imagination." His was the first major guitar recital in New York, and within five weeks he had achieved a record of six complete sold-out New York concerts. In the next 11 weeks he played 40 American engagements.

His UMass program includes Six Little Menuets by Sor, Variations on a Theme of Handel by Harris, Prelude and Study by Villa-Lobos, Aria Con Variazioni by Frescobaldi, Mendelssohn's Canzonetta, Turina's Fantasia Sevillana, and Three Evocative Castilian Pieces by Torroba. The works by Villa-Lobos, Turina, and Torroba were written for and dedicated to Segovia.

Tickets for the program are available at the UMass Student Union box office or at the door before the performance.

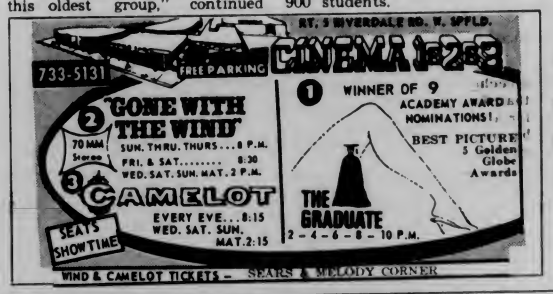
New Draft Law May Decrease Grad School Enrollments by 900

By ROSEMARY WHIDDEN
Staff Reporter

The Council of Graduate Schools in the United States appealed to Congress Tuesday to abolish all college draft deferments and to turn to a random lottery of 19 to 26 year olds to serve in the armed forces.



Edward Moore, Dean of the UMass Graduate School was contacted by the Collegian Tuesday night and asked his views on the proposed random lottery.

"The Council of Graduate Schools is a pretty powerful group," he stated, "and UMass is a member. There is a good chance that Congress will listen to their proposal."

The present draft law takes older students first, beginning with those age 26 and younger. "Most graduate students are in this oldest group," continued Moore, "but if the draft were done on a random basis, graduate schools wouldn't be hit nearly as hard."

Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) introduced a bill to Congress yesterday supporting the Council's proposal.

Dean Moore, commenting on the effect of the present draft system on the graduate school, if it were used here said, "There will be a 25 per cent decrease in our grad school next year decreasing the enrollment by about 900 students."

Uncle Sam Prospects For Gold

WASHINGTON (AP) — Armed with instruments, techniques and vehicles that would have astounded an old sourdough Forty-Niner, Uncle Sam has been quietly prospecting for gold from coast to coast the past two years —and the first results look promising.

In a 24-page progress report, the U.S. Geological Survey described Wednesday the first findings in a five-year search for heavy metals it began jointly with the Bureau of Mines, a brother-agency within the Interior Department, in April 1966.

The aim, the report says, is "to stimulate domestic production of a group of metals that are in short supply. These metals are gold, silver, platinum — group metals, mercury, tin, antimony, bismuth, nickel and tantalum."

About 90 per cent of the initial effort has been on gold "because of its international monetary importance," the report says.

LSD Usage Declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government officials say there are indications of a decline in use of LSD and express hope it means young people are heeding scientific reports of danger in taking the hallucinogen.

The Food and Drug Administration says all its nine drug abuse control field offices around the country have been reporting a general decline in the amount of LSD encountered in the last eight months.

John Finlator, director of FDA's Bureau of Drug Abuse Control, said Wednesday there are no figures to show precisely what the decline has been. He said the reports are general estimates of "the amount of LSD we're finding on the street."

Asked whether the reports mean use of LSD has declined, Finlator said, "I think a prudent man could draw that conclusion."

First word of the reported decline came Monday in testimony by Food and Drug Commissioner James L. Goddard before a House commerce subcommittee.

Rep. Tim Lee Carter, R-Ky., estimated almost two million students in the country are using LSD and he questioned whether the government could enforce a proposed law that would make it a crime to possess the drug.

Finlator said Carter's estimate is based on "four very superfluous studies." Carter projected statistics to show that as many as 1.6 million high school students and 300,000 college students use LSD, but later conceded his figures are questionable.

Finlator said there are no reliable figures on LSD usage but added: "I don't think there are that many." And he said he believes a greater total number of college students than high school students use the drug.

Arguing in favor of the administration's proposal to make possession of LSD a misdemeanor, Finlator said state and local officials could enforce such a law. He added, however, that "you can never enforce a law to the nth degree.

Goddard supported the administration's proposal at the hearing but said he still personally opposes making possession of LSD illegal.

UMass Psychologist Researches 'Taste Buds'

Certain people may confuse basic tastes in much the same way that a colorblind person confuses basic colors, a University of Massachusetts psychologist suggests.

Associate Professor of Psychology Ernest Dzendolet has presented evidence of this possibility in a technical paper that describes the results of taste tests on a group of 120 students.

"Apparently only a small percentage of people are accurate identifiers of the currently accepted four basic taste qualities —bitter, salty, sour and sweet— and a further percentage of people, mostly males, are unable to make a discrimination between sour and bitter. The latter point suggests that this confusion is similar to abnormal color vision," Dr. Dzendolent states.

The UMass researcher published his findings in an article, "Variability in Gustatory Quality Identification," in a recent issue of the technical journal Perception and Psychophysics. UMass graduate student Herbert L. Meiselman was coauthor.

His overall conclusion is that because the tendency to confuse the sour and bitter taste qualities cannot be corrected by an informative procedure, then the confusion is primarily physiological in origin.

The UMass researcher suggests that this sour-bitter confusion in the taste mechanism may compare to abnormal color vision in the eye, which is most commonly marked by a confusion of two colors and is more common in males than in females.

USSR Assails China At Meeting of Reds

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP)—The Soviet Union has led an attack on Red China at the meeting of 66 Communist parties here despite an agreement to avoid name calling, Communist sources reported Wednesday.

They said a speech Tuesday by Mikhail A. Suslov, the Soviet party ideologist, assailed Red China for great power chauvinism, nationalism and refusing to cooperate in a united Communist action to support North Vietnam.

Romania a fence-sitter in the Moscow-Peking dispute that has destroyed world Communist unity, expressed regrets that the Soviet Union had found it necessary to violate its promises and criticize the absent Chinese.

It was at Romanian insistence that assurances were given to Communist parties before they came here that no party would be criticized. The meeting was called to discuss the Soviet plan for a world Communist conference.

Suslov's speech and other speeches of Communist parties that follow Moscow's line called for a world conference in November or December, with most suggesting Moscow as the site.

Speeches by various parties indicated that a committee would be set up to arrange a Moscow conference just for Communist parties. The possibility was held open for a later "anti-imperialist" rally to include other leftist organizations.

WMUA and Censorship

The action of the Administration in not allowing WMUA to broadcast the open meeting at the Cage February 19 is unfortunate. This blatant disregard for freedom of expression and the right of the public to be informed is inconsistent with the democratic traditions of UMass.

The Administration prevented broadcast for "fear of obscenities of trouble breaking out and hindrance of dialogue." It appears instead that they feared looking bad in public. Everyone who wished to attend could not have since the Cage only has a seating capacity of 4500. Therefore the presentation of the dialogue as a public service by WMUA was most necessary.

We hope that this is an isolated incident and not a policy-setting precedent. We urge the Administration to reassess its responsibility to the campus community and prevent such occurrences in the future. The public has a right to know, and censorship of this sort has no place in a university community.

THE EDITORS

We Are The Present

By LOIS BLOOM
Editorial Staff

One of the major hang-ups of our generation is the belief that to stick out one's neck is to invite decapitation. Too many of us are afraid to express our thoughts. Too many of us are, in fact, afraid to think. If we are to clean up the mess which is our inheritance, we must begin to unite our forces of reason and incorporate our personal convictions into a larger system of universal values. Individual drops of incitation must be joined to form pools of revelation and pragmatic solution. But first the fear must be alleviated so that all may contribute.

What is the nature of this fear of involvement? Why are so many of us afraid to let others know that we think? The idle majority sees the active minority as the object of constant attack. No one likes to be criticized, no one likes to be vulnerable, and so the majority remains idle. Yet these quiet unknowns are the first to ridicule and condemn those who reveal their beliefs. Constructive criticism is good, but malicious ridicule is not. Those who seek security in a shelter of silence and anonymity are protecting no one, least of all themselves; and those who speak only to attack the involvement of others are helping to build the structure of fear that will destroy us. Before we can develop courage, therefore, we must first develop tolerance.

Aggravating the problem is the idea that college teaches us how to think. This simply is not true. College teaches us only how to channel our thoughts in new directions; for the ability to think is in fact a prerequisite to the college experience, and without it none of us would be here. But we are here, and the question now is where do we go. There are two roads to choose between: the road of involvement leading to survival, or the road of stagnation leading to self-destruction. We all have the capacity for thought—let us not fill this capacity instead with fear.

Such fear of involvement, like all fear, is an irrational force. But unlike other fears, this one inhibits the very forces needed to suppress it. The forces of reason must combat the irrational force of fear, and when reason itself is restricted by fear, a vicious circle is created. If we are afraid to think, then fear becomes the dominant factor in our behavior; and if fear is allowed to dominate, then we become subhuman.

We must not permit fear to destroy our reason, our humanity, ourselves. We must not be afraid to see when we look, to hear when we listen, to speak when we feel. And we must be willing to consider the ideas of others, to respect their involvment if not their views. Only by uniting our forces of reason can we overcome the destructive prevalence of fear. But such union will not exist until we can express our thoughts and by expressing share them.

In the face of tomorrow's threat, yesterday's morality becomes obsolete. With such a denial of both past and future, we can look only to the present for our values and ideals. And we are the present, every one of us. If we are afraid to think or afraid to express our thoughts, then we are lost, and the uncertain future becomes a certainty.

Campus Comment

A Biting Problem . . .

To the editor:

In response to your editorial of last Friday, I can only agree heartily that the lack of dental care is indeed a serious deficiency in the program for comprehensive health care which we hope to make available to students at the University. It is a deficiency of which we have been aware ever since it was apparent during the construction of the present infirmary in 1960-1961 that no provisions had been made for offering this service. Our problem has been to find a means of offering dental care without obligating students to an unrealistically high financial burden for necessary renovations and for maintaining this service.

The only way this could be done at present would be either to displace from the Infirmary some services or activities now carried on here, or to assign additional room to the Health Services, possibly in Brooks residence hall. Renovations necessary to install dental operating fixtures (including a dental X-ray with appropriate shielding, etc.) would be costly, probably in excess of the $15,000 reported as the cost of the proposed addition to the Infirmary. Even having made physical arrangements, it would be difficult now to provide assurance that competent dentists could be found to provide the professional service by Sept. 1968.

In order to meet present dental needs, we have tried to assist students in making appointments with dentists in the Amherst area for meeting emergency dental needs. Although this has not been entirely successful, we have been under the impression that very few students have been more seriously inconvenienced in obtaining emergency dental service than they would have been at home. The one - month waiting period for elective dental care is a common experience, not confined to Amherst.

Incidentally, the $15,000 mentioned in the editorial is the cost of the feasibility study alone. If this study recommends an addition to the Infirmary in its present location, there will be an additional cost of approximately $50,000 for plans prior to construction. The construction cost of the Infirmary addition is estimated at no less than $1.6 million. Obviously, this is a large investment which must be planned carefully.

We are heartily interested in the needs and wishes of students, especially as the Infirmary addition approaches the design phase. I suggest that students who have suggestions to offer transmit these directly to the following student members of the University Health Council:

Martha Curran, 302 Van Meter, South
John McFarland, 417 Baker

Paul Silverman, 270 Hills, South
Lila MacLean, 1406 Coolidge, Middle
Philip Lerner, 218 Webster
Lannie Adelman, 1403 Coolidge, Middle

I shall be glad to meet students at any time, either individually or in groups, who wish to discuss development of the University's health program (545-2668).

In Gratitude

To the editor:

The Fine Arts Council wishes to express its appreciation to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian for its February 15th broadside on the need for a Fine Arts Center on campus. A Fine Arts program is an integral element of any attempt at liberal education. As long as we lack adequate facilities to cultivate and present such a program, our campus, and the education offered here, will be deficient because of it.

Perhaps your article will prove to be the spark that stimulates sufficient interest and concern to make the proposed Fine Arts Center a reality.

It's Leap Year . . . Beware

Man Trap: A Legal Device?

To the scientific minded person, Leap Year is a year which has 366 days. To the male-minded female, it is the year when she can take the upper hand, for Leap Year is the time for the woman to propose to the man. She lets the bachelor know that his free and easy days are numbered.

The idea of the women proposing to the man, or the "Sadie Hawkins" aspect of love and marriage, began in the late fourth or early fifth century. Saint Bridget and fellow members of her order felt that the custom of only men proposing was unfair to women. She went, as a representative of these women, to Saint Patrick with the problem.

Saint Patrick granted women the privilege of proposal every seventh year. Since this didn't meet with her approval, Saint Bridget asked that it be every fourth year. The only catch was that this should fall on the long fourth year, or Leap Year. Saint Patrick agreed, and thus began the tradition of Leap Year as we know it today.

The next mention of the importance of women in proposing was in Scotland in 1288. At this time, laws were made about the custom. If a woman was going to ask a man to marry her, during this year, she had to show her intentions by wearing a scarlet flannel petticoat. A small corner of this had to be visible to all who saw her.

If a man turned down her proposal, he could be placed in jail unless he showed proof that he was already either married or promised. In this case, he was obliged to give her a silk dress as a consolation.

There is no mention as to whether or not these or any other such laws have been revoked. So it is wise for all males to be careful during Leap Year. An unknown law written a long time ago could mean the end of bachelorhood at a female's words, "It's Leap Year. Will you marry me?"

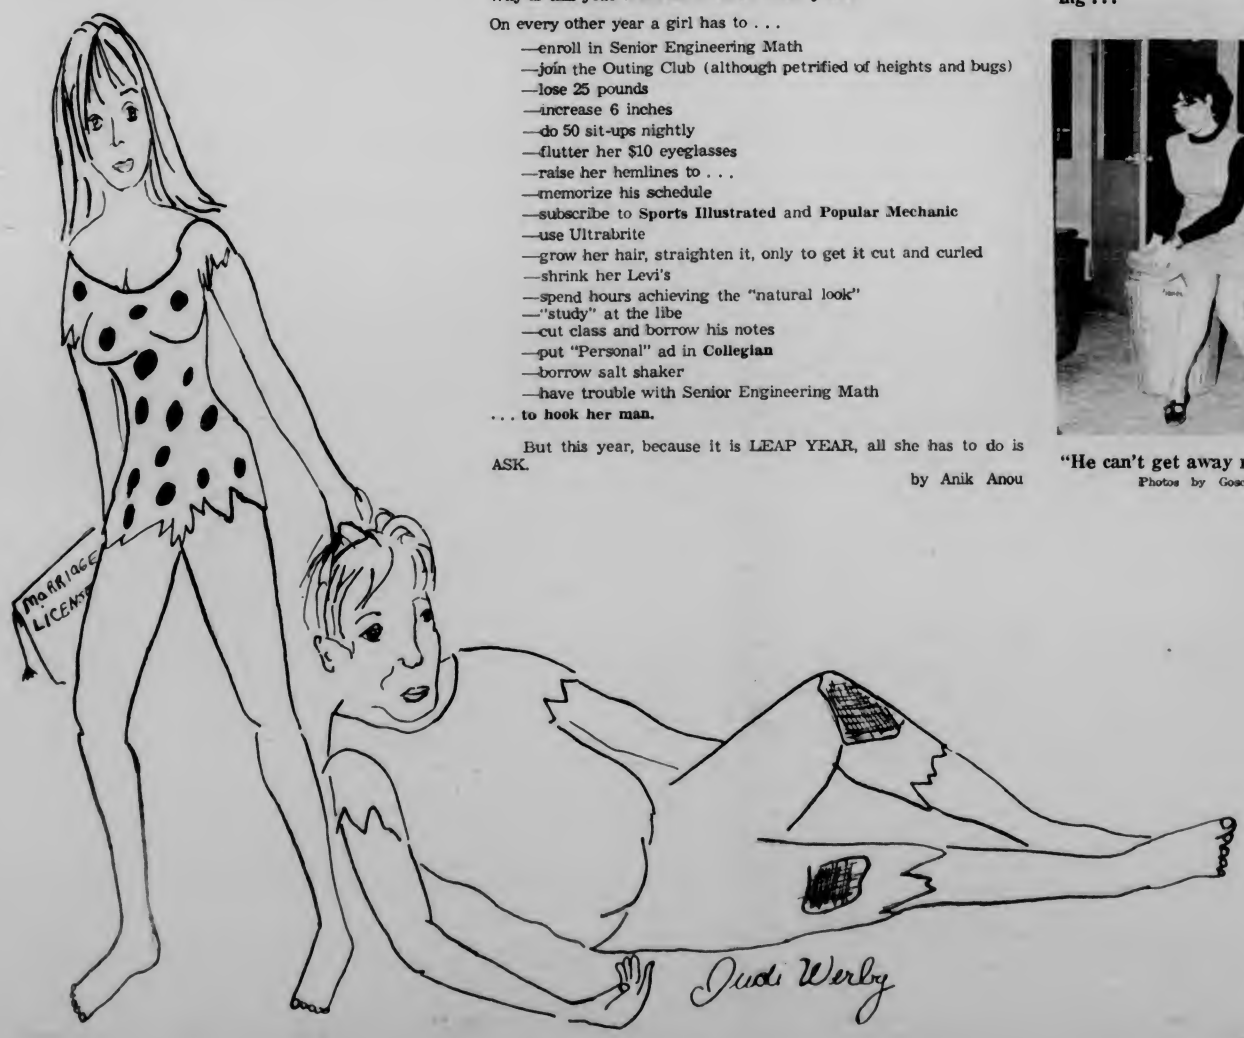
On Every Other Year . . .

Why is this year different from all other years?



On every other year a girl has to . . .
—enroll in Senior Engineering Math
—join the Outing Club (although petrified of heights and bugs)
—lose 25 pounds
—increase 6 inches
—do 50 sit-ups nightly
—flutter her $10 eyeglasses
—raise her hemlines to . . .
—memorize his schedule
—subscribe to Sports Illustrated and Popular Mechanic
—use Ultrabrite
—grow her hair, straighten it, only to get it cut and curled
—shrink her Levi's —spend hours achieving the "natural look"
—"study" at the libe
—cut class and borrow his notes
—put "Personal" ad in Collegian
—borrow salt shaker
—have trouble with Senior Engineering Math
. . . to hook her man.

But this year, because it is LEAP YEAR, all she has to do is ASK.

4000 New Troops Arrive in Vietnam

SAIGON (AP) — A massive airlift has landed 4,000 of the 10,500 fresh American troops the Pentagon promised Gen. William C. Westmoreland "for insurance purposes" and 4,000 more are on route to Vietnam.

The American influx-ordered two weeks ago shared attention Wednesday with sharp action in the central highlands and continued Communist pressures on the Saigon area and Khe Sanh, on the threatened northern frontier.

The U.S. Command announced the arrival of the 4,000 paratroopers of the 82nd Airborne Division's combat-tested 3rd Brigade at Chu Lai, a base on the South China Sea 345 miles northeast of Saigon.

Official word is expected soon of the deployment here of 4,000 fresh Marines, members of the 27th Regimental Landing Team. Some of these Marines were seen off by Prsident Johnson at the El Toro Air Station in California Feb. 17.

Thieu called on the South Vietnamese people in a television address to accept austerity during this critical period of our national history." He announced his government has decided to make permanent a ban on night clubs and dance halls, which he closed with a martial law decree Jan. 31.

About 80 per cent of the newly arrived paratroopers are veterans of previous action in Vietnam. Commanded by Col. Alexander R. "Bub" Bolling, they have been assigned at least temporarily to the Americal Division.

Arrival of the paratroopers will free another brigade of the Americal Division for duty closer to the northern frontier, where the U.S. Command believes the enemy threat is greatest.

Grant Awarded to UMass For New Teaching Study

The University of Massachusetts School of Engineering will run a National Science Foundation institute for high school teachers next summer on "Man Made World" —a new teaching approach that relates modern creative technological concepts to the high school science curriculum.

According to UMass engineering Dean Kenneth G. Picha, the University School of Engineering will train 30 high school teachers from the northeast in the Man Made World program under a $39,890 NSF grant.

The grant is in part an outgrowth of cooperation between the University and Amherst Regional High School, which has been offering the Man Made World program to 25 students since last September, the first school in the Commonwealth to do so. Charles Camp, an alumnus of the UMass School of Engineering, is teaching the course at Amherst Regional.

Man Made World, aimed at non-science majors in high school, is not only designed to explain creative technological concepts such as feedback control, modeling and optimization but to teach how these engineering concpts are being applied in the modern world to many areas of non-engineering activity.

Thus, for example, in the section on feedback, the importance of this concept to such things as human nervous systems, other biological systems, the stabilizing and control of social and economic systems and even political systems is stressed. Basic to the program is the idea that scientists discover what already exists, while engineers create new things.

The program developed through nearly five years of study by the National Science Foundation-backed Engineering Concepts Curriculum Project (ECCP). In schools where the program has already been tried students have found the laboratory equipment exciting and adaptable enough to spend more time with it in self instruction after class than they are required to during class.

To make the program even more challenging, a remote access teletype console that ties directly to the University's CDC 3600 Research Computer will be installed soon in the high school. This will give high school students a chance to use the powerful computer right from their own classroom.

High schools interested in participating in next summer's program or in getting more information about ECCP, can write to Dean Joseph Marcus, School of Engineering, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002.

but has been silent about Vietnam for months.

At the end of a disappointing campaign trail that began long before his formal announcement last Nov. 1, Romney said it was clear his candidacy "has not won the wide acceptance with rank-and-file Republicans that I had hoped to achieve."

Polls indicated he was the underdog in the March 12 New Hampshire primary where his name was on the ballot with Nixon's. A write-in drive for Rockefeller is under way there.

Romney was the first announced candidate in modern times to pull out of a nomination contest before he had tested his strength in a primary. The late Wendell L. Willkie quit in the middle of a campaign in 1944, but only after he had been defeated in the Wisconsin and Nebraska primaries.

The Michigan governor's decision to pull out followed a conference with Leonard W. Hall, his campaign chairman, and other advisers in a Boston motel. It was based primarily on polls showing he had made no headway against Nixon in an intensive handshaking campaign in New Hampshire.

In Manchester, N. H., Nixon issued a brief statement calling Romney "one of the nation's outstanding Republican governors" and predicting "he will play a major role . . . in assuring the Republican victory in November."

Nixon made no comment on how the Romney developments might affect his own campaign. Various polls have indicated Rockefeller at present would run stronger than Nixon in an election match with President Johnson.

Varsity and Freshman Wrestlers Roll

W.P.I. Defeated Twice as Frosh Finish 11-0 Season

By JOHN GEDSUDSKI
Staff Reporter

In what was termed by Coach Homer Barr, "the Varsity's greatest effort," the UMass wrestlers defeated W.P.I. 31-16, last night at Boyden. The freshman wrestlers, meanwhile capped off a spectacular 11-0 season by walloping W.P.I. 47-0.

The varsity was sparkling tonight. Their total of five pins was the highest they have gained all season.

At the 115 pound class, the Redman victory began, as the first of the five pins was recorded. Bill Goodwin decked Steve Sweeney, in the fast time of 1:13. At 123 pounds, UMass' Dave Wade, also came through with a pin, as he defeated Dave Grillo, in a time of 1:45.

UMass was set back somewhat in the 132 pound class, as hard-luck wrestler Paul Pearl was decisioned by Lennie Palizzotto. However, the Redman grapplers were quickly on the win trail again.

Captain Gene Paltrineri, who has pinned all but one of his opponents this year, did it again as he easily defeated Rit Simoneau in 1:57.

Brian Urquart was decisioned, although putting on a good fight, by W.P.I. captain Pete Grock, in the 145 pound class by the score of 7-2. The Redmen came right back however.

Mike McKean, returning from a injury that has sidelined him for the last few meets, made his return a successful one as he decisioned Todd Akin by the score of 9-2, in the 152 pound class.

In the 160 pound category, it was Fred Fitzpatrick, of UMass who decisioned co-captain, Scott Wilson of W.P.I., by the score of 4-0. However, at 167 pounds, Parker Simonds, after a long tough match was finally pinned by Bill Eshborn at 6:50.

The highlight of the meet came when Ernie Smith had his first pin of the year over Dave Warren at 5:22, in the 171 class. Dick Gnatek matched Smith in the 191 category by pinning John Korzick in 6:03. The match, which evened UMass' record at 6-6, ended with Glenn Cummins being pinned in unlimited at :35 by Fred Smuugdien.

The freshman wrestlers meanwhile, as usual, were simply overpowering. Their rout began in the 115 pound class, when Nick DiDomenico decisioned John Read, 16-11.

John Paltrineri, a worthy successor to brother Gene, pinned John Sherman at 3:07 in the 123 pound class. Phil Davis, meanwhile won a forfeit at 130 pounds.

At 137 pounds, the UMass frosh continued the rout as Howie Kaplan pinned Phil Bienick at 4:29, followed by another Redman forfeit win at 145 pounds, this one for Bob Freeman.

At 152 and 160 pound classes Mike Brauner and Tom Young respectively won pins, while Tom Andrews, at 167, decisioned Dan O'Brien, 9-0. Dennis Mulligan won the 177 pound class by forfeit. After a no contest at 191 pounds, George Zguris pinned Steve Parpara in 1:45, to cap another great frosh performance.

Runners Eye Conf. Title

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

Track coach Ken O'Brien takes his team to the University of Maine Saturday, in quest of UMass' third consecutive Yankee Conference indoor track crown. UMass, who compiled a 1-1 record against conference dual meet competition this season, is ranked with Rhode Island and New Hampshire as having a good shot at the crown.

Coach O'Brien feels that it will be a close meet, whoever wins. UMass chances will undoubtedly depend on the runners to come from behind after the field event score has been tabulated. O'Brien thinks that URI will be the team to beat because of their strong field event team. "Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire will have to break up the top three Rhode Island men Granger, McDonald and Leburn," said the coach. He added he hoped the UConn shotputters could down the URI shotputters.

The running events will determine if the Redmen will come back with another conference crown. The coach says some of his men will have to double if the score of the meet warrants it. But as of now, he is scheduling each man for one event. Hoping for help in the high jump from John Ariensen and Paul Nyman the runners will begin with Marc Levefer, who could win the hurdles. Three sprinters, Steve Burrell, Dave Marble, and Steve Chase hope to all score in their event. Their biggest opposition will come from Gerlin, the defending Yankee Conference sprinting champ from UNH.

The UMass, miler will be senior Greg Bowman, who will battle UConn's Vitale and New Hampshire's Esterbrook for the top spot in the conference. The Redmen hope to notch a lot of points in the two-mile with a strong contingent of Paul Hoss, Charlie Lang and Marc Gelinas.

The 600 yard run will be another UMass strong point, when top runners, John Anderson and Bob Hasselbaum compete. These two men hold the fastest times in the conference this year. The Redmen will be well represented in th 1000 with Dave Evans and Diego Gonzalez, both shooting for the first place shot in their race. At this time, the coach is unsure who will go in the mile relay. Whoever runs it will be in his second race of the day.

Coach O'Brien said, "Realistically, we will be behind after the field events. But, we can come back as we did against New Hampshire and as we have in the past in championship meets."

Amherst Wins in Upset

Frosh Hoopsters Defeated, 65-60

By STEVE SNAMBAN
Staff Reporter

A hustling Amherst College team upset the UMass freshman basketball team, 65-60, last night, at Amherst College. The loss drops the Little Redmen's record to 11-7, while boosting the Lord Jeff's mark to 7-3.

Led by the fine shooting of Ken Mathias, UMass found itself leading, 15-14, midway through the first half. Mathias, hitting ouside jumpers and also scoring from underneath, was the main reason for the UMass lead.

With 7:30 remaining to play, however, Amherst ran off a seven straight points to take the lead, 21-15. They eventually built this lead up to eight points, 25-17, until UMass, running a string of their own, outscored Amherst, 11-2, over the last 4:30 to take the lead at the half, 28-27.

Mathias paced all scorers, having 13 points at halftime, while Amherst, showing a balanced offense had three men with six points and two others with four.

The second half began much the same as the first with both teams trading baskets as UMass led, 36-35, with 15:17 left to play. A three-point play by Mathias and a basket by guard Bob Dempsey gave the Little Redmen a five point lead, only to have Amherst, led by 7' center, Phil Stec tie the score at 41-41, with 11:32 remaining.

A basket by forward Jim Ryan, making the score 43-41, gave UMass, what was to be its last lead of the evening, as Amherst gradually began to take command. Fine all-around play by Gary Brown and center Stec enabled Amherst to outscore the Little Redmen 16-6 over the next six minutes to give them a 57-49 lead.

Using a harrying press, UMass attempted a comeback, closing the gap to one point, 59-58 on a jumper from the right corner by Mathias, with 2:10 left. A 6-2 spurt in the remaning minutes by Amherst put the game out of reach, however.

Poor shooting at the foul line by UMass didn't help matters any as they shot a paltry 55.5%. Amherst meanwhile shot 76% from the foul stripe.

Mathias led all scorers with 26 points, followed on the UMass scoring list, by Jim Ryan with 13. Amherst was led by Brown and Stec with 17 points each. Stec's totals included a fine 7 for 9 at the foul line.

Woman Skiers Are 2nd In Radcliffe Competition

The UMass Women's Ski Team, a member of the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference, competed in the annual Radcliffe Giant slalom last Saturday. Eleven schools were entered in the two run giant slalom at Waterville, Valley, N.H.

With good ski conditions on the slopes, the girls from Radcliffe placed first, and the UMass team took second. In a field of 51 racers, Judy Fuller of UMass placed first in individual scoring, Ann Richardson placed tenth, and Barbara Bund placed twelfth. This was the 1968 team's first competition, and the eight girls are off to a good season.

At the February Fiasco held at Tenney Mountain in Plymouth, N.H. Sunday, the UMass team again gave a fine performance. The UMass girls took first, while Radcliffe placed second, and Bradford Junior College placed third.

In individual scoring, Judy Fuller again placed first, Barb Bund was fourth, and Judy Beers placed fifth.

This coming weekend, the team again has two meets scheduled. Saturday at Killington, Vt., UMass, and Mount Holyoke are hosting the Alden Trophy giant slalom, and Sunday they will compete in a two run slalom under the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference.

Students Protest Conditions At University Park Apartments

By DICK LANE
Staff Reporter

A group of student tenants of the University Park Apartments in Amherst will conduct a rent strike today to protest living conditions and to "protect the safety and welfare of the residents of University Park." The strikers include some "80 - 90" University of Massachusetts students.

Attorneys David Burres of Amherst and Steven Silverman of Springfield have been brought in for consultation by the group and to explore possible court action or other legal options. Helfand stated that he would present the rent to Burres because "We want to pay our rents, but we also want improvements."

Spokesmen and organizers for the strike are University of Massachusetts Student Paul F. McCarthy and Dennis Helfand of Amherst.

According to Helfand, the strike is a "legal and economic action" designed to show the tenants dissatisfaction with the "complete mess" of living conditions. He claims that 41 apts. have signed a petition agreeing with the strike and another 15 have promised to.

Helfand went on to say that the tenants have been asking for the better part of two years (since the apartments were built) for improvements but that "complaints never seem to get registered" and that "they (management) don't care."

As a result, he added, a committee was formed to investigate possible solutions and finally came up with the strike as a "last resort."

Helfand feels that the strike group has strength because "this is the first time this many students have gathered together."

Among the more serious problems of the apartments which are owned by Joseph Rousseau of Holyoke are the six-seven feet of flooding of water in basements, "filthy" halls, fungus and spider webs on ceilings, no fire extinguishers at all in any of the buildings, faulty wiring, broken locks, and other safety or health hazards. One resident, Reinharde Zollitsch (University of Massachusetts graduate student) claimed his basement was "absolutely wet". He stated that the management sends "just fixers" for repair and that if anything is to be done he must "fix it myself."

The Amherst student went on to state that "I don't think the laws are complied with," and

T. V. News Pioneer Fred Friendly To Speak Here in Symposium

By STAN LEVCO
Senior Reporter

Fred Friendly of radio and T.V. news fame will highlight a Communications Symposium at UMass this weekend. The symposium is being sponsored by a joint faculty-student committee dealing with all aspects of campus media.

Chairman of the symposium, James Foudy, says that the purpose of the meeting is to "generate new ideas about the problems and effects of mass communication".

The program begins tonight with the lecture by Friendly, a former C.B.S. news director who is currently head of the Columbia University T.V. and Broadcasting department.

Friendly left C.B.S. news after an agument over the showing of an "I Love Lucy" show instead of a news documentary.

Saturday's program will include more than 15 panels discussing various aspects of campus communications, from the feasibility of a daily four-college newspaper to the difficulties of radio and T.V. broadcasting. Each panel will be headed by a professional media representative.

In announcing the schedule of the symposium, chairman Foudy stated that it is the Communication Board's hope "that this symposium would provide new channels of discussion and thought; some of the them that the communications industry so sorely needs".

Johnson Bids McNamara Farewell

WASHINGTON AP — President Johnson bade "good-by and farewell" to Robert Strange McNamara Thursday. It was a day when the retiring defense chief's superefficient military machine seemed to sputter in disarray.

On an occasion set aside for honoring McNamara upon his departure as secretary of defense after seven years:

—The President and McNamara were trapped for a frustrating 12 minutes in a Pentagon elevator just as they prepared to go outside for a full military honors ceremony. The elevator was no. 13 and was carrying 13 persons.

—Johnson's words of praise—"Bob McNamara's career is just about the textbook example of the modern public servant"—went virtually unheard when the public address system failed.

—A chilling rain forced cancellation of a scheduled fly-by of Air Force planes including three F111 fighter versions of the old TFX warplane that brought McNamara so much controversy.

All this on the 51-year-old McNamara's last day as boss of the Pentagon and its global military establishment. After a month's skiing vacation in Aspen, Colo., he will become head of the World Bank April 1.

"I have heard this place here at the Pentagon referred to as the puzzle palace," Johnson remarked as he stood bareheaded under an umbrella. Standing in the rain were several thousand persons gathered around the Pentagon's river entrance.

"Bob McNamara may be the only man who ever found the solution to the puzzle, and he is taking it with him," Johnson stated.

Cusick Opens D. V. P. Program

By SHARON SAMUELS
Staff Reporter

Leo J. Cusick, General Manager of the Mass. Bay Transportation Authority, spoke Thursday night on the subject of "New Concepts of Urban Transportation." He was the first speaker in the symposium being presented by the Distinguished Visitors Program entitled "The American City: 1968 and Tomorrow."

Cusick opened his speech by briefly discussing the purposes and the history of the city, emphasizing the importance of transportation in its development. He then discussed some of the contemporary problems that face transportation as cities continue to expand at an ever increasing rate in population and in area.

One of the major points brought out by Cusick was the great involvement and interaction of transportation in areas other than the most obvious: moving people. These areas are the sociological, economic, and political spheres of the city that, he stated, can be influenced beneficially by the transportation system if it chooses to develop programs aimed at this purpose.

Citing examples from all over the country, Cusick pointed out exisiting needs and problems confronting the transportation systems, as well as progress and improvements that are being made in them. He emphasized the great need for new people and ideas in improvement programs coming from all areas of interest.

Cusick ended his speech with a question and answer period, during which the subject of the new "hardware concepts" of urban transportation was brought up. Cusick elaborated on this topic, presenting a long list of the possible future modes of transportation. He stated that many of these were actually old concepts now being studied for practical use by many industries.

Commission Warns of Racial Dangers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential commission said Thursday that racism and riots will split the nation into "two societies, one black, one white — separate and unequal" — unless massive and costly remedies are begun at once.

The bipartisan National Commission on Civil Disorders, after eight months' intensive study of the 1967 big-city riots, reported that bias and segregation "threaten the future of every American," but added:

"The movement apart can be reversed."

It notified President Johnson that new taxes must be levied if necessary to "meet unprecedented levels of funding" for slum housing, education, job training, and welfare.

The commission did not put a price tag on its sweeping proposals, but their magnitude made it clear that the cost would at least approach the $2 billion a month level of the Vietnam war.

Reporting on its analysis of the riots that brought looting, shooting and arson to American cities last year, the commission headed by Gov. Otto Kerner of Illinois said:

"The urban disorders of the summer of 1967 were not caused by, nor were they the consequence of, any organized plan or 'conspiracy'."

But the commission said that militant Negro groups and "individual agitators" helped create the hostile atmosphere that contributed to the outbreaks and — with obvious reference to the summer ahead — added this caution:

"We recognize that the continuation of disorders and the polarization of the races would provide fertile ground for organized exploitation in the future."

The report bore down on race prejudice as the underlying poison, saying: "White racism is essentially responsible for the explosive mixture which has been accumulating in our cities since the end of World War II.

The commission prescribed, among scores of other proposals:

—Immediate action to create 2 million new jobs, 1 million by the state, local and federal governments and 1 million by private industry.

News Media Riot Coverage Criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential commission criticized the nation's news media Thursday for the way it reported the 1967 street riots.

The National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders called for improvements in racial and urban reporting.

"Elements of the news media," the panel said, "failed to portray accurately the scale and character of the violence that occurred last summer.

"The over-all effect was, we believe, an exaggeration of both mood and event."

Communist Party Badly Divided As Romania Walks Out of Meeting

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Romania walked out on a meeting of 66 Communist parties Thursday and tore a gaping new breach in the world Communist facade.

In head-on collision with the Soviet Union, the Romanian delegation stalked out after other parties refused to satisfy its demands to stop attacking Red China, Romanian sources reported.

Independent-minded Romania has sought to steer a neutral role in the Moscow-Peking conflict under the relatively new leadership of Nicolae Ceausescu in Bucharest. He is a tireless challenger of Kremlin domination of the Soviet bloc.

The walkout Thursday night recalled the break two decades ago between the Soviet Union of Joseph Stalin and Yugoslavia, whose President Tito first rebelled against Moscow's dictatorial role over the Communist movement. Yugoslavia, while remaining Communist, has since tried to steer an independent course as a nominal neutralist.

Communism in Europe was splintered further in 1961 with the defection of Albania, which has become the eastern European mouthpiece of Red China and Peking's anti-Moscow tactician in the United Nations.

Romania charged Stalinist tactics were being used at the Budapest meeting at which the Soviet Union has campaigned for a world Communist conference next autumn.

The Romanians argued that a world meeting under present conditions of division over the Soviet - Chinese dispute would "only flagrantly illustrate on a world scale the lack of unity between Communist parties."

The walkout was preceded by Romanian demands for a joint apology for a Syrian Communist charge that Romania was pro-Israeli and a promise for an end to criticism of Red China.

The demands hit directly at the Soviet Union, which had used the meeting to attack Chinese policies despite an agreement — made on Romanian insistence—to avaid such attacks.

An eight - parties committee was appointed by the 66-parties meeting after day-long wrangling over the Romanian demands, and it was supposed to work out something.

But the talks broke down and the Romanian delegation left the Hotel Gellert, where the secret meeting had been held behind police guard, the resources said. The Romanians remained in Budapest overnight, apparently waiting for a plane home to Bucharest Friday.

With the Romanians out of the meeting, it was expected to continue with speeches that generally accepted the obvious Soviet determination to hold a conference in Moscow next November or December—even if some parties boycott it.

The 15 parties missing from Budapest, including the Chinese, North Vietnamese, North Korean and Cuban ones, plus the Romanian party and possibly the Norwegian one, appeared certain to pass up a subsequent Moscow meeting.

That would mean that only about half the total world membership of Communist parties would be represented in Moscow.

that it is "the management's responsibility to see that they are, not the students'."

The strike committee organizer also went on to say that as the tenants are students of both Amherst and the University, he hopes that they will "at least be aware of the situation."

Helfand stated that certain Amherst administrators have promised to apply pressure in an unofficial capacity. One of the group's main concerns is to get improvements for future tenants of the buildings, according to the spokesman.

Apartments manager Wallace was questioned by the Collegian on the rent strike and made no comment.

Real estate manager for the property, Mrs. Margaret Wehr of Granby told the Collegian that she considers the tenants as being "unfair" and that some of the complaints made are "ridiculous." She went on that she did not know what would come of the strike but that in her opinion "things would work out because we're in the right."

Owner Rousseau stated that he "can't understand why we didn't get complaints as we went along. How come all at once?"

The Holyoke businessman feels that there is "really no justification for this type of strike."

Paul F. McCarthy of the University and one of the strike organizers stated that "we want to see Rousseau and settle this as easily as possible."

Helfand also stated that "We want to work in good faith," and "just meet with him (Roussau) and work this out reasonably."

Rousseau said that he is "quite busy" and that no one has notified him of the tenants' side of the matter. He is presently working through Mrs. Wehr and manager Wallace and attorneys on the issue.

Helfand stated that his attorneys have told him that the group has a "good cause."

McCarthy also stated that "We are extremely confident in the matter."

State Legislators to Tour UMass Campus

The Student Senate Public Relations Committee will sponsor Legislators' Day on the UMass campus in early April. Massachusetts state legislators will be invited to tour the campus and meet with students.

The purpose of Legislators' Day, according to Sophomore Class President Bruce Balboni, is "to gain the support of the legislature by showing them that this is a responsible university." Balboni added that the meeting will serve to dispel any misconceptions legislators may have about the university.

In contrast to past years, this year's Legislators' Day "will be for the students," stated Balboni. Students will have the opportunity to talk with legislators and discuss their grievances with them.

Invitations will be sent to the legislature during the first week of March.

Faculty Group Presents Film Series on Vietnam

By BRENT CAMPBELL

The Faculty Group on War and Peace Wednesday night presented the first of a three day film series on Vietnam. Entitled "Cinema of Conscience," the film festival began with a showing of three films introduced by a cartoon spoof on the draft.

"Toys", the first film, is a fantasy in which war toys become animated as a group of children look on. The color film depicts war as a game demanding the children's utmost attention.

A lengthy documentary entitled "Sons and Daughters" was shown next. This centered around a two day war protest of 1965. The documentary touches on many aspects of the war including the military-industrial complex, public apathy, and even the American racial crisis.

The final film, "The Survivors", was filmed and narrated by a physician while a volunteer for The Committee of Responsibility. This group was formed to aid civilian war casualties by bringing as many as possible to the U.S. for treatment.

Produced last spring, "The Survivors" quickly but vividly depicts the condition of the war-injured Vietnamese peasant. Its purpose is to portray reality and is therefore a frightening spectacle.

Running slightly less than two and one-half hours in length, the series will again be screened tonight at 8:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

The Eight-Point Program

With one eye on the soaring taxes and the high cost of living and the other eye on the upcoming elections, President Johnson has introduced a bill to "protect the consumer". The eight-point program, proposed last February 6 by Johnson, outlined legislation to study radiation hazards in television and x-ray equipment, a major study of automobile insurance on such points as rising premiums, arbitrary coverage, and policy cancellations and stricter Federal inspection standards on fish and poultry. But the most important part of the program provides especially for increased powers for the Federal Trade Commission.

The F. T. C. was voted into existence by Congress in 1914. Its five-member board now headed by Paul Rand Dixon seems to "prevent unfair competition, deceptive practices, false advertising, price discrimination and monopolies". The F.T.C. has proven its value recently by exposing market-cornering plots in the pharmaceutical industry. The F. T. C.'s major weapon against rackets and detrimental consumer practices is the court injunction. If the new legislation is passed, the commission "would be able to stop fraudulent and deceptive practices immediately while the case is before the commission and the court" Pres. Johnson said. Existing laws allow preliminary injunctions only in cases of food, drugs and cosmetics. Cumbersome and time-consuming procedures must now be used by the commission in their fight for consumer protection.

In addition to this new program, the President said that he would push for the completion of Congressional action on numerous pending consumer bills regarding the disclosure of true interest rates and other finance charges on loans and credit buying. Taken together, these efforts represent a great stride forward in the struggle for fair and honest business and industry provided Congress sees fit to act favorably upon them. It is heartening to see that the Administration has finally found time to assess the plight of the American consumer and to propose legislation to help the affluent society make ends meet.

Down This Way

To Set Himself Free

"Perhaps its is very dangerous for me to see other people; I always have too great a desire to please; perhaps I need solitude." —Andre Gide

"He who loves the more is the inferior and must suffer." —Thomas Mann

"Unless my senses are disoriented I shall fall back into the familiar ruts, into daydreams built on recollections." —Gide

". . . and when you have read me, throw this book away—and go out. I should like it to have made you want to get away—away from anywhere, from your town, from your family, from your room, from your thought." —Gide

But Gide was an artist who lived. He won the Nobel Prize, yet the extent of his work is far from overwhelming. He spent time in libraries. He spent time cruising the streets. He went in and out of relationships like one would go in and out of a subway. We are always in search of sound answers to vital questions: how much time should a man spend with his art? with his life? To what extent should a person cast himself out, set himself free?

Because the import of the questions must weigh differently on each person, answers are difficult to put into any kind of sensibility. If a man is the lover and life is the beloved—life as many living things—it is easy for the man to thrust himself into constant frustration. His love cannot be realized, certainly not returned, and will plague him with enough material, the stuff of which fills libraries and museums. If he narrows his love to one person, the pain can only be more intense, but the blood he spits up under such thirst will touch his work with purity just before it kills him.

Living with your nerves caught in the frustration that makes you squeeze your firsts and with the sweep of an arm destroy everything on your desk is rewarding; it puts you to sleep. Living under the string-tight tension that touches the heart with unbearable sadness — when you keep swallowing something not there —gives solitude.

Although Gide was painstaking in cutting his work into clearly classical form, Thomas Wolfe scribbled on the tops of refrigerators, and James Agee never rewrote anything. When you can stand your art no more, go out.

Concerning WMUA Censorship

To the editor:

I feel that I must point out some inaccuracies in the article entitled "Board Acts on W M U A Censorship" which appeared on page one of the Daily Collegian on Wednesday, February 28.

First of all, the motion "to forward the communications from W M U A . . . etc." (not the "communications complaint" as stated in the article) was made by Mr. Silver, not by myself.

The statement concerning censorship was not an official statement of the WMUA Management or Policy Boards. The statement was written by myself and was approved by four of the five elected student officers of W M U A.

The purpose of this letter is to clear up any inaccuracies and does not in any way mean that the statement is being withdrawn or changed or that W M U A will not take any further official action. Both the faculty advisors and the station membership are very concerned with this issue.

A Letter to President Johnson

To the editor:

Fifty psysicists and physics graduate students from the University of Massachusetts have signed and sent a letter to President Johnson. The text of the letter reads:

We, the undersigned physicists and physics graduate students at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, wish to express our horror at the thought of atomic weapons being used in Vietnam. We strongly feel that this country should not be the first to use nuclear weapons in Vietnam, regardless of possible tactical defensive or offensive advantages.

It is the hope of the signatories that the letter is superfluous.

Umgawa, Black Power

The word is UMGAWA,
Which means to all Black Power.
We shout it in the day,
And you kneel down to pray.
We shout it in the night,
To terrorize the white.
We ask for our equality,
And you say we're already free.
We ask for integration now,
And, smiling, you give us your vow.
But moving in your neighborhoods,
We find you've run off to the woods.
A city burns, a young child cries,
And you don't stop to ask us why.
Our wounds bleed blood that's white man's red;
We fight a past that's long been dead.
You say our children we should bus,
Then when we do, you start to cuss.
So white man listen to that word,
That makes you tremble when it's heard.
The word that you have made us say,
The word that makes you stop and pray.

UMGAWA, Black Power, all black men shout,
NO LONGER WILL YOU KEEP US OUT.

Readers Theatre Presents 'Dandelion Wine' Fri., Sat.

Pedro Silva, Elin Youngberg, Larry Jackmauh, Janie Helman and Mike Prusky will portray a variety of children, storekeepers, old folk and parents in remembered scenes from the life of Douglas Spaulding, age 12, a young lad who comes to a realization of life and death during the summer of 1928 in Greentown, Illinois.

Douglas is the central figure in Dandelion Wine, a Readers Theatre production which will be given Friday and Saturday, Mar. 1 and 2, in 61 Bartlett at 8:30 p.m. Dandelion Wine is a short novel by science fiction writer Ray Bradbury. Readers Theatre director Jerry DeSpain has adapted it for oral presentation by five readers in a 60-minute program of two parts, comprising nine related scenes from Douglas Spaulding's life.

Part I, "The Joys of Summer," is Douglas's awakening to the wonderful sensations of life. Part II, "The Sorrows of Summer," is his realization of death. The motif of wine-making carries throughout the story, beginning with the gathering of dandelions in June and ending with the shelving of the bottles—one for each day of the summer.

In its depicting of small-town characters, the interrupting of dialog with a narrator's comments, and in its theme of life and death, Dandelion Wine is reminiscent of Our Town, without dramatic action and with time compressed to the passing of a summer.

Dandelion Wine was presented under the direction of Mr. DeSpain last November, and the present production will contain some minor changes from the earlier performances.

Admission to Readers Theatre productions is free and the general public is welcome to attend.

Death Toll Rises In Viet Action

SAIGON (AP)—While the enemy has been hit considerably harder, more American servicemen have been killed in action in Vietnam in the last 4 weeks than during all the first 5 years of U.S. involvement in the war.

Cumulative figures disclosed by the U. S. Command Thursday showed 1,829 Americans killed from Jan. 28-Feb. 24, a period of hard fighting marked by attack and counterattack during the Communists' lunar new year offensive.

The death toll from 1961 through 1965 was 1.636.

Gen. William C. Westmoreland, the U.S. commander in Vietnam, said the allies killed 40,000 Communist troops over the four-week period.

Thursday's Action

Air Force fighter-bombers hit at No. Vietnam's nerve center in radar-guided raids through monsoon clouds while other planes, 300 miles to the south, worked over the menacing concentration of No. Vietnamese regulars around Khe Sanh with napalm and explosives in bright sunlight.

No. Vietnam's official news agency declared in a broadcast dispatch the Americans bombed Hanoi suburbs and a residential sector within the Communist capital.

It said ground gunners shot down two planes.

There was no confirmation of these details from the U.S. Command in Saigon, whose news briefings usually are from 12-24 hours behind military developments.

Mass Execution

In Saigon, the official Vietnam Press carried a story of a national policeman who said he escaped death in a mass execution by the Viet Cong in Hue, but that 75 other persons were killed. The policeman said those slain were from among 300 persons—including some Americans—arrested by the Viet Cong.

The agency quoted the policeman as saying the remainder of the 300 prisoners "were taken northward by the Viet Cong and nothing was heard from them since."

UMie to Renounce U. S. Citizenship

A University of Massachusetts art student who, as a result of being judged guilty on three motor vehicle violations in Northampton District Court Tuesday, announced that he would renounce his American citizenship, appeared in court again Wednesday on two identical charges.

Judge Charles J. O'Connor, in court Tuesday, found 26 year old Anthony A. Carlen, of Palo Alto, California, guilty of operating an uninsured vehicle, operating without registration in his possession and operating without a license in his possession.

Carlen claimed he was subjected to "undue harrassment" because of his participation in "anti-draft and free university protests." Carlen acted in his own defense.

After his court appearance Tuesday, Carlen was again arrested for operating an uninsured and unregistered motor vehicle. He denied the charges in court Wednesday.

"From Associate to Bachelor . . ." Cites Opportunities for Transfers

The University of Massachusetts has released a seven-page booklet entitled, "From Associate to Bachelor . . . " outlining the opportunities and procedures for Massachusetts community college students to transfer to UMass.

According to Ernest W. Beals, UMass associate dean of admissions, the University enrolled 391 community college transfer students last fall. "By 1970 we expect to enroll approximately 660 of these students," he said, "and by 1975 approximately one thousand yearly."

The UMass Board of Trustees has established a firm policy of accepting any qualified student from the 12 Massachusetts regional community colleges. As long as students are enrolled in the community college liberal arts program, achieve a satisfactory record, and are recommended by community college personnel, he said, they will be accepted as juniors at the University. These students, Dean Beals pointed out, are given admission preference over other regular four-year college transfer applicants.

This policy has opened up new horizons for the high school student who is uncertain whether he wants to continue his education through four years of college. It also provides higher education opportunity for the high school student who may be financially or culturally deprived or who may need to make up pre-admission deficiencies before attempting to enroll in the University.

Dean Beals is currently undertaking an exhaustive study of the typical community college student before and after the student's arrival on the University campus.

"In cooperation with the community colleges we are researching the problems that the community college transfer student may encounter, his needs and his expectations," said Dean Beals, "so that their transition from a community college to the University may be smoother and easier." The results of his study will be released in June of this year.

National studies have shown that community college transfers do about as well as the students who have been on campus since their freshman year, Dean Beals said.

"The University is dedicated to providing a high-quality, low-cost education to all qualified students in the Commonwealth, and the two-year community colleges help meet this need," said Dean Beals. "We, therefore, have committed ourselves through Board of Trustee action to a policy of total cooperation with the community college system."

Copies of the booklet may be obtained by writing: Admissions Office, Whitmore Administration Building.

Dorm Counselors Chosen This Week

By SUSAN HOFFMAN
Staff Reporter

This week, throughout the campus, counselors are being chosen for next year. The task of choosing a counselor involves the interviewing of applicants by a board which sends its recommendations to the area coordinator. The area coordinator then makes his decision.

The interviewing board consists of an equal number of counselors and members of dorm government committees. Also included on this board are the head of residence and the graduate assistant for that dorm.

Five minutes before each interview, the applications are read and specific questions are composed to ask the prospective counselor.

The interview lasts fifteen minutes. After each interview, there are five minutes in which a group opinion is given. Each person on the board also gives his personal opinion.

The group recommendation sheet, individual recommendation, and application along with any personal recommendations from friends or people living on the applicant's floor are sent to the area coordinator. The area coordinator then decides who will make the best counselors.

Out of these decisions the head of residence requests the persons with whom he would like to work. The applicants also indicate where they would like to serve as counselors. These requests are matched up as closely as possible. If someone does not receive his choice, he can be put on a waiting list and can also apply for a position in one of the new dorms.

On September 29, 1939, Adolph Hitler ordered his armies into Poland, thus signaling the beginning of six years of terror, suffering and death for millions of innocent human beings. For several years the Frank family avoided capture by the Nazi mass-murderers. The highly emotional story of their frightening, day-to-day existence was recorded by their daughter, Anne.

The Newman Club now brings this award winning motion picture to UMass. Pres. Bob Kibit announced that the "Diary of Anne Frank" will be shown this evening at 6:15 and again at 8:30 in the Newman Center Social Hall. Admission is free for Newman Club Members and $.50 for Non-members.

"I wanted to work for a small company. It may sound crazy, but that's why I went with IBM."

"When I was in school, I dreaded the thought of working for some huge company where I'd be just another number," says IBM's Jim Hamilton. (Jim, who has a B.S. in Electrical Engineering, is a Systems Engineering Manager in Marketing.)

"At the same time, I knew there were definite advantages in working for a large firm. So as I interviewed each company, I checked into the degree of individuality I could expect there.

"One of the main reasons I picked IBM was their decentralization. They've got over 300 locations throughout the country. Which to me means a big company with a small-company atmosphere."

IBM's small team concept

"Actually, there's plenty of decentralization even within each location. For instance, in science and engineering, they use a small team concept. It means, no matter how large the project, you work individually or as part of a small team—about four or five people.

"In marketing, I was pretty much my own boss even before I became a manager. As a systems engineer, it's up to you to find the solution to a customer's problem, and then see it's carried out in the optimum way. You work with the customer every step of the way."

There's a lot more to the IBM story than Jim has mentioned. For more information, visit your campus placement office or send an outline of your interests and educational background to P. J. WHERE ARE WE GOING—during the winter months the crew team practices in the basement of Memorial Hall. Shown working on their strokes are Connors and Elliot under the watchful eye of Coach Dave Clarke.

Crew Team Trains Regularly On Tough Winter Schedule

Every Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoon at 4:30 p.m. a group of sweat suit clad men emerges from the basement of Memorial Hall and runs down the path to Tower I. They disappear inside the front door and after a quick trip up and down the 22 flights of stairs they reappear huffing and puffing through the side door and start the return trip to curry Hicks Cage.

Southwest residents who are confused by this tri-weekly ritual will be relieved to know that it is only the crew team practicing.

The Tower Run is part of the winter training program devised by Coach Dave Clarke to prepare his oarsmen for the upcoming spring racing schedule. This year's program is an improvement over that of past winters. Coach Clarke hopes it will produce a winning season.

A typical winter workout consists of an hour of intensive weight training done in the basement of Memorial Hall. Oarsmen go through nine exercises designed to develop endurance as well as leg strength. Most people visualize crew as a sport requiring strong arms and back.

However, leg drive is the key to an oarsman's success, and Coach Clarke has installed two leg lift machines, each of which holds between 340 and 680 pounds of weights. To most crewmen, the leg lifts are the most important exercise. An occasional fifteen-minute workout on the rowing tank adds variety to the indoor sessions and helps oarsmen work on style.

After the weight lifting, the oarsmen further improve their endurance by running up the twenty-two flights of stairs in Tower 1. This run is a recent addition to Clarke's winter program, and weary oarsmen can attest to its effectiveness.

At present, they run up and down just once, but as the season approaches, they may be required to scale the tower twice. For the non-mathematician, that's fourty-four stories. When crew coaches talk of an oarsman's dedication, they really mean it for crew ranks as one of the most demanding sports.

Weekend Slaloms to Determine Conference Ski Championships

For the Redman skiers the eleventh hour draws near as the Conference Championship, currently within their grasp, will be determined by the next three races. Two of the races, a slalom Saturday and a giant slalom Sunday, are scheduled for this weekend. By Sunday night, either UMass or Amherst College should emerge the conference leader.

Both races are scheduled for Wildcat Mountain in Pinkham, N. H. across the road from famed Tukerman's Ravine.

The University's prospects are brightened somewhat by the return of senior Ned Kelley, who has been sidelined for three weeks. Kelley injured his ankle practicing slalom at Thunder Mt. prior to the races at Big Bromley March 10 and 11. He had a light workout yesterday and is reported to be in good condition.

In an all out effort to win, the Amherst College team will be competing on recently purchased Rosignol strato skis. This is the same brand used by most of the Olympic skiers as well as several of the UMass team members. The switch to Rosignols is an apparent attempt to improve their competitive position.

If such an advantage does exist, the remaining races for the championship should be even more interesting.

Girls' Gymnastics Team to Host Eastern Regional Gym Meet

Twelve schools will be represented at the Eastern Regional Gymnastics meet to be hosted by the UMass girls gymnastics team. The events will start at 10:30 a.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym tomorrow.

Schools competing in this year's events include Cortland College, Hunter College, Ithaca College, Green Mountain Junior College, Springfield College, Southern Connecticut State College, East Stroudsburg College, Brockport College, Towsen State College, West Chester State College and Montclair State College.

The meet has been divided into three categories: novice, intermediate and national. Four events will be run simultaneously. Last Saturday the girls travelled to Ithaca, New York, for a tri-meet with Ithaca College and Penn State. The girls placed second of the three teams and swept three first places. The final scores were Penn State, 87.15, UMass, 83.92 and Ithaca College, 61.33.

The team has been hurt by the loss of four members due to academics, according to Coach Kitty Kjeldsen, and some of their depth is missing.

Marge Sims still remains unbeaten in the floor exercises. She placed first in that event last Saturday. Sue Clancy took first place on the uneven bars, and Marge Sims tied for second in the same event.

The third first place was a show-stealing tie between Marge Sims and Sue Clancy for first place in vaulting. Leslie Pauly took second for UMass in the same event.

RENO, Nev. (AP)—Defending World Series champion St. Louis is a 2-1 favorite to win the 1968 National League baseball crown, bookmakers said Thursday.

Minnesota and Detroit are 5-2 picks to take the American League crown. Defending champion Boston is listed at 6-1.

Although the UMass basketball team plays its season's finale tomorrow night at the Cage against Boston University, the Redmen will have one eye 50 miles to the south where Rhode Island plays Connecticut at Storrs.

Their last game for the Redmen

Rhody leads the Yankee Conference by a half-game over UMass, and if the Rams beat UConn tomorrow night they will clinch the title. But if the Huskies pull an upset, UMass and Rhode Island will wind up in a tie for the Beanpot.

But there is little the Redmen can do about that game besides wait for the final score. So their first interest tomorrow night will be attuned to the 8 p.m. game at the Cage against B.U., in which four UMass seniors, including forward Billy Tindall, will be playing their final game in Redmen uniforms.

The Terriers haven't been the same since UMass coach Jack Leaman left Commonwealth Ave. in 1959. Last year, Charlie Luce's squad was practically run into the Charles River, winding up 4-18.

There has been some improvement this year with the addition of a couple of good sophomores, but B.U. still owns a 10-12 record going into last night's game with Rhode Island.

The Terriers can almost be summed up in two words—Jim Hayes. He is a 6'4 sophomore who plays guard, forward and center for B.U. Hayes, who broke the B.U. frosh scoring record last year with a 26.2 average, is averaging about 24 points this year.

Hayes can do anything and play anywhere on the court. He is a good shooter with excellent moves, especially around the basket. Although only 6'4, he is capable of playing center since he is a fine leaper and a good rebounder, Hayes definetly makes the team go.

Another star for the Terriers is 6'1 forward Richie Lee, a senior. Lee led the team in scoring last year, and though he is not doing as well this year, He is still a good all-around basketball player.

Lee is a fairly good shooter who has good moves, particularly on the baseline. A good leaper, Lee can outrebound a lot of bigger opponents.

Luce will alternate the rest of the spots on the team. One of them will be 5'10 guard Skip Mortimer, who directs the B.U. offense. Mortimer, a veteran of the Air Force, is a good ballhandler who occasionally shoots well.

Another Terrier likely to see a lot of action is 6'0 junior Fred Washington, who is probably the fastest man on the team. Washington plays mostly in the backcourt, but his jumping ability makes him capable of playing up front. He is a good ballhandler with a fair shot.

A sophomore who has been playing quite a bit in the backcourt lately is Steve Gladstone, a 5'10 sophomore. He has quick hands and figures strongly in B.U.'s constantly-pressing defense.

The Terriers, who lack size, will also use 6'5 senior Randy Robinson and 6'4 junior Al Gallagher up front when the going gets tough. Both are good rebounders and Gallagher owns a pretty good shot from the corner.

B.U.'s offense obviously revolves around Hayes, upon whose shooting the Terriers depend because of their lack of height. They will run when possible and they will use the full-court press extensively.

Tomorrow will be the last game for UMass seniors Billy Tindall, Gary Gasperack, Jim Girotti and Rick Perkins. During the past two years, these seniors have contributed to a 15-5 record in the Yankee Conference, the best two-year Conference mark in the history of the school.

This will be UMass fans' last look at Tindall, who is now number two on the all-time Redmen scoring list behind Clarence Hill.

Broaca Out with Mumps As Frosh Take On BU

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

UMass coaches take their losses hard. Take for example freshman basketball coach Peter Broaca. Wednesday night following the Little Redmen's defeat at the hands of Amherst College, Broaca came down with the mumps. His presence at Saturday's finale against Boston University at the Cage is doubtful.

The frosh, who in Broaca's absence will be coached by graduate assistant Jack Apgar, are 11-7 following the Amherst loss. A win Saturday would give the Little Redmen the most wins for a UMass freshman basketball team ever

Not much information about the Terrier frosh has traveled out west here. The recently established recruiting program at B.U. however, indicates that the freshman team has talent. Head coach Charlie Luce has in his short tenure at the Boston school picked up some good finds, especially from the Eastern Mass. area.

This year's UMass freshman team has, unlike frosh teams of the past, stayed relatively intact. Exams did not decimate the squad, as was the case last year. The big loss to the Little Redmen has, of course, been the lengthy absence of big Lou Griffith, who was everaging in the double figures 'until pulling ligaments in his elbow.

Ken Mathias, an outstanding performer all year has tried to pick up the void left by Griffith. He has played well whatever the opposition, aside from scattered instances of foul trouble, and should be in strong contention for a varsity berth next year.

Tom Nally has also come around to be a surprise during the absence of Griffith, and along with Frank Schaffeld have given Mathias help up front. Schaffeld has displayed an accurate shot from around the key and is at times a fine rebounder.

An experiment with Jim Ryan at guard, to gain height against a big Holy Cross team, may have given next year's varsity another star-shooting guard, Ryan is a fine outside jumper and has improved in ballhandling. Bill Greeley has also shown varsity potential at guard but will be hampered by his lack of height. While Bob Dempsey, hampered by injuries and inconsistencies, has shown flashes of outstanding play.

The freshman team has been soundly beaten in only one game, against Springfield and have played some of the best freshman teams around, such as Boston College, Holy Cross, Providence, Yale, and Rockwood Academy. The Little Redmen have proven the equal of the best.

Puckmen Hope to Salvage Season Against UNH

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

One game usually doesn't make a season but for the UMass hockey team a victory over New Hampshire tonight will go a long way in salvaging what so far has been a fair season.

The Redmen will take on the Wildcats at Orr rink tonight at 7.30. The game will conclude the season's action for the Redmen skaters.

UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff said that New Hampshire will be the toughest opponent that the Redmen will face this year.

The Wildcat's record is a good indication of their strength. They are 7-6 in Division I play, with victories over perennial New England powerhouses Boston College and Boston University to their credit.

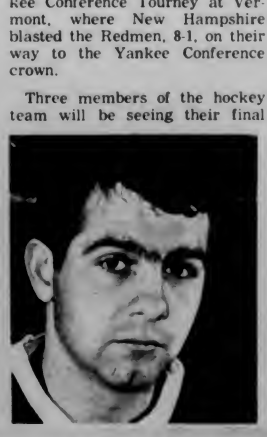
Also, the Wildcats are undefeated in action against Division II opponents, defeating Colby twice and beaten by Bowdoin, 9-4.

The Wildcats will move into tonight's action fresh off a 7-5 decision over Dartmouth on Wednesday.

New Hampshire owns nine straight wins over UMass dating back to Feb. 23, 1963. In the series, the Redmen trail 28 - 1.

The two teams have met once before this season, at the Yankee Conference Tourney at Vermont, where New Hampshire blasted the Redmen, 8-1, on their way to the Yankee Conference crown.

Three members of the hockey team will be seeing their final action in Redmen uniform. Team captain Frank Buckler has led the squad in assists with 16 and is third on the point list with 19.



Don Robinson is second on the team in goals with 10 and in points with 20. Although a member of the class of 1969, Robinson is in his last year of hockey eligibility.

Dave Goldberg rounds out the list of seniors on the team. He is a defenseman whose best quality is bringing the puck out of his own defensive zone on offensive rushes.

Goldberg is a doubtful starter for tonight's game due to an ankle injury suffered in practice Wednesday as he stopped a puck with his leg.

UMass Holds Urban Affairs Symposium

Representative Conyers Speaks On "The Crisis in the Ghetto"

By PEGGY DONOHUE and ELLA MOSCARITOLO
Staff Reporter

Last night the Distinguished Visitor's Program presented the Honorable John Conyers, Jr., Congressman from Detroit, in the Ballroom of the Student Union, speaking on "The Crisis in the Ghetto." The speech was in accordance with the current symposium entitled "The American City: 1968 and Tomorrow."

Conyer's speech began by describing the five moods present in the modern black community. He described these moods as underclass, separatists, moderates, militants, and revolutionaries. Conyers, while labeling himself a moderate, has feelings of support for all the above mentioned groups.

Citing the difference between militants and revolutionaries, Conyers said the militants do not necessarily advocate violence, while the revolutionaries feel that this nation was conceived in violence and it follows logically that full emanicapation can follow no different course. He stated that one of his reasons for being here is to develop a rebuttal to this concept.

In describing his concept of Black Power, Conyers refuted those who conjured up images of violence instead of thinking in terms of Black Power as "a newly found badge of pride," a desire to appreciate that which is black in culture and heritage.

Conyers criticized what he referred to as the "Civil Rights Game." Every year vital bills to Civil Rights are enacted, only to find that they lack the needed enforcement regulations. He believes the solution to the problem of racism will begin only when more of us demand of our elected officials that which they ought to be doing.

He sees racism as the focal point of all restlessness creating explosion in the ghettos. Conyers focused attention on the police whom he considers the spark who ignited the confusion and trouble in so many cities this past summer.

Following the lecture a question and answer period took place. The Congressman was asked if the war deterred from the solution to the Negro problem. In answer he said that if we could transfer the preoccupation of the war to a preoccupation of racism we would pave the way for social and political changes which are needed so badly.

The congressman stated that while mayors are asking for high velocity rifles, and massive build-ups of gas, little is going on in terms of preventing the riots. There is a large record of unemployment among the Negroes, the living conditions in the ghettos are wretched, medical attention is pathetic, and education provisions are inferior. All these are factors which create explosion in the ghetto.

Congressman Conyers, on his way to becoming the new "Black spokesman" in Congress, sees the future of the Negro strongly allied with urban reform and development.

Four Panelists to Discuss Freedom in American City

The Urban Affairs Symposium being sponsored throughout the month of March by the Distinguished Visitors Program broaches the problem of "Human Freedom in the American City" tomorrow at 8 p.m. in SBA 120. Four personnages will speak from their perspective of the relatively calm Hub City about a controversial issue that has rocked major cities across the nation.

The first panelist, Ivan Ashley, centers his career around the possible remedies for underprivileged youth in Boston. State anti-Poverty Coordinator for the Commonwealth Service Corps as well as its Regional Director for Greater Boston, he channels finances for community development. His earlier experience has been at the level of direct counselling of emotionally disturbed children, ages 12 to 19, and teaching elementary school. He has also devoted summers to the Action for Boston Community Development program prior to his appointment to the Service Corps.

A second panelist is Louise Day Hicks. As of this time, the Committee was awaiting word from Mrs. Hicks whether she would be able to participate or not. Mrs. Hicks is a Boston attorney recently emerged from controversial city politics. Elected Boston School Committeewoman in 1961, 1963 and 1965, she opposed bussing of children out of local school districts as an alternative to the racial imbalance problem within schools. In spite of her negative stance on a generally accepted policy nationally, Louise Day Hicks offered herself as a very strong contender in the Boston Mayoralty contest of 1967.

Monsignor Francis J. Lally represents a third facet of the urban community, its cultural affairs. Currently, he is Editor of The Pilot, a Boston, Catholic arch-diocesan newspaper. The Monsignor is credited with an exhaustive list of former positions ranging from Director, Boston Center of Adult Education and member of the Board of Directors, the Boston Arts Center to Director, Urban League of Greater Boston and author of The Catholic Church in Changing America. He has received degrees from St. John's Seminary, Laval University, Stonehill College, Marquette University and Manhattan College and has been made fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

A fourth panelist with a fourth viewpoint to offer is James Q. Wilson, a Professor of Government at Harvard University and a well-published social scientist. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1959, and taught there for two years before moving to Harvard. Professor Wilson served as Director, Joint Center for Urban Studies of M.I.T. and Harvard from 1963 to 1966. Based on his own research, he has published three books: Negro Politics, The Amateur Democrat, and City Politics coauthored by Edward C. Banfield. In addition, he has edited several other publications on urban policy and politics. The professor is a former member of the Science Advisory Committee of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice.

Professor William Harvard, head of the Department of Government at UMass, will moderate the panel discussion.

Smith College Coeds to Fast In Protest of Vietnam War

By JAN CURLEY
News Day Editor

A broad-based, self-appointed committee of 15 girls at Smith College have organized a three day fast to protest concern over Johnson's handling of the war in Vietnam. The fast will start at 6 a.m. today and end at 6 p.m. Wednesday night.

The committee is headed by Margaret Stein and Kathryn Greene both seniors. So far 800 girls, one third of the student body, have made an initial pledge to participate in the fast.

According to Kathryn Greene, "We are fasting to inform the public and administration to show that not all student opposition to the war stems from those threatened by the draft. As women, not threatened, we have a special obligation to speak out. Our only demands are a hope for a speedy negotiation that would give fairness to all sides."

Those participating in the protest will be wearing arm bands on their coats and dresses or sweaters. Green armbands are for those who are fasting and white for those who are unable to fast for reasons of health. The committee has asked the faculty to wear white arm bands.

The girls will go to classes and meals as usual. Miss Greene stated that at the meals the girls would drink water or juice.

In one house, Miss Greene estimated that 90 per cent of the girls would be fasting.

Arm bands will be given out at Seelye Hall and Right Connector Hall. A rally will be held at 1 p.m. Miss Greene stated that at the rally students and faculty members will be speaking. There will also be TV cameras and a band.

UMass to Hold Presidential Primary Tuesday

Beating New Hampshire by a week, the UMass Student Union will be the scene of 1968's "First in the Nation" Presidential Primary tomorrow from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Results of the polling will be sent to Boston, Springfield, and Washington newspapers and to the candidates listed on the ballot, including "significant" write-ins.

The balloting is being conducted by the New Guard, the organization which held the Victory in Vietnam rally February 6.

Candidates listed on the ballot sheet, based on the New Hampshire race, are: Republican, Richard M. Nixon and Harold Stassen; Democrat, Lyndon B. Johnson and Senator Eugene McCarthy. There is also a space for write-ins and students will be able to vote in both primaries.

Thursday there will be a run-off election between the primary victors of each party. Both ballot sheets will have optional national and campus referenda questions.

Identification cards will be checked for both students and faculty to vote.

'Newsweek' Survey Shows Delegates Favoring Nixon

NEW YORK (AP)—With Mich. Gov. George Romney out of the race, Newsweek magazine reported Sunday that its delegate survey showed Richard M. Nixon with 621 delegate votes leading toward his candidacy. This was 46 short of the 667 votes needed for nomination.

The magazine's survey had 434 delegate votes leaning toward Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York and 191 toward Gov. Ronald Reagan of California. It listed 80 delegate votes as undecided.

The results were garnered from polling of state party leaders, the magazine said.

Nixon's strength represented a gain of 60 prospective delegates since Newsweek's first such count nine weeks ago.

In another poll, taken by Louis Harris for Newsweek just prior to the Romney pullout, Nixon had 64% of New Hampshire's voters for the Mar. 12 Republican primary to 19% for Rockefeller, 9% for Romney and the rest scattered.

Redmen Tie for First In Yankee Conference

Saturday night the Redmen finished the basketball season with a tie for first place. While all eyes were turned to the play of Billy Tindall, all ears were tuned to the UConn-URI game in Storrs, Conn. The defeat of the Rams by the UConn Huskies put the Redmen in a tie for first place with Rhode Island. The Redmen have not been in first place in the Yankee Conference since the 1961-1962 season. But the statistics tell the story.

'Nonsuch' Musical Variety Show Benefits Upward Bound Program

By DON LEBLANC
Staff Reporter

One of the best presentations of all-UMass talent was seen Saturday night as the Central Area Coordinating Committee sponsored Nonsuch, a musical variety benefit for the Upward Bound Program. With cooperation from Angel Flight and the Southwest Patriots, the show was directed by John Messenger with Pete Ward as master of ceremonies.

Ward not only emceed but performed throughout the show. Accompanied by his "dysentery guitar", he used his versatile, Dylanesque voice in some of his talking-blues songs. Ward's wit is the humorous, biting type of Tom Lehrer.

His opening was followed by a new group from the Central Area, the Whynots, the name rising from the fact the group is composed of four girls. With music equally as "tough" as their looks, the attractive group rocked old standards such as "The House of the Rising Sun", "Louie, Louie" and "Light My Fire". Appearing for a second time, they ended the show as the audience danced. It was hoped by many males that they would appear again at UMass dances.

A folk singing duo, the Jeffersons, sang traditional and original songs with a professional finish that was one voice short of the Kingston Trio. They did beautiful versions of Time and Changes in their second appearance. They were followed by a "change of pace", magician Mike Roberts, who deftly pulled rabbits from hats and the shirt off a boy in the audience.

The most "earthy" performance of the evening was that of the Petroleum Jelly Jug Band, a happy group that sounds like they are definitely from the hills of somewhere. Their movin'-groovin', rompin'-stompin' music almost makes you want to get up on stage and sing along. They performed recognizable numbers, and even a religious number, all of which made them one of the most enjoyable groups of the evening. Performing in the local area, they are a must on the "once experienced list".

Charlie Rancke accompanied Linda Brown as she sang "Both Sides Now", "Sunny Goodge Street", and "That's No Way to Say Goodbye", all made popular by Judy Collins. She did these and other songs in a wonderfully pure voice that could be good professional entertainment.

The collection of entertainers was well enjoyed by the audience. Some felt that it was better entertainment for the price (50 cents) than Winter Carnival. Another opinion was that the night club format was very good when combined with the dancing at the end, and the wish was expressed to see this type of entertainment again. Pete Ward stated that he was glad that UMass Talent was used, and that it was all of good quality. As a variety show, Nonsuch had something for everyone, and it was all quite good.

Voters Approve Federal Ownership Of Plymouth Rock

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP)—By a 2-1 margin the voters of this historic town have approved federal ownership of Plymouth Rock.

The vote Saturday was 2,174 for federal acquisition and 1,081 against.

Voters also were asked to approve one of three plans in which plots of four, nine and 14 acres surrounding the Rock would become a federal park.

The first plan, calling for the smallest acreage, was approved by the narrow margin of 32 votes, 1,069-1,037 over the plan calling for 14 acres. The third plan for 9 acres got only 118 votes.

The state currently owns the 4 acres immediately surrounding the fabled Rock on which the Pilgrims first set foot in 1620.

Faculty War and Peace Group Presents Three-Day Film Series

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

The Faculty Group on War and Peace presented a three day film series on Vietnam called, "Cinema of Conscience," from February 28 through March 1. The Faculty Group stated that it sponsored these programs in the belief "that it is inadmissable that any person on campus can claim indifference or blind obedience to authority as valid options on this 20-year war."

Two different programs were shown, each lasting for two and a half hours. The first program included the films, Munro, Toys, Sons and Daughters, and The Survivors. This program was presented Wednesday, February 28 at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium and Friday, March 1, at 8:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 20.

Munro, a Paramount release, was a cartoon spoof of the draft. A four-year-old boy named Munro was drafted by an incompetent Army bureaucracy. It could not be classified as a documentary, for the plot lacked plausibility.

Toys, a fantasy distributed by the National Film Board of Canada, took place in a toy shop with a group of children. The toys, soldiers and weaponry, became animated in battle, with the camera focusing on the children's reaction to dying toy soldiers and a deathly dive-bombing airplane. Well produced, it did not particularily pertain to Vietnam, but rather to war in general.

A 90 minute film, Sons and Daughters, was filmed in San Francisco during the protest marches of October 15 and 16, 1965. Before labeling the film a documentary, one should define the term. A documentary is a presentation of evidence used to substantiate a position and persuade the audience to accept your line of reasoning. Uufortunately, although some good points such as, "do we live under an invisible government," and "is not silence, death," were brought up, the main body of the film appealed to one's emotions rather than one's reason.

In this vein of thought, one would have to label this an incohesive and unsubstantiated documentary on the grounds that speakers were not identified, and newscasts and Vietnam film footage interwoven throughout the production were not given accreditation. Too many irrelevant issues such as the Hell's Angels and racial prejudice were included.

The first program ended with the Survivors, a film produced by the Committee of Responsibility. Dr. Henry Mager was a narrator of his trip to Vietnam along with two other doctors, to choose four war victims for 'intensive care in the United States'. Of all the films, this one was the most moving and best documented.

The second program included Munro, The Survivors, the Magicians, Vietnam Oil Slick, and Vietnam: Journal of a War.

The Magician, was a fanciful film, in which four-year-old boys represented how a war robs a nation's youth.

Vietnam Oil Slick focused on Lawrence E Labyrinth, an optimistic government worker, and a comical narrator. Two questions should be asked. First, was Labyrinth speaking as a representative of our government or as an individual? Second, has not a piggery a different value for poor Vietnamese than an affluent American?

Questions should also be asked concerning the film, Vietnam: Journal of a War. These soldiers interviewed in regard to their feelings about the war, commented that war is hell. But looking back in history, what war wasn't hell? The events depicted in the film were substantiated but one must remember that the film is over a year old, since it was produced by the British Broadcasting Company in May, 1966.

Several members of the audience were interviewed, and commented that, "I was against the war when I came here, I still am."

Considering that, a Group spokesman stated that, "We had hoped for an appraisal of the future course of action that our country should undertake in Vietnam," the Cinema of Conscience with an atendance of 400, as estimated by a Group spokesman, may have only been a reinforcement rather than a repraisal for the assembled audience.

Communications Symposium

FRED FRIENDLY

Dr. Fred Friendly Speaks On Changes in Communications

By SUSAN HAMILTON
Staff Reporter

The need of the American people "to know" demands a change in our communication system, Fred W. Friendly said at the opening of this weekend's Communications Symposium. "What the American people don't know and understand can kill us," he said.

Dr. Friendly predicted changes in the means and content of future communication. Decisions to establish a new system in the future must be made now. Using our technology and knowledge, Friendly said, we should create a modern communications system for tomorrow. He said that a change in journalism is also necessary.

Former president of CBS News, Dr. Friendly is now the director of broadcast journalism at Columbia Graduate School of Journalism. He spoke at Mahar Auditorium last Friday night before an audience of 300.

Dr. Friendly explained that satellites orbiting with the earth have made possible a system of telecommunications. Telecommunications, he said, will be as different from T.V. as T.V. is from radio. Satellites will act as "turnpikes in the sky", connecting communication centers around the world. The day is coming when there will be a broadcast center in every home. Connected by satellites, electronic shopping centers will deliver newspapers, magazines and music to the home centers.

The satellite program has been an investment of the American people, Friendly said, and the people should reap the benefits. He suggested that the dividends of the program be used to finance public television, providing the people with educational and cultural programs.

The classroom and the newsroom are growing closer together, Friendly said. The journalist of the future will have to be an expert trained in the area he is reporting. The newspaper should interpret the news and increase the public understanding. Journalists, he said, should be taught to reason.

Asked to comment on the coverage of the war in Vietnam, Friendly said it was "the best reported war in history." For the first time, the American people have seen up close to the dreadful and ugly things only soldiers had seen before. T.V. has put the war in the living room, and the impact has upset the people. "War is an unsightly thing no one at home can bear to watch," he said.

To discontinue complete coverage, he said, would be to deny the American people the "right to know" what is happening. T.V. coverage has had a profound effect on Civil Rights, he also said.

Television, Friendly said, has failed to satisfy the people. T.V. has created an appetite for violence and situation comedy. A great proportion of the public have abandoned T.V. Popularity polls, he said, and they serve little purpose other than "measuring space-age tolerance."

Feature Writing

MILTON BASS

By JOHN M. CAHILL
Staff Reporter

The art of feature writing was discussed by the Entertainment Editor of the Berkshire Eagle, Milton Bass, in a seminar conducted in the Nantucket Room of the Student Union.

"The feature can be a devastatin gweapon if used incorrectly," Bass stated. "When placed in the hands of an untrained or unethical reporter, the feature, which invites interpretation and emotional appeal, is the most easily slanted of all news stories."

Because of this quality, the feature edmands a special type of reporter. The feature writer, he said, must be well-trained, professional in outlook, and impervious to the freedom offered by the feature. "Factual reporting is the cardinal rule in any form of news writing," Bass emphasized.

Consistency, especially in regularly-appearing columns, is another necessary ingredient of good feature writing, he said. "In my movie reviews, for example, I have to be consistent or I'll alienate my readers."

Turning to the Daily Collegian, Bass praised it as an "excellent newspaper." Some suggestions for improvement offered by Bass, were "less reliance on AP wire news and some experimentation with the layout of the paper."

Bass was assisted by his wife, Ruth, who fielded those questions dealing with women's and society features.

Racism Must End

The report of the President's Commission on Civil Disorders holds many lessons for American society. In a very thorough eight month study, the distinguished members of the commission have presented the country with the reasons for the urban disorders of the past summer and the steps that must be taken to preclude the further outbreak of such acts of mass frustration. With one exception the programs will be overwhelmingly expensive.

The one overriding cause, something that everyone can take a part in alleviating and that will cost no money, is the problem of discrimination. Until very recently the problem of white racism was thought to be confined exclusively to the South. This would have still been the case if urban disorder had not hit the white community solidly in the face.

We have learned since the time of the riots that the tactics of the various Southern "Public Safety Directors" have been to a limited degree the modus operandi of northern policeman. The utter necessity of open housing legislation and the stiff fight that such legislation has faced at the state and Federal level is another example of racist feeling in America. An even more alarming spectacle is the recent outbreak of protection groups in various cities across the nation. Groups of "citizens" have bought guns, stocked food and assembled contingency plans coupled with constant haranguing by their leaders as to the need for self-protection.

Action, rather than reaction, is the important need now. We must all re-think our attitudes toward the Negro. Instead of telling him that he can work his way out of the ghetto by education only to face a blank wall of prejudice, we must make him a part of society. All of the barriers must come down lest we face many more long hot summers. It will be as a result of individual rather than collective action that the anomie of racism will be eliminated and the benefits of American society will be open to all of her citizens.

"You see one campus, you've seen 'em all . . .!"

A Long Overdue Need

Attorney General Eliot Richardson has recently recommended establishing a residential treatment center to help cope with the rising drug problem. Rather than jail an addict, the hope now is " . . . to reach this young person to determine why this has happened." Finally, the problem itself and not the symptons or consequences of the problem will be dealt with. The proposal has been long overdue; authorities have realized that drug addiction is a medical problem, not a criminal one.

While many regard this as merely a necessary measure in the battle against narcotics, on a broader scale, it is another step in the Massachusetts war against crime. Whether people are willing to admit it or not, crime in the Bay State, as throughout the country, is organized by the Syndicate, from the weekend football cards, to casinos in Las Vegas. One of the more profitable practices of this annual multi-billion dollar operation is narcotics. It only stands to reason that the fewer the addicts, the less profit will the Mafia realize.

During any withdrawal treatment at the center, it is feasible that drugs will be given addicts without charge. This, again, will decrease crime. Much petty theft (purse snatching, etc.) is merely a method of financially supporting an addiction; the amount and price of drugs drastically increases with continued use. Prostitution is another method women use to raise money for their addiction; for many, the only reason they are prostitutes is to finance this need. With no need, the pressure to earn enough for their addiction would be eliminated, and the whore houses operated by the syndicate would suffer.

This is not to suggest that elimination of drug addicts would end crime and the Syndicate, for this is but one facet of the organization. Neither will anyone be naive enough to believe that establishing a treatment center would eliminate drug addicts. On the contrary, if rigid controls are not placed within these centers, addicts may use the facilities simply to obtain free dope. Also, addicts, who are essentially withdrawn and shy, may be reluctant to go to a bureaucratized center, so much like government that it makes them feel extremely uncomfortable. The center will have many problems and flaws, but it is a long overdue and vital step in the right direction.

Sam Spark Speaks Out

I'd Rather Go To Jail

Many of today's male college students who are vehemently opposed to the war in Vietnam have the choice upon graduation of compromising their principles and serving, fleeing the country, becoming a C.O., applying to divinity school—or going to jail. If one is inclined to choose the latter, he might find the intellectual stimulation of his fellow draft resisters to be superior to that of the college environment.

Assuming this trend of going to jail, rather than serving in the armed forces, continues, the penal institutions of the future may be dramatically changed from today's jails. Imagine a conversation between a criminal and a warden of the future.

WARDEN: It says on your record, Mr. Smith that you spent two years at the Pennsylvania Pen. Why have you applied to Illinois State?

CRIMINAL: To tell you the truth, Warden, I felt I was stagnating at Pennsylvania. They have a fine English staff at Penn., but my field is philosophy and since Dr. Jones has only one year left here before he's eligible for parole, I thought I'd never forgive myself if I didn't take advantage of the opportunity.

WARDEN: It's true that our jail has one of the top philosophy departments in the country, but you realize, of course, we have our quota on the number of out-of-state applicants we can accept.

CRIMINAL: I realize that, Sir, but I want to go to Illinois State jail more than anything else in the world. A year in Illinois State is worth an extra $2,000 a year when I get a job on the outside.

WARDEN: I'm terribly sorry. But the sad fact is that applications are increasing far faster than we can build cells. Five years ago, you could have breezed into this jail, but I'm afraid we have just too many better qualified applicants.

CRIMINAL: You don't mean . . .

WARDEN: Yes, I'm giving you your unconditional release. You're a free man now.

Smith reluctantly nodded, slowly arose, and prepared himself to leave his academic environment, hoping his two years at Penn. Pen had adequately prepared him to take his place in society.

To the editor:

Long, too long America,
Traveling roads all even and peaceful you learn'd from joys and prosperity only,
But now, ah now, to learn from crises of anguish, advancing, grappling with direst fate and recoiling not,
And now to conceive and show to the world what your children enmasse really are,
(For who except myself has yet conceive'd what your children enmasse really are?)

SWORDS CLASH—Henry V, a University Theatre production, will be presented this week. Shown rehearsing a scene are (left to right) Michael Seligman, Tom Babson and William Maker.

'Henry V' to Be Presented By University Theatre

"God for Harry, England and Saint George!" is the battle cry. Harfleur, then Piccardy, then Agincourt is the setting. Swords clash, knives flare, the longbows spring arrows against the ill-starred enemy; and Harry, King of England spurs his war-worn "band of brothers" to glorious and incredible victory over vastly superior numbers of French!

This is the action of Henry V, which opens in Bowker Wednesday, March 6, at 8:30 p.m. Evening performances will continue through Saturday, March 9, and a Saturday matinee will be held at 2:30, primarily for high school students. Tickets are on sale daily at the Bowker Auditorium box office (545-2149), which is open from 9 a.m. until curtain time on days of performance.

University Theatre production stars Philip Fisher as Henry, Peter A. Stelzer as Chorus, graduate student Charles Angell as the Archbishop of Canterbury, graduate student Richard Tirrell as the King of France, John Bulson as the French Dauphin, and Marjorie Anne Short as the Princess Katherine.

Philip Fisher, a senior, is remembered by University Theatre audiences for his performance as Eddie Carbone in View From the Bridge. He is a graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York and has worked professionally at the Alley Theatre in Houston, Texas.

Senior Peter Stelzer played the lead role in University Theatre's recent production Enrico IV. He has also played title roles in Rosmersholm and Lilliom, as well as Iago in Othello, Rudolpho in View From the Bridge, and Algernon in The Importance of Being Earnest.

Henry V, the third major University Theatre production of the season, is directed by Harry Mahnken. The fourth major production of the season, The Madwoman of Chaillot, will be produced April 24-27 under the direction of Jim Young.

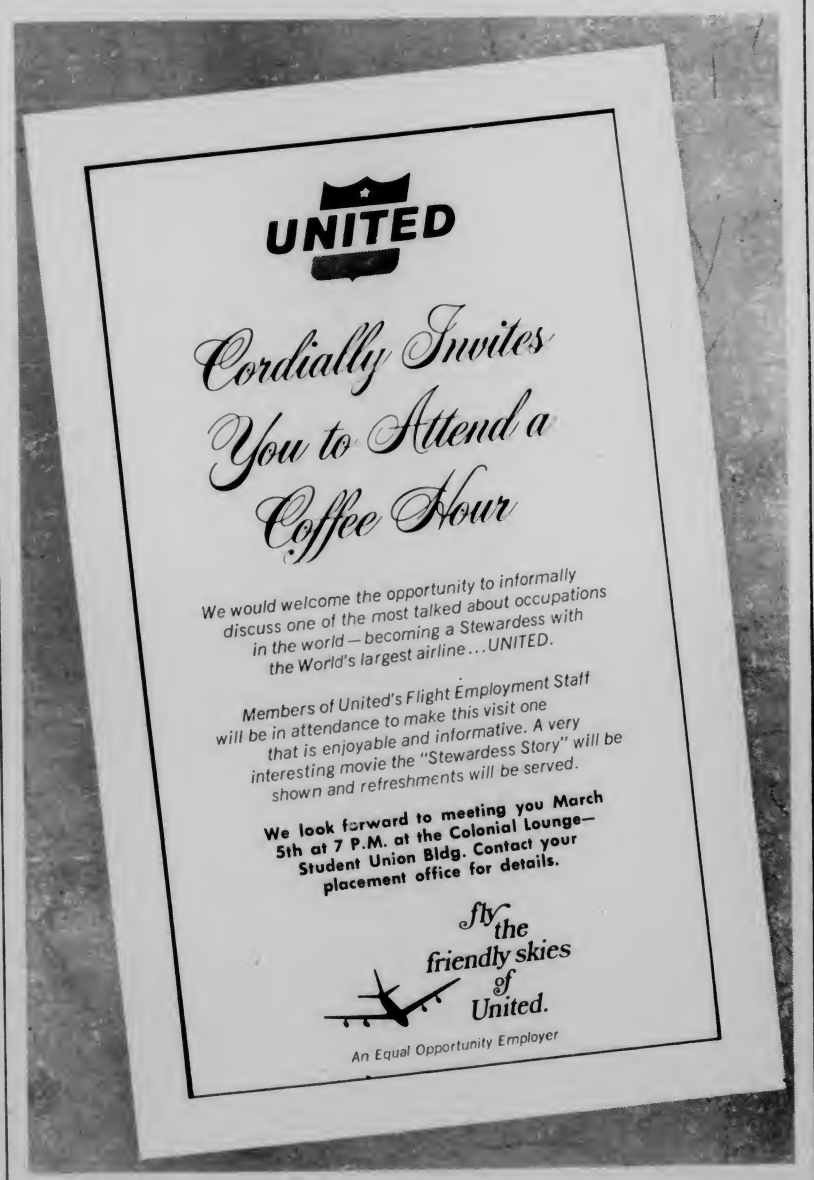
Six Mayors Endorse Commission's Findings on Racial Violence

WASHINGTON (AP)—Mayors of six American cities that have been torn by racial violence endorsed Sunday a presidential commission's finding that white racism was the cause and a costly national effort should be the cure.

But they indicated most of the financial muscle must come from the federal and state governments.

The mayors agreed that the urban crisis, as outlined Saturday by the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, must be given the highest priority. But there was general agreement also that the campaign could be waged without a reduction of the Vietnam war effort if the people will it.



The mayors are Jerome P. Cavanagh of Detroit, Hugh Addonize of Newark, Carl B. Stokes of Cleveland, Ivan Allen Jr. of Atlanta, Henry W. Maier of Milwaukee, and Samuel W. Yorty of Los Angeles.

"Unless the federal government and state government step in and help our community, I doubt very much whether there is much of a future for the city of Newark," Addonizie said, recounting a host of financial problems he said are plaguing the city.

Stokes said while he believes the United States "has the resources to support a guns-and-butter economy," if he had to choose between the Vietnam war and the crisis in the cities, I'd have to put my priorities at home. You have to take care of home first."

Birthrates Fall, Population Peril Is Overrated

WASHINGTON (AP)—The "population explosion" is proving to be an overrated peril, and birthrates are declining in the U.S. and around the world, a specialist on birthrate trends said Sun.

Dr. Donald J. Bogue, head of the Univ. of Chicago's Community and Family Cen., predicted the population of the U.S. may level off at around 220 million.

And he said there are signs that the birthrate is dropping in So. Korea, India, Pakistan, mainland China and some Latin American countries.

There is evidence, Bogue said, of almost a world wide trend toward smaller families. He said improved methods of contraception are making it possible for millions of people to prevent unwanted births.

As a result, he continued, the prospects of solving the so-called population explosion are better now than "we ever dared hope for five years ago." Bogue said he could see no reason why the world's population crisis cannot be brought under control by the year 2000.

Last week, the National Center for Health Statistics reported the birthrate in the U.S in 1967 reached its lowest level in recorded history.

Bogue made his observations in an interview published by U. S. News & World Report magazine.

Sophomores to Discuss Cook Committee Report

Tomorrow, March 5th, the Sophomore Forum will have as its special guest Dean John Maki, Vice Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Dean Maki has expressed interest in hearing student comments on the recently-issued "Cook" Committee proposals for revising the College curriculum. He also hopes members of the Class of 1970 will speak to the questions: "Now that you're Sophomores, what do you hope to get out of your next two years at UMass? How would you like the College to change in that time?"

Dean Gerald McFarland, who sponsors the Sophomore Forum, said that the meeting will provid members of the Class of 1970 with an opportunity to express their views regarding the College curriculum to a high-ranking member of the College administration.

He added that the special meeting is an outgrowth of the Dean's hope that the College curriculum will get the "widest possible student discussion" prior to the faculty's final action on the new set of requirements.

In preparation for the meeting tomorrow with Dean Maki, the Monday Forum will review the proposed changes in the College curriculum. Both the Monday and Tuesday Forums will be at the regular time (4 to 5:15) in the CASIAC Office, entrance "C" of South College. All Sophomores in the College of Arts and Sciences are invited to these open meetings.

Open Tryouts To Be Held For "Madwoman of Chaillot"

Jim Young, director of University Theatre's spring production, The Madwoman of Chaillot, will hold open tryouts Thursday, Mar. 7, at 7 p.m.; Friday, Mar. 8 at 4:30 p.m.; Saturday, Mar. 9, at 1 p.m.; and Monday, Mar. 11, at 7 p.m., in room 125 Bartlett.

Tryouts are open to all grad and undergrad students of the University, and previous experience is not required to obtain a part. Production dates for this show are April 24-27, and no rehearsals will be held during Spring Vacation.

The Madwoman of Chaillot is a contemporary French farcical comedy by playwright Jean Giraddoux. It concerns a group of madwomen of Paris who, though outwardly daft and silly, have the good sense to save Paris from heartless exploiters who have discovered oil beneath the city and are ready to replace the beauties of Paris with a forest of oil wells.

The cast of fifty characters ranges from robber barons of business to prospectors to sewer men and street singers to the Madwoman of Chaillot herself.

Scripts of Madwoman are available on reserve at the library.

Gymnasts Finish Fifth in the East; DelGallo Qualifies for NCAA Honors

The University of Massachusetts gymnastic team inched another step upward in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League standings as they placed fifth overall in the league. The team placed sixth in 1967.

Temple University upset favored Penn State in the final round after an early season loss to the Nittany Lions to create a tie for first in the League standings. On the basis of the victory in the championship round, Temple will represent the E.I.G.L. in the NCAA championships in April.

Upsets were the pattern as Springfield College placed ahead of the Redmen to knock them out of the first division and force a tie for third in the league with the United States Naval academy. The team scores in the championship meet were: Temple 187.70, Penn State 187.30, Navy 174.70, Springfield 174.30, Massachusetts 172.70 and Army 171.65.

Syracuse and Pitt did not enter full teams. Massachusetts entered the meet tied with Springfield College, but the fifth place finish resulted in both Springfield and Navy slipping ahead of the Redmen in the overall standings. Based upon two points for each dual meet win and two points for each team defeated in the championship meet, the final overall point totals: Temple and Penn State - 28, Springfield and Navy - 16, Massachusetts - 14, Army - 8, Syracuse - 4 and Pittsburgh - 0.

At the conclusion of the fourth event, the Redmen were in good position, only eight-tenths out of third position and 2.5 points ahead of Springfield. A very strong showing on parallel bars and long horse by Springfield combined with a below par long horse performance by the UMass vaulters put Springfield 1.6 points ahead of the Redmen at the final tally. Navy finished two points ahead. The season concluded on the note that was forecast right from the pre-season reports—close!

Individually, the overview was very good. Five UMass gymnasts qualified for six slots in the finals which were, of course, dominated by gymnasts of Penn State and Temple. Dick DelGallo was the most outstanding Massachusetts gymnast, qualifying for the finals in his two events, floor exercise and rings. In floor exercise Dick scored a 9.0 preliminary score and an identical score in the finals for a 18.00 total and a tie for sixth place.

In rings, "Del" was second in the preliminaries with a score of 9.15 and received the highest ring score in the finals—9.25. However, Paul Vexler from Penn State received a higher total score, 18.5 to win the event. DelGallo's second place is the highest place ever received by a UMass gymnast in E.I.G.L. Championship competition. He will compete in the NCAA championships as one of the three representatives from the east.

In the side horse event, both Bob Leclair and Fred Babakian qualified for the finals with scores of 8.95 and 8.85 respectively. In the finals, Leclair duplicated his prelim score for a total of 17.90 and fourth place. He missed third place and a qualifying spot for the Nationals by .10 being edged by Pete Defurio of Temple. Babakian also won a medal, tieing for sixth place with a total score of 17.60.

Also qualifying for the finals were Joe Reed on the rings and Michael Kasavana on trampoline. Both finished in eighth place in their events.

With the exception of DelGallo's participation in the national championships, this concludes the competitive schedule for the 1967--68 season. The final accounting shows the first winning season for the University since joining the Eastern League four years ago (six wins and four losses), and the highest finishing position yet attained in that league. Dual meet victories over Army and Springfield College marked the high points of the season, and any season which includes wins over such historically strong gymnastic schools must be termed a successful season.

Wrestlers Stopped by MIT, 30-9

By BOB LUMADUE

CAMBRIDGE—MIT spoiled the Redmen's bid for a winning season Saturday afternoon in a very hard fought contest, defeating UMass 30-9. The only loses pinned on the MIT wrestlers this year have been by narrow margins and to major wrestling powers, Springfield, Syracuse, Army, and Harvard.

MIT could possibly give Springfield major problems in the NEIWA tournament this coming Friday and Saturday. UM will enter two full teams, freshmen and varsity.

Three decision wins were scored by Bill Goodwin, Capt. Gene Paltrineri, and Dick Gnatek. The home team was particularly tough in the lightweight, and the best UM could do was a 6-6 tie in the team score after Paltrineri's win in the 137 lb. class. Dick Gnatek provided the only relief for the Redmen in the heavyweights with second solid win in a row at 191 lbs.

MIT is particularly proud of their outstanding heavyweight Fred Andree who until Saturday was unscored upon all season. Andree took Glenn Cummins down immediately and Cummins reversed to shock the crowd for two points. This only made Andree angry as moments later he reversed Cummins and ended the bout with u fall in 0:48 seconds

Bill Goodwin decisioned R. Chang 10-2, at 115 lbs.; Dave Wade was decisioned by J. Harris 11-2, at 123 lbs.; Paul Pearl

Redmen Defeat B.U.; Tie for 1st in Conference

UMass Wins Finale, 72-68; UConn Upset Creates Tie

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

With Captain Billy Tindall pacing the way in his final game, UMass managed to down Boston University by a score of 72-68. More importantly UConn defeated URI 62-58 in Storrs, Conn., to give the Redmen half a share of the Yankee Conference title.

The final game of the season was dedicated to the four UMass seniors, Rick Perkins, Jim Girotti, Gary Gasperack, and Tindall. Before the game each one was introduced in the "Ken Coleman" style. After the introductions the Redmen started poorly.

B.U. jumped to an early lead on the strength of Jim Hayes and Richie Lee. Hayes, one of the finest forwards to play at the Cage this year, continually kept B.U. in front with his timely shooting and rebounding. Their biggest lead came at the 8:00 mark, 24-14.

After that the Redmen slowly re-entered the game on the strength of Tindall and Dick Samuelson. Each put in a pair of field goals from close range while B.U. could manage only three free throws.

In the final three minutes, three B.U. field goals, two by Lee and one by Hayes, were answered by a pair from Joe DiSarcina and one by Gasperack. At intermission the Terriers led 33-30. At the half the URI-UConn score was announced and received a great cheer. It was UConn 38-17.

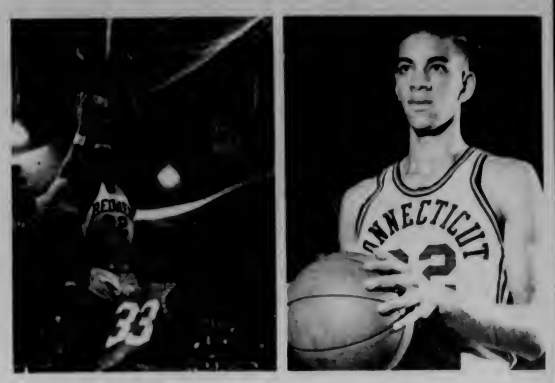
After intermission the Redmen took command. At 18:25 Gasperack hit an 18 footer and Gayeska, who was fouled underneath, added a shot to give them a 36-33 lead. They never trailed after this. Hayes did his utmost to keep the Terriers in the game, but the superior Redmen strength kept them in front.

Tindall, Samuelson, and Gasperack gave the Redmen the scoring punch while DiSarcina was scoring well and doing his superb job in setting up teammates. Their biggest lead came at 6:30, 61-52.

B.U. fought back on the strength of Hayes, and with 3:40 to go trailed by only, 64-60. At this juncture, Samuelson tipped in an errant shot. This was promptly matched by Hayes. Ellerbrook hit a pair of fouls and the lead went back to six.

In the final minute with the lead only four, John Dreyer and Gasperack got key rebounds that iced the win. Jack Leaman took out Tindall with 17 seconds to play. Tindall received a well deserved standing ovation.

At the conclusion of the game, half the crowd of 2000 stayed to hear word on the UConn-URI game. That game was in doubt until the final second when Bill Coley sank a pair of free throws to clinch the win. With the announcement of the score the crowd went wild.



Redmen Rantings—Jack Leaman kept yelling, "Beautiful! Beautiful!" at the news of the UConn win. Speaking on the B.U. game, he said, "I didn't think I prepared the team well enough for B.U."

B.U. mentor Charlie Luce complimented the Redmen, "We played our best game in weeks, and they still beat us. They had superior board strength, and an excellent squad. Jack Leaman did a great coaching job and deserves all that he got."

The Redmen finished 14-11 overall and 8-2 in conference. Leaman's two year record is 22-25 and 15-5 respectively. This is the finest UMass record since 1963-1964

Frosh Defeat B.U. 64-56

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Day Editor

Placing five players in double figures, the UMass freshman basketball team ended its season on a pleasant note by defeating the Boston University freshman, 64-56, Saturday night at the Cage. The win gives the Little Redmen a 12-7, record for the 1967-68 campaign.

Ken Mathias led what proved to be the decisive spurt late in the first half. Mathias scored six straight points starting at the eight minute mark to key a 18-6 surge that sent the Little Redmen to a 34-22 halftime lead.

Also spurring on UMass were Bob Dempsey with two field goals and Frank Scheffeld, who besides scoring twice from the field, garnared numerous rebounds. Mathias had 13 points in the first half to lead all scorers.

B.U., however, led by 6'5 John Hassan and Kevin Mindenhall came back strong in the second half. The Terriers scored six straight markers, beginning at the 10:21 mark to cut the UMass lead to 48-45. UMass behind two Jim Ryan jumpers went back out to a more comfortable 54-47 lead with 5:51 to go.

Hassan and fellow Terrier Larry Webster still had some firepower left. They brought B.U. back to within two points 54-52, with 3:07 remaining, as the all-court press used by the Terrier caused several UMass turnovers.

Bill Greeley, however, turned into the clutch man for UMass in the last frantic minutes. His ballhandling helped to break the close-guarding B.U. press. More importantly, Greeley iced the game as he converted six straight pressure free throws to put the game out of reach.

Frosh coach Peter Broaca was unable to lead his charges in their final game and was replaced by graduate assistant Jack Apgar, who after his second coaching stint at UMass, is still undefeated, having tutored the Little Redmen in their first game against Rockwood Academy.

Mathias led UMass scorers with 16, followed closely by Dempsey with 12, Greeley and Ryan with 11 each and Schaffeld with 10, in the balanced Little Redman attack.

Hassan led all scorers with 21, followed by Mindenhall with 16 and Webster with 14.

UMass Icemen Shut Out by UNH, 4-0

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

If sheer hustle and determination could win hockey games, the UMass hockey team would have upset New Hampshire, but the sheer firepower of the Wildcats prevailed as they beat the Redmen, 4-0, Friday night at Orr rink before a few hundred fans.

The Redmen were forced to go with two offensive lines throughout the game because of the absence of defenseman Dave Goldberg out of action with a leg injury. Bill McMann and Greg Stone were forced to alternate at Goldberg's defensive post and this change broke up the third line. UMass played strictly defensive hockey in the first period and escaped from the session with a scoreless tie. The Redmen would dump the puck into the Wildcat zone and then quickly retreat back on defense.

An indication of the edge in play enjoyed by New Hampshire in the period was the shots on net as UMass goalie Pete Scoville made 18 saves while New Hampshire netminder Rick Metzer had only 4.

Scoville was particularly sharp during one stretch during the period when he was forced to make three rapid fire saves on point blank shots.

Bob Brandt's 30 ft. slap shot on a partial breakaway escaped the grab of Scoville and caught the upper left corner of the net to put the Wildcats out in front early in the second period.

Two minutes later, Sheen tallied the second New Hampshire goal as he slapped home a loose puck in front of the net after Scoville had made two saves.

New Hampshire continued to apply the pressure throughout the period as the Redmen were forced to play more of an offensive game being two goals behind. The Wildcats bombed Scoville with rubber forcing him to make 25 saves in the period.

Charlie Hanifan had the best scoring chance of the night for the Redmen stopped by Metzer, as he fired a rebound from short range directly into Metzer's pads.

Ryan Brandt finished off a two on one breakaway taking a Sheen pass and beating Scoville with a five footer from in front at 6.30 of the third period.

Defenseman Mickey Goulet completed the scoring for the night when his 25 ft. slap shot flew right between Scoville's pads into the net.

New Hampshire kept severe pressure on the UMass net in the final period as the outmanned Redmen skaters tired noticeably late in the game. Scoville had to make 23 saves in this period to give him a grand total of 65 for the night.

The victory gave the Wildcats a record of 21-7 for the season with a game against Vermont tomorrow at home closing out their season. The Redmen completed their season with a 5-15 mark.

BLUELINE BANTER

When the Redmen shut out the Wildcats in the first period, it was only the third time this season that New Hampshire did not tally in the opening period.

An indication of the desire of the Redmen occurred midway in the middle period as all five of the Redmen on the ice piled on top of Scoville to smother a loose puck at the side of the net.

Scoville was tremendous throughout the whole game as the Wildcats threw everything at him except the kitchen sink, particularly in the last two periods when he made a total of 48 stops.

The game was clean and well played with only a few penalities . . . checking in the game was hard, especially by Redmen Jim O'Brien and Bill McMann.

Besides Scoville, outstanding in a losing cause was McMann as he made several fine rushes up ice to clear the puck from the UMass defensive zone.

Team roster of the Wildcats showed nine Canadiens, four skaters from Minnesota and only one from New Hampshire, team captain Dave Hagerman.

The Wildcats may have the oldest college hockey player in 30 year old wing Bill Rothwell . . . Mickey Goulet and Ryan Brandt led the attack for New Hampshire with a goal and an assist apiece . . .the shutout was the first administered on the Redmen this year.

Freshmen Pin MIT, 31-8

By BOB LUMADUE
Staff Reporter

The freshmen wrestling team ended their regular season with a perfect 12-0 dual meet record with a convincing 31-8 victory over the twice beaten MIT freshmen, Saturday afternoon at Cambridge. MIT was 8-2 going into the big meet having lost only to Harvard and UConn early in the season.

Five of MIT's points came when UM forfeited the heavyweight division and the other three were in the 177 lb. class where Denny Mulligan was a last minute substitute for Bob Willman. Willman has been recovering from an injury and Coach Tunner Brosky elected to let him set out in preparation for the NEIWA tournament this coming Friday and Saturday at the Coast Guard Academy. Mulligan dropped a 10-2 decision.

MIT boasted three undefeated wrestlers in the first three weights, as did UM. When the dust settled all three UM were victorious and it set the stage for the impressive victory.

Nick DiDomenico, John Paltrineri, Earle McCartney, and alternate Phil Davis have not been defeated in the first three weights, while Tom Young has a perfect record in the 152, and 160 lb. classes. Bob Freeman wrestling at 145 lbs., and Bob Willman at 177 lbs. have lost only once. Mike Brauner who wrestled most of the year at 152 lbs. has lost twice, as has Tom Andrewes at 167 lbs. George Zguris at 191 and Howie Kaplin at 137 have both lost three times. Of the regular wrestlers just mentioned, none were pinned while the group accumulated fifty-five pins over their opponents. During the year forfeits were not counted.

The freshmen will not prepare for the New England Freshmen Intercollegiate Wrestling Association tournament to be held at Coast Guard March 8 and 9. Central Connecticut, UM and Brown are the three contending teams for the championship.

Two Open House Policies To Be Sent to Trustees

By FRANCES BORONSKI
Student Senate Vice-President

The Faculty Senate completed the formulation of an open house policy at a special meeting last Thursday. Since the Student and Faculty Senate have endorsed different policies, the recommendations of both Senates will be forwarded to the Board of Trustees.

The major differences between the two policies lay in the area of frequency and door policy. The Student Senate report would allow each residence hall unit to determine its own frequency; the Faculty Senate imposed a limit of ten open houses per month. While the Student Senate report states that "doors to rooms of residents who are participating in any house may be closed," the Faculty Senate requires that doors of participants be left open.

Other unique features of the Faculty Senate report include:

1) A guideline for social conduct of resident participants: "Entertainment of guests is limited to those activities which would be acceptable in lounge area of a residence unit."
2) A provision for students who do not wish to participate in any open houses: "The University will ascertain regularly each student's wishes concerning housing and will accommodate those students who desire residence units having few or no open houses, specified quiet hours, or similar conditions."

Confession Letter Received By LBJ from Pueblo Crew

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson has received a letter purportedly signed by all the Pueblo crew urging him to admit the U.S. intelligence ship was spying inside North Korean waters and to apologize.

The letter addressed to Johnson was telegraphed from South Korea after it was turned over to U.S. and South Korean negotiators Sunday night, the State Department disclosed Monday.

The President, it was learned, is personally studying the unusual letter, as are other high officials.

State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey, in answering questions, merely said the letter is being studied.

Asked whether the letter is a device through which North Korea is telling the United States the Pueblo crew will be released if the United States apologizes, McCloskey said:

"We're working continually to obtain the release of the crew and the ship. I'll let it stand at that."

The letter put the crew in the position of telling Johnson it is legitimate for North Korea "to insist that before our repatriation can be realized, the necessary amnities be made by our government under whose orders we operated."

"Specifically," the letter went on, "we believe that since the real facts of the Pueblo case have been fully revealed to the world our repatriation can be realized only when our government frankly admits the fact that we intruded into the territorial waters of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and committed hostile acts, and sincerely apologizes for these acts and gives assurance that they will not be repeated."

"We were captured while committing hostile acts 7.6 miles from Yo Do in the vicinity of Wonsan in the territorial waters of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 23 January

Smith Students Begin Anti-Vietnam Peace Fast

By JAN CURLEY
News Day Editor

At 6 a.m. yesterday two thirds of the student body of Smith College began a "Fast for Peace" to protest President Lyndon B. Johnson's handling of the war in Vietnam. In addition to the 1284 girls fasting, there are 366 girls sympathizing who cannot fast for reasons of health.

Five members of the faculty and two area people are also fasting and 45 faculty and 31 area people have expressed sympathy with the fast. The figures are based on a count made from the number of arm-bands issued and preliminary pledges solicited. Those students who are fasting are wearing green armbands, and the sympathizers are wearing white ones. The fast will end at 6 p.m. tomorrow.

At a rally held yesterday afternoon attended by approximately 500 students and faculty, speakers from Smith College and Amherst spoke on the war and racism.

Kathryn Greene, co-organizer of the "Fast for Peace" opened the rally by announcing the number of fasters and sympathizers and read the petition circulated among the students. The petition was initiated by a visit of William Sloane Coffin, Chaplain at Yale University who was indicted by a Federal grand jury in Boston two weeks ago with Dr. Benjamin Spock on charges of conspiring to counsel, aid and abet young men to refuse to serve in the armed forces.

Miss Greene read a telephone message from Reverend Coffin which said the protest is "really wonderful and moving." The petition is similar to the petition at Harvard and Radcliffe last January. The petition which was circulated for two weeks was signed by 62 percent of the student body and 75 percent of the faculty.

Key Points in Petition

The petition cites three things which have been underlined by the military achievements of the Viet Cong since January 2: the overly optimistic estimates made by the American establishment of political and miiitary gains made by the South in Veit Nam; inability of the two key governments to secure the government of South Viet Nam and the necessity of devising political, rather than a military resolution, to the conflict there.

The petition calls for President Johnson and the administration to initiate and act, both in de-escalation and new diplomatic explorations, to open negotiations with the Hanoi government and the National Liberation Front, to halt the bombing which now obstructs the possibility of negotiations and an individual willingness to accept the NLF as a legitimate part in the political life of South Viet Nam.

Nancy Chniederwind, organizer of the petition in referring to the number of signatures, stated, "We feel that this is a good sign coming from the academic community, because it has responsible criticism and articulate alternatives." She went on to say the petition was moderate and meant to appeal to the public. Similar petitions were sent to UMass, Amherst, and Mt. Holyoke.

Area Professor Quoted

Professor Ramon Rurz from the Latin American Department at Smith stated that the turnout at Smith was indicative that the students were concerned. He said that they were "protesting because it was a bad war, a war that is waged by white men against the colored people." He went on to cite three basic facts: there is a moral right to become involved; the racial superiority feelings of Americans over other people and the education system has failed because it doesn't help with the basic problems which lead to understanding.

Smith College Chaplain Reverend Richard Unsworth spoke next saying, "A fast is a reli-

Segovia To Perform Tonight

Today at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts, world famous guitarist Andres Segovia will play, sponsored by the UM Concert Association.

Born in Southern Spain, Mr. Segovia became seriously interested in the guitar over the objections of his parents and his teachers at the Granada Institute of Music where he studied. Unable to find a capable instructor, he became his own guide and was the first serious artist to succeed with an instrument that had never before been accorded a place on the concert stage.

He made his first public appearance in Granada at the age of fourteen and his debut was described as a "revelation." Within a short time his name was known throughout Spain. Eight years later an appearance at the Paris Conservatory resulted in an extensive concert tour to South America which lasted for four years.

He arrived in New York for his debut at Town Hall in 1928 where he amazed critics with his "powers of execution and imagination." His was the first major guitar recital in New York, and within five weeks he had achieved a record of six

UMass Primary Voting Today In Union

U Mass Presidential Primary voting is taking place today in the Student Union lobby. This "first in the nation primary" is sponsored by the New Guard. By a unanimous vote of the group, the purpose of the primary was stated "to obtain a sample of a large state University's favored choices for presidential candidates, making available to candidates and potential candidates a poll of support of educated voters and non-voters who act as indicator of a larger percentage that any other voting sample."

Along with the candidates choices, there are two optional referenda poll questions: that recruiters of the "military-industrial complex" should be allowed on campus; that the U.S.A. should be involved in the Vietnam conflict. A positive or negative choice is given.

A run-off election between the primary victors of each party will be held on Thurs., Mar. 6.

All undergraduates, graduates and faculty are eligible to vote regardless of age. Identification cards must be presented.

Professor Tucker to Read Poetry at Student Union

The third meeting of Oral Messages, an experimental poetry reading group at U Mass, will present Associate Professor Robert Tucker's reading what he has titled "poems that stay with me."

Mr. Tucker, a contemporary poet who aiso specializes in current American and British literature and is a member of the Editorial Board of the Massachusetts Review, will read a selection of poems he has found particularly engaging and meaningful in his long acquaintence with poetic forms. Poets represented will include Shakespeare, William Butler Yeats, Robert

The operation followed the bombing of a village near Jerusalem.

The spokesman identified the Al Fatah commanders as William Nadiv Nassar and Kamil Nimri, an engineer, and said they were trained in Algeria, Syria and East Germany.

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union kept silent Monday on its mysterious new unmanned space ship called Zond 4, launched Saturday.

Speculation centered on a possible moon mission, such as history's first attempt for a space vehicle to orbit the moon and return to earth—a necessary step leading eventually to sending a man to the moon.

A brief official announcement early Sunday didn't specify the mission. It said only that the new probe would explore "outlying regions of near - earth space" and test unidentified "new systems and units aboard the station."

Bill D. Moyers, now publisher of Newsday, a Long Island, N.Y., daily newspaper, told reporters at a press conference that McCarthy's impact in the primaries would be greater than most observers thought a few weeks ago.

The Minnesota Democrat's chances of getting the nomination, however, were "Nill," Moyers said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders finally corralled enough votes Monday to restrict further debate on a compromise civil rights bill, apparently assuring passage of legislation carrying some form of open - housing guarantee.

On the fourth attempt to invoke cloture, the Senate voted 65-32 in favor of imposing the debate-limiting rule.

This gave cloture adherents the bare two - thirds majority they needed.

The vote seemed to assure Senate passage of the administration-backed civil rights protection bill with its added - on open-housing provision. But it remained uncertain just what form the housing provision will take.

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. said Monday he will meet soon with civil rights leaders who are "prone to violence" in an effort to make certain there are no riots during his poor people's campaign in Washington.

King, who hopes to prevail on Congress to pass legislation providing jobs and income for the nation's poor, has called on thousands to march on the nation's capital. He said the march will begin April 22, the day Congress reconvenes after its Easter recess.

Campus Chest Week Promises To Be Fun and Games at UMass

By RON LABRECQUE
News Editor

Fund-raising has become the prime concern of the Class of '70 Campus Chest Committee as they prepare for Campus Chest Week March 9-17. Events highlighting the week include a donkey basketball game, a raffle, two dances a work day, a circus, and the revival of a once traditional male Miss Campus chest.

At a meeting of the Sophomore Executive Council last night the five finalists who will be competing for the "Rat Fink" award, an innovation to Campus Chest Week activities, were announced by the contest chairman, Dave Floreen. A special table will be set up in the Student Union Lobby and balloting will be done by placing money in the appropriate jar for the UMass "Rat Fink" choice. The finalists are the administration, the Dining Commons, the Record American, General Hershey, and the State Legislature.

Sophomores have begun the countdown to Campus Chest Week which begins Saturday. President Bruce Balboni along with Publicity Chairman Bonnie Fairburn, Treasurer Steve Weisman and Executive Council members Anita Pruchansky, Ina Goldstein and Dave Floreen pose behind the fundraising week's theme sign which was put up in the Student Union yesterday.

On Sunday, March 17 at 8:00 p.m. in the Cage a donkey basketball game will be held. The administration opposes Student Government officials in this lively athletic encounter which has the participants riding donkeys. Among those playing for the Administration will be Dean of Students William Field and Student Union Co-ordinator Gerald Scanlon. Sophomore Class President Bruce Balboni and Junior Class President Wayne Thomas will dress for the Student Government officials team.

Barbara Kay, Chairman of the Raffle Committee has announced that local stores will donate prizes and gift certificates for this fund-raising endeavor.

On Saturday, March 9 a work day will be held. Chairman Ina Goldstein said that sophomores may be "hired" for the day by sororities, fraternities and other campus organizations to perform such duties as cleaning rooms and washing windows.

The opening dance on March 9 will feature the music of "things that go bump in the night". A dance on March 16 will introduce "The Fabulous Farquahr" to the campus.

A store in the Student Union will feature throughout the week items including the theme button, a colorful button displaying the Campus Chest Week slogan "Happiness is giving . . ." and a variety of the famed "Peanuts" books and gifts.

Reigning over the week's events will be a less than feminine Miss Campus Chest which revives a UMass tradition of a humorous beauty contest aiding in the fund raising efforts.

gious act to produce a religious effect, soul and commitment."

Professor John Rate of the Modern European History Department at Amherst asked two questions of the protestors, "Why are you here?" and "What are you doing now that you are here?"

He stated the three reasons for being here are a conviction the war does not serve the interests of the country, the war is unjust and the people have compassion.

In answer to the second question, he went on to say the protestors would learn to think, express a solidarity with the community and make a statement through the media that "we can admit sin."

Eric Bohman, a member of the Students for a Democratic Society at Amherst College said the purpose was to register "sorrow and disgust over an evil war." He stated, "Vietnam is a real mistake." He went on to say that it was a liberal war started by liberal presidents.

He said, "Fight not against revolution, but tyranny that causes men to revolt." He concluded his remarks by asking the crowd to make a choice between liberalism and humanism.

Margaret Stein, co-organizer of the protest, closed the rally by quoting George Kennan and stated the fast is "a symbol of commitment." She urged the girls to organize women for peace in their home communities.

Five-College Panel Discusses Intra-College Communications

By ELAINE QUAGLINI
Staff Reporter

Students from the five-college area engaged in a lively panel discussion on the topic, Five College Medias: Coordination Possibilities, at the Communications Symposium held here Saturday, March 2, at Student Union.

Dario Politella, assistant professor of English at the University and president of the National Council of College Publications Advisors, presided as moderator.

Participating members were students from the five colleges; Joel Winslow, representative of Dialog, and David Watts, executive assistant at Hampshire College.

5-College Area Reaction

David Roby, an Amherst College student and member of the five-college cooperating committee, said that he has found gratifying results from cooperation among schools, especially between the lecture committees. Delighted with five-college cooperation, Roby said, "It's like seeing something rise out of the dust."

Winslow offered some fascinating ideas in the field of multi-media systems. He said that there is a need for media "when and where the student wants it." Telephone systems can fulfill these needs.

Winslow cited an example from the Worcester college area. A student at Clark University can look in the telephone directory, find a Shakespearean tape, and after dialing the necessary code number, listen to the tape with his headset.

Future plans, he said, include building a resource center wherein students in the Amherst area can dial in their rooms any tape that they would like to hear.

With the focus on the future, students began voicing their views on future cooperation between the colleges. Joyce Laquldora, a representative of WMHC, said that she expects to see more cooperation in news broadcasting.

Don Epstein, managing editor of the Daily Collegian, said that he hopes to see, within the next five years, a five-college daily newspaper in which the best material from all five college newspapers will be published.

Cooperation Key Issue

According to Epstein, "We are all alone in nowheresville. We are all in the same boat."

Autonomy and participation among the colleges became the key issues of the discussion. David Cochran, representative of The Amherst Student, said that generally speaking students don't really care about five-college cooperation. Interest in five-college cooperation lies foremost with administration and faculty. Cochran said emphatically that each of the five colleges should not lose its autonomy.

Epstein closed the discussion by saying that the problem rests with the students, in that they are "apathetic and unaware of the potentials of Five College Cooperation."

Most of the panelists agreed, however, that no matter how miniscule the efforts toward cooperation are, they are steps in the right direction.

UMass ABC Asks Liquor Code Change

By PHYLLIS COYNE
Staff Reporter

The UMass Alcoholic Beverage Committee (A.B.C.) recommends in its report that consumption of alcoholic beverages be legalized for those 21 and over on the UMass campus.

Key Points in Present Case

The report suggests the abolition of the present code on alcoholic beverages—no undergraduate, regardless of age, is permitted to use alcoholic beverages at any University functions, on University property, or in any housing which accomodates students in residence. The proposed code would allow legal drinking under the state law and make mere possession no longer a judiciary offense.

Student Union "21 Room" Advocated

"Quiet consumption of alcoholic beverages in dormitory rooms with closed doors is advised. The emphasis is on student maturity and responsibility.

The A.B.C. unanimously recommends the establishment of a "21 room" in the S.U., in which no one under 21 would be allowed, and the appointment of someone by the UMass Trustees to apply for a liquor license. The report speculates on the possibility of a cocktail lounge in the new student center and all student checkers.

Penalties for abuse of alcoholic beverages leading to disturbances of people or property would be subject to judiciary action as outlined in the Student Handbook.

New Members Named To Commission

Jim Collins, Student Senate President, appointed a new A.B.C. under Charles Hopkins ('68) in Oct. 1967 to implement the report of the 1966-67 A.B.C. of Mike Garjian ('68).

The Garjian report was excluded from the 1967-68 new code of student conduct and was returned in the summer by Dean Field, because he felt the ideas couldn't be enforced.

The Hopkins A.B.C. made little progress because of disagreements about the focus of the A.B.C. Hopkins resigned on Nov. 15 and Chris McGahan ('69), a member of both the Garjian and Hopkins A.B.C. was appointed chairman.

The new A.B.C. was charged to finish the report on Dec. 15 by Collins, but later received an extension to Feb. 15. The last meeting was held on Feb. 12. The report is presently circulating through the committee for changes.

The report is on the Student Senate agenda for March 6. If approved it will go to the Student Life Committee of the Faculty Senate and then to the Administration and Trustees.

Town Selectmen Decry "Aggressive Hitchhiking"

Amherst Selectmen continued their discussion of pedestrian safety at a recent meeting by reviewing an order sent by Town Manager Allen Torrey to all regular and special police officers on the subject of hitchhiking and walking in the roads.

The Board last week called upon the Town Manager to bring to the attention of the Police Department the provisions of the Town's Pedestrian Control Regulations concerning hitchhiking and walking in the streets. The Selectmen have not taken a stand for an outright ban on hitch-hiking at this time. Instead the Board hopes that the practice of "aggressive hitchhiking," a term coined by Selectman Howes, can be curtailed.

The Town regulation prohibits persons from standing in a roadway for the purpose of soliciting a ride. This is to be interpreted by Amherst Police as meaning that hitch-hikers will be tolerated if they are out of the paved roadway and not interfering with the normal flow of traffic.

The second part of the new campaign will be to enforce the prohibition against walking in the streets in areas where sidewalks exist. Amherst has been the scene of two recent pedestrian accidents, one a fatality.

The Selectmen expect that the administration and student government of both schools will make suggestions for eliminating the hazards brought about by these practices.

Yale's "New Journal" Is Now On Sale in the Union

A new magazine from Yale that has been described as "spectacular journalism" by the Harvard Crimson went on sale on newsstands here this week, including the Student Union.

Eight issues of the magazine, called The New Journal, have appeared at Yale since the magazine was founded last fall by dissident editors of The Yale Daily News.

It is a bi-weekly blend of reportage, lively criticism, fiction, photography, and occasional polemics, in a striking graphic design.

The lead article in the issue that goes on sale here deals with a major new book on the survivors of Hiroshima, along with a profile of the author and an analysis of psycho-history. Other articles cover the Annette Funicello Film Festival, the training of a brilliant young cellist, and the Smith slavery conference. There is also a look at Old Alumni who come back to visit — and to die.

The founding editors, Daniel Yergin and Gerald Bruck, both Yale seniors, started a magazine supplement to the Yale News last year, but then quit the News to start their own magazine.

"The News' profit structure was just too constricting and the whole newspaper was a top-heavy institution," explained Yergin. "We wanted to experiment."

"The decision to distribute on other campuses," said Peter Yaeger, the publisher, "stemmed from the excellent reaction the Journal has received from students and faculty at other colleges."

Joel Kramer, president of the Harvard Crimson, wrote in his review: "There is just enough Yaleness in the Journal to keep it from being simply a magazine published in New Haven, but not enough to render it dull to outsiders (or even Yalies)."

Recent issues of The New Journal have included a long interview with Arthur Penn, director of Bonnie and Clyde; the inside story on the the big bust of the singing group The Doors; a profile of author-playwright Joseph Heller; the tale of Fat Bernie, the 225-lb. Broadway gossip-broker; and a report on the mill-in, Berkeley's newest form of student protest.

DEFERRING GRADUATE SCHOOL?

The Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory likes to staff its world-wide network of research stations with men of unusual intelligence and ability. The trouble is, of course, that most such men are either still in school or already spoken for by one or another of the professions. The men we send to Spain, Peru, Ethiopia and elsewhere must have career plans which are still negotiable, or be willing at least to acquire some uncommon experience for a year or two while putting away funds for graduate school. For those who stay, there are broad opportunities for advancement as well.

KILL WHITEY

Kill Whitey. Burn. These words adorn the halls of Kennedy Tower. Perhaps they are there as a joke, more likely as a symptom of justified indignation.

The person who wrote them was probably fed up with the Negro's lot in America. Progress for civil rights has been too slow. There should never have been any question about it in the 20th century America. Frustration naturally builds up over denial of human rights.

When the American Negro sees the support that George Wallace draws in Pennsylvania and California, when he sees Mrs. Hicks nearly winning the mayoralty of Boston, when the Massachusetts Legislature refuses to provide a Negro a Senate seat on the grounds that men should be elected in merit while making sure other ethnic groups are given districts and the Negro one split among three pro-Hicks Districts—the Negro has a right to be mad, hurt and a little irrational.

Ronald Reagan may be and George Wallace is a presidential candidate; when a Negro hears that people call Wallace the new messiah and Reagan a genius (TIME 2/28) he can only remember that Herr Schicklgruber was called that by certain people. He can only react against prejudice and danger with violence and hatred of his own.

Progress has been too slow but hopefully the Negroes realize it is being made. White Americans are starting to see that injustice must be corrected in order for riots to end. Slowly civil rights laws and concrete programs are being built. The negro must realize that setbacks will arise and that old prejudices die hard. But for every lower income white who likes Wallace there are progressive labor leaders, and for every bigot there are many more conscientious liberals. Many white men have died in the cause of civil rights, hopefully the person who wrote "kill whitey" knows this and knows that the majority of Americans are not so vicious as it would seem by the actions of certain men in power.

Still, if America doesn't move for full equality in the political, economic, and social spheres the justification to burn and kill will be there. If some whites want to support Wallace or Reagan the Negro has a right to want to hate. One must hope that before violence starts he remembers the millions of whites who support Negro equality and work for it.

Channeling Campus Dissent

SUFI . . . To encourage student activity and perpetuate student awareness.

On Thursday, February 15—just a little more than two weeks ago—a group of seventy-five to one hundred persons who had participated in the "Gala Welcome Dow" festivities entered the Student Union and gathered in front of the Navy recruiting table. A few at a time, the demonstrators sat down on the lobby floor in front of the recruiting table. Then, somehow—few demonstrators or onlookers can figure out just how or why—an anti-Dow, anti-military sit-in became an open forum for student grievances and student rights. Numerous ideas, opinions and philosophies were voiced; much of what was said was perhaps colored by the emotional atmosphere. But the demonstrators had agreed to disperse if President Lederle agreed to attend an open student meeting the following Monday.

Monday night's meeting demonstrated that the university community was interested enough to nearly fill the Cage. This meeting did nothing to accomplish the instant-reform that some individuals demanded; spirited confrontations of this sort cannot offer immediate solutions. But in Monday night's student-administration an exchange of issues and arguments were presented in a way dramatic enough to excite people, to get people talking about things they had never really talked about but only complained about. Whether for better or worse, Monday's meeting brought University reform out of the file-drawers into the open.

There is no reason why open, thoughtful discussion such as that which has arisen from the events of these last two weeks should not become the rule rather than the exception. SUFI was organized a few days after the meeting at the Cage, intent on keeping the spirit of this active interest alive.

Sufi has since become an R.S.O. group (Registered Student Organization). The following is Sufi's formal statement of purpose:

We are committed to the attainments of self-determination for students in all areas of activity within the university community, and in all relations of that community with the state and nation. We are committed to attainment through legal means. Whenever feasible we will work with other segments of the university community. We are opposed to all policies and practices by any member of the university community which would delay or damage the realization of student self-determination. Through facilitating the presentation of all points available, by encouraging and aiding individuals and groups to play an active role in expressing their ideas and acting upon them, we seek to foster and perpetuate student awareness.

Where Is Our Money

To the editor:

What price education? Anyone who has lived in a dorm, who has taken the education block, and has practice taught away from the Amherst area is surely familiar with this age old problem. For a period of five months, or one semester, we pay a total of $175 for room and $220 for food. However, from March 25 to May 24 the room will be unoccupied, and we will not be eating at the dining commons. But let us give credit where credit is due.

The dining commons does give a rebate for these uneaten meals. Of course, it is only to be expected that it could not possibly be a full rebate. As for the room, technically it is ours; we may come back whenever we wish. We will probably never come back to this room after March 25, and we would gladly allow it to be rented to some other students.

The numerous other fees: telephone, activities fee, student union fee, infirmary fee and athletic fee are small ones in comparison to the room rent. The school of education has arbitrarily decided to send a handful of students off campus to student-teach. As a result, we are forced to forfeit almost half a semester's cost, which few students can afford. What is the University doing with the money that should rightfully be given back to us?

Black Power—Negro Resurrection

Vietnams in American cities ! Is this not serious talk and must it not be taken very seriously ? Well, as a highly educated society, The United States is quite aware that winds of history have always blown from one shore of a continent to the other. However, it will be good for it to note that the winds of history that are blowing against our shores in the second half of the 20th century are no ordinary winds — They are storms against which some of our present values cannot stand. Yes, the second half of the 20th century may be recorded as a century of knowledge explosion by scientists, it may be recorded as a century of violence by philosophers, but, beyond doubt, it will be recorded as a century of the resurrection of the oppressed people of the world by disciples of all faiths. Let us look at the resurrection of the Negro people in America.

While most Europeans came to America WITH capital to start a NEW LIFE, Negroes came AS a capital to be USED. While Europeans were building economic strength, Negroes were being dehumanized. For unexplainable historical forces, a Negro was "freed" in the second half of the 19th century as a "man". Those who "freed" his as a "man" gave him nothing for his hard labor he had given to America; instead they were reminding him now and then that he was snatched from the empire of animals and thus it was impossible for him to enter the "civilized world of man". If a Negro wanted to live, he had to live at the mercy of the slave masters. Yes, for three centuries a Negro has lived as a parasite on the American society instead of being part of it, and for this, the society has accepted him as unquestionably inferior, lazy, stupid, dirty, ugly and, of course, evil, and the Negro (save a few) has accepted himself as such. How can such a man lift his head high enough to be seen?

Those Negroes who understand the forces of history at work, shout, "BLACK POWER". It is a simple call. It says, "Fellow Negroes, let us regain our human state of mind. Fellow Negroes, let us get our fair share from the American resources." The question facing the American society then is: Has the call been heard and understood ? If it has, what will be the appropriate answer ? To the oppressed Negroes who have heard and understood the call, the answer is clear; it is eruption. Why eruption ? Because the stubborn historical facts have told him that a volcano builds in the underground in order to erupt and build a mountain above the ground. Of course, those who engineer the American society will not be so foolish as to think of preventing the volcano by sitting on it. No, the only wise decision is to move the people away from the erupting areas. I know, every person is subjected to both reason and to prejudice, I am convinced that if I were one of the engineers of the American society I would have put the ISMS of the world aside and put aside a few billion dollars for socializing some economic activities in the slum areas and other poverty stricken areas.

Mass. Mutual Employee Fired; Questions Company's Morality

By BILL DICKINSON
Specials Editor

A UMass senior claims an insurance company which has been recruiting on campus fired his wife last week for being what he called 'a poor health risk". He said her job had been terminated retroactively".

A representative of the company admitted that she had been fired for what he termed "chronic absenteeism",

According to Peter Fink, Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Co. of Springfield notified his wife last Wednesday that she had been fired as of the previous Monday, the only day that week she had gone to work. She was absent Tuesday with "a serious ear infection".

Fink told the Daily Collegian in an interview that his wife, Nancy, class of 1966, had been hired by the company on July 10, 1967, as an actuarial technician. She received a B.S. in mathematics from the University.

From July to December, Mrs. Fink was out of work for five and a half days with an illness. Then in December, her immediate supervisor warned her that "your attendance record will have to improve or termination will be considered," said Fink. He said that the supervisor stressed that there was nothing wrong with her work, only her attendance and "he didn't question that she was sick." The company claims that Mrs. Fink missed seven days after that.

Morality Questioned

The Finks do not question the legality of the company's action, "only the morality." The company does not sign an employment contract with its employees, which means that the company can fire a person for any reason. It also means that the employee can quit anytime, according to Fink. What bothers him is that his wife was "fired retroactively" and that "there is no difference in treatment by the company towards individuals holding a college degree as opposed to individuals holding a high school degree."

Personnel Director Replies

Mass Mutual's assistant director of personnel, R. Allison Johnson, told the Daily Collegian that Mrs. Fink had been fired for "chronic absenteeism." According to Johnson, "Her attendance was much worse than that of people we allow to remain here."

Johnson also said that Mrs. Fink had "signed a warning about her attendance.

He also disputes the Finks' claim that Mrs. Fink was only to be paid through the Monday she was fired. Johnson claims that the Finks were notified that she will be paid through March 11. He termed this quite generous for a short term employee."

In replying to Fink's charge that there is no difference in treatment of college and high school graduates, Johnson said, "We find it hard to decide who is a superman according to their academic background."

Present Open House Policy Recommendations Quoted

During the Faculty Senate meeting, the assembly moved to go into a Committee of the Whole to discuss the Student Senate policy with the new provision of parental consent. As passed by the Student Senate on February 20, the provision stated:

"All students eighteen years of age or younger, wishing to participate in open houses shall secure parental permission by means of a card to be posted with the semester bill. Such card will be filed with the House Government of each residence or Greek house. Compliance with such permission shall be strictly on an honor system with dialogue to be between student and family. No student judicial or administrative action shall be taken in case of infractions of such permission."

After discussion of the Student Senate policy, the Faculty Senate had reached no consensus on the student report. Resuming the Senate meeting, the members reaffirmed support of the policy which the Faculty Senate had created.

Both policies will be presented to the Trustees at their next meeting, which will be held on March 22.

STUDENT SENATE RECOMMENDATION ON OPEN HOUSES

S53 as amended now reads:

A. Each residence unit' government shall be allowed to determine its own unique policy on the frequency and duration of open houses. Residence unit governments may establish these open houses as open or closed social events.

B. Open houses may be registered Mondays through Thursdays from 3:00 P.M. to 10:00 P.M.; Fridays and Saturdays from 12:00 noon to closing; Sundays from 12:00 noon to closing. On evenings preceding holidays, hours shall extend to closing. Consistent with existing University security policies, residence halls, fraternities and sororities will be locked Sundays through Thursdays from 12:00 midnight to 7:00 A.M. and Fridays and Saturdays from 1:00 A.M. to 7:00 A.M. There may be no visitation by members of the opposite sex during these hours.

C. The doors to the rooms of residents who are participating in any open house may be closed.

D. Ultimate authority for open house policy resides in the Board of Trustees or their designated officials.

E. The University policy on open houses as of September, 1967 will remain in force until each residence unit has presented its provisions to the Student Life Committee for implementing the recommendations embodied in this proposal.

F. Each open house must be approved separately by a majority vote of all the residents either at house meetings or at section meetings.

G. Each residence unit must determine anew the frequency and duration of its open houses for no more than two-week intervals.
Residence unit governments will clearly articulate their open house program, will inform their membership of open house events sufficiently in advance, and will be prepared to submit on request, descriptions of their programs to the Student Personnel representative having administrative liaison with their place of residence.

H. All students 18 years of age or younger, wishing to participate in open houses shall secure parental permission by means of a card to be posted with the fall semester bill. Such card will be filed with the House Government of each residence or Greek house. Compliance with such permission shall be strictly on an honor system with dialogue to be between student and family. No student judicial or administrative action shall be taken in case of infractions of such permission.

I. At the end of each semester, each residence unit government will submit an evaluation of its policy to the Student Senate and Student Life Committee.

J. Annual evaluation of the policy will take place by the Student Senate, Student Life Committee, and the Dean of Students.

K. Fraternities and Sororities come under the purview of the above policies. "Residence Unit" as used throughout the motion includes residence halls, fraternities, and sororities.

OPEN HOUSE POLICY AS RECOMMENDED BY THE FACULTY SENATE

A. Ultimate authority for open house policy resides in the Board of Trustees or their designated officials.

B. Each resident unit—here and hereafter defined as residence halls, fraternities, and sororities—is expected to formulate its own open house program and to determine by ballot whether it is acceptable to the residents.

C. All votes relating to open houses must be conducted by secret ballot. An affirmative vote requires the approval of a majority of all residents of the unit.

D. A resident unit is not permitted to conduct its first open house under the revised open house policy until that resident unit's proposed open house program has been reviewed by the Student Life Committee. In the interim the policy governing open houses shall be that which went into effect September, 1967.

E. Each resident unit must review and either reaffirm or revise its open house program, including the scheduling of open houses, at least once every thirty days from the date of the last vote on the open house program.

F. The following conditions apply to the scheduling and conduct of open houses:

1. Each open house must be voted separately.
2. Up to ten open houses may be scheduled in any one month.
3. Open houses may be conducted Mondays through Thursdays from 3:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.; Fridays and Saturdays from 12:00 noon to 1:00 a.m.; Sundays from 12:00 noon to 12:00 midnight.
4. A resident must meet a guest of the opposite sex in the lobby, record in a guest book the time of the guest's arrival and later record the time of the guest's departure, and also identify the room in which the guest is to be entertained.
5. The door to the room of a resident who is participating in an open house must be open.
6. Entertainment of guests is limited to those activities which would be acceptable in the lounge area of a residence unit.
7. Consistent with existing University security policies, residence units will be locked Sundays through Thursdays from 12:00 midnight to 7:00 a.m., and Friday and Saturday nights from 1:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m. There may be no visitation by members of the opposite sex during these hours.

G. Each residence unit government must submit a description and evaluation of its program and procedures to the Student Senate and Student Life Committee at the end of each semester.

H. The Student Senate, the Student Life Committee, and the Dean of Students will conduct annual evaluations of open house policy.

I. The University will ascertain regularly each student's wishes concerning housing and will accommodate those students who desire residence units having few or no open houses, specified quiet hours, or similar conditions.

Record Review

Everything's Playing In "Everything's Playing"

The Lovin' Spoonful is no longer John Sebastion and Friends. Where once Sebastion's good-time, easy-going style dominated their music, the Spoonful's members have now branched out into their own personality streams, and this expansion is reflected in their music.

The group's newest album, Everything Playing, is a combination of efforts in all directions, an exploration into new styles and means of expression. Although the songs themselves cannot be classified or categorized, they are influenced by different types of modern music. The listener flies from the bluesy "Try a Little Bit" to the electronic "Close Your Eyes" to the hard-rocked 'Only Pretty, What a Pity." There is also a jug band influence in "Priscilla Millionaira" and "Money," in which the banjo back-up is very effective.

However various these styles may be, they are at best interesting and, at worst, boring. But from amongst these mediocrities comes the major work of the album, Sebastion's 'Younger Generation." In this outstanding song, Sebastion's folk background comes to light, and, once again, he displays his remarkable talent for writing lyrics too simple to pick apart, and yet too beautiful to want to try. In "Younger Generation," Sebastion reflects on being young and growing up thinking the older generation is square; then trying to bring up your own child who probably thinks you are square. He shows his feelings in tender and simple imagery:

"And still I'll try to tell him
all the things I've done,
Relating to what he can do
when he becomes a man,
And still, he'll stick his fingers in the fan."

"Hey, Pop . . . can it be that you can't live up to your dreams?"

New Trial Ordered for Mass. Marine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon disclosed Monday a Naval board of review has set aside the court-martial conviction of a Marine who had been accused of killing two South Vietnamese civilians and mutilating one of the bodies.

A new trial was ordered in the case of Marine Cpl. Stanley J. Luczko, 21, of Gardner, Mass., as a result of the board's decision Feb. 28, the Pentagon said. Luczko had been convicted of premeditated murder in one of the slayings and assessed a sentence of life imprisonment, reduction in rank to private and a dishonorable discharge.

Luczko was acquitted of charges that he murdered a South Vietnamese male and mutilated the body, but he was convicted of killing a South Vietnamese woman.

A Pentagon spokesman said the basis of the board's decision to set aside the court martial conviction was a question of Luczko's mental condition at the time of the slaying.

Writer Cites News "Moral Responsibility"

No Connecticut newspaper treated its state senator Thomas Dodd's 1967 expose and consequent censure as major news. This is a case of total apathy on the part of public news media.

This example was the main point in the address given by Robert Yoakum, free lance writer for the Nation and the Columbia Journalism Review, as part of the Communications Board last Saturday. (March 2).

Yoakum went on to say if people are unaware of the incomplete and consequent inaccurate coverage of news, it is the moral responsibility of other newspapers to expose their competitors and inform the readers. Yet this practice often is considered unethical.

Yoakum's reasons for this lack of news coverage were four-fold: fear of upsetting the all-important advertisers by carrying controversial news, fear of upsetting officials, the actual hard work involved in uncovering and presenting this news, and fear of counter-attacks. His remedy for reform is the university presses.

Yoakum stated that coverage by university papers of local newspapers, while providing good, basic training along with an ardent, passionate effort on the part of the college reporter, is the "greatest single contribution that university papers could make."

LBJ Expected To Enter Mass. Primary

BOSTON (AP) — President Lyndon B. Johnson's name will be entered in the Massachusetts presidential preference primary unless the White House orders otherwise, Democratic state Chairman Lester Hyman said Monday.

The only name entered thus far is that of Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy D-Minn., the peace candidate.

If the White should ban inclusion of Johnson's name on the ballot, it is expected that the name of some prominent Massachusetts Democrats will be entered as a stand-in for him.

Campus Roads To Be Constructed

The apparent low bidder for a project to construct campus boulevards at the University of Massachusetts is the Puffer Construction Corporation of North Amherst, it was announced today by Kenneth W. Johnson, University Treasurer.

The Puffer bid of $923,473 is for a project to construct a connecting link between the County Circle dormitories and North Pleasant St., to develop a parking lot near the administration building, and to construct, landscape and light a mall between the administration building and the School of Business Administration.

The road between the route 116 by-pass and North Pleasant St. has been completed up to the County Circle dormitories at the corner of Sunset Ave. Under the new project, the four-lane, two-way road will be completed and an interchange constructed at the intersection of the parking lot and North Pleasant St. between the Newman Center and Baptist Church. A parking lot with appropriate lighting and landscaping will be developed south of the new road. A mall appropriately lighted and landscaped running north from the new road and parking lot between Whitmore Administration Building and the School of Business Administration will complete the project.

UMass Ski Team Victorious in Both Wildcat Slalom Races

JIM GARSTANG

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
Sports
TUESDAY, MARCH 5, 1968
Page 8 Vol. XCVI, No. 99

Coach William MacConnell's "Money skiers" came through under pressure this weekend at Wildcat Mountain, New Hampshire. After a complete flop in a non-conference meet February 25, at Haystack Mountain, the UMass Ski Team crashed back into the win column by sweeping both their own Osborne Division as well as the highly touted Northern League.

The Northern League consists of eight schools whose skiing power seems to vary inversely with their academic reputations. Princeton and Brown trail their league while Nasson, New England College, Windham and Hawthorne vie for the lead position.

New England College once dominated the Osborne Division before "moving up" to the Northern League and currently have the only certified "A" facer in N.E.I.S.C.

Times have changed, however. As UMass and Amherst squared off to battle out the Osborne Division championship, they were unaware of any team's position other than their own. After the races were over, it was quite apparent that both schools had placed well above the others.

On Saturday, UMass skiers had to wait out a second run in the Slalom before gaining the lead. Collin Garstang, Jim Garstang, Ned Kelley, Mike Zanolli and Dick McHugh held the line for the Redmen after the first run, but it wasn't until Ned Post of Amherst made a costly fall in the second run that UMass gained an appreciable lead.

The Giant Slalom on Sunday was a clear case of defeating Amherst on their skis. Both UMass and Amherst sacrificed their best skiers when Collin Garstang and Pete Flaccus took spills. Since Garstang and Amherst's Flaccus are of relatively equal ability, this merely passed the challenge to the remaining five skiers on each team.

Dave Kamilla answered the challenge with the best team time, but it wasn't until Jim Garstang's run that UMass pulled ahead. The younger Garstang skied consistently well for the team and was only beaten by Ned Kelley by 1. seconds for the best combined effort for a UMass skier over the weekend.

With only one more Giant Slalom next weekend, it seems that UMass will preserve its lead in Osborne Division. So far the team has compiled six first place victories and two second place finishes. They look for their seventh first place at Cranmore Saturday, March 9, in North Conway, New Hampshire.

UMass Track Reign Ended by URI

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

ORONO, Me.—Building up a big lead with a strong field events team, the University of Rhode Island track team ended UMass' two year reign as Yankee Conference indoor track champs, as the Rams took the conference title Saturday. Rhode Island's 49½ points gave them an eight and a half point over runnerup Maine, while defending champion U-Mass was third with 40 points.

The UMass field event men were blanked in four events but in the last field event, the high jump, John Arienson and Paul Nyman turned in excellent performances to take first and second in the event, respectively. Then the runners took over piling up three-fourths of the Redmen's points.

Greg Bowman ran a strong mile, placing third berind Vita of UConn and Turner of Maine. In the sprints, co-captain Steve Burrell took third and Steve Chase placed fifth, as defending champion, Crellin of New Hampshire won again. The hurdles turned out to be a big factor in the outcome of the meet as star UMass hurdler Marc Levefer banged into a hurdle in his trial heat and was slowed up enough so that he did not qualify for the finals.

The Redmen started scoring again in the 600 as John Anderson and Bob Hasslebaum took first and second and Diego Gonzalez placed fifth for a total of 11 points. The Redmen also picked up points in the two mile as Paul Hoss took third and Marc Gelinas came in fifth. In the 1000 yard run, Dave Evans of UMass took second place behind Yankee Conference record setter Charlie McGuiness of Rhode Island.

UMass lost its hold on second place in the last event, the relay as the team of Bill Donaldson, Bowman, Hasselbaum and Anderson placed second behind Maine. By virtue of this, Maine took over the second spot in the meet by one point.

UMass chances were hindered by the absences of two performers Bill Tindall, defending conference high jump champion, who was concluding his great basketball carreer against B.U. at the Cage, and junior Charlie Lang, two-mile ace, who is housed up in the infirmary with mono.

Women Gymnasts Place High in Regional Meet

UMass Women Gymnastics team placed third behind Springfield College and Southern Connecticut during a recent Eastern Regional Gymnastics Meet. 117 entries from 13 schools competed in the meet, the largest college meet for women in the country.

Competition was held in three categories: girls with no previous competition experience, girls with one or two years of collegiate competition experience, and girls in championship.

DVP Panel Explores 'Human Freedom' Issue

By BOB ROCKFORD
Staff Reporter

Substantial agreement among the panel members characterized last night's DVP presentation, "Human Freedom in the American City." The topic was explored with an emphasis on rehabilitation by a panel consisting of urban specialists of both public and academic backgrounds.

Ivan Ashley, State Anti-Poverty Coordinator, Monseigneur Francis J. Tally, Chairman of the Boston Redevelopment Authority and Dr. James Wilson, Government Professor at Harvard, formed the panel moderated by William Havard, chairman of the UMass Government Department. Due to a serious family illness, Louse Day Hicks, Boston mayoral candidate was unable to participate.

According to Chris McGahan, chairman of the symposium, "Mrs. Hick's absence eliminated much of the heat from the discussion."

An initial period of 20 minutes was allowed each panelist to speak on his subject.

Ashley opened his presentation by pointing out "violence in the inner city may well stretch to the suburbs." He emphasized that the basic problem was "not a question of the urban poor, but the right of each person to live as a human being! Ghetto life was characterized as "micropolitan with solutions only to be found in a "restructuring" of urban existence. This could only be done by decentralizing power and handing over decision-making powers to local groups.

The role of the Redevelopment Authority in urban affairs was explored by Mr. Tally. He stated the three-pronged program of Renewal to be:

1. Demolition in slum neighborhoods.
2. Rehabilitation in decaying areas.
3. Prevention of decay in healthy communities.

Professor Wilson, who has just completed a year of study on urban crime, addressed himself to that problem. He said that "crime in the streets" does exist and is a problem for all groups but especially for city-dwellers. For example, while the rate of murder in the country as a whole has decreased in cities it is up by a factor of three to four. He said "the police cannot handle the problem" and that the "correctional system" offers the only hope for alleviation.

A short question period followed during which Professor Wilson admitted that most policemen, both white and Negroes, are actuated by anti-black prejudice.

Coffee Hour, Discussion, Film Presented By VISTA to Explain Aspects of Program

By SHARON SAMUELS
Staff Reporter

"VISTA'S Volunteers are out to change the attitude of the people they are working with from one of apathy to one of hope," stated Randy Kinder, one of the three field representatives here on campus. This is the main purpose of VISTA.

Among the events scheduled for this week by VISTA is a discussion and coffee hour to be held on Thursday at 4:00 p.m. This discussion is open to anyone who is interested in knowing more about VISTA or who has questions concerning it.

"Gadfly in the Ghetto," a short film depicting the actual work and life of VISTA Volunteers in Harlem and the Lower East Side of New York City, is being shown daily in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union at 10 a.m., and 2 and 4 p.m.

What do VISTA Volunteers do?

Volunteers work with people mainly in a "one to one relationship," according to Kinder. They live among the people they work with and they live in the same manner as they do. They communicate with these people on their own level. In essence, they become one of the people they are working with.

From their position, they attempt to change the attitude of the people, motivating them to make improvements in their situation. The way in which this is done is important.

According to Carol Karman '68 of UMass, who worked as a VISTA Volunteer last summer, improvements were made in a way that was "organized around an issue that the people considered important, not that we considered important." VISTA Volunteers are actually fighting the "War on Poverty" from a grass roots position, according to Kinder. They are helping people fight the problems of poverty at their source.

Where do VISTA Volunteers serve?

Volunteers work among the poor in cities and towns, and in rural areas by participating in "community action programs." They serve in migrant worker projects and on American Indian reservations. They work with the mentally ill and retarded. They work in connection with the Job Corps.

Randy Kinder, a graduate of Howard University in Washington D.C., now doing graduate work towards a Masters Degree, worked as a VISTA Volunteer for a year. Between his junior and senior years at college, he served in Denver, Colorado on the "Denver Juvenile Court Project."

Carol Karman, a UMass senior, worked last summer with other VISTAS as a volunteer in Appalachia. Their work was to organize the people around a community issue and to get them to take a voice in the local government.

What are the requirements?

The only requirement for a VISTA Volunteer is that he be at least 18 years old. The main skill a Volunteer needs to have is that he be able to communicate easily with others, according to Kinder. He should be able and willing to ta' with people, not at them. He should be able to make an individual feel important and to give him a sense of self-esteem.

What are the rewards? ....

Volunteers receive a monthly allowance plus a fifty dollar stipend that is paid in a lump sum at the end of their services. However, it is personal gain in areas other than that of money that is of real importance for a Volunteer.

He is able to feel that he is doing something constructive and worthwhile with himself and his time by fighting in the "War on Poverty." He can feel that he is accomplishing something at the same time he is coming to understand himself and others better.

Rather than sitting back and reading about or ignoring an important problem here in the United States, he is actually doing something concrete to alleviate it.

New Guard Primary Picks Rockefeller and McCarthy

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

The New Guard has announced results of yesterday's "first in the nation primary" held in the Student Union lobby.

1554 students and faculty voted in the election which New Guard member Wayne Soini (and coordinator of vote counting) stated he believed to be "the largest balloting ever held on campus."

Winner of the Republican Presidential Primary was Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York by more than a 2-1 margin over former V. Pres. Richard Nixon.

In the Democratic Primary Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota won by an equal margin over Pres. Lyndon Johnson.

In accordance with these results the New Guard vice president, Arthur Levesque, sent telegrams to Rockefeller and McCarthy Headquarters, which read: "The New Guard extends congratulations on the U Mass Presidential Primary results today."

The campus student political group has also announced that a change has been made in the date of the upcoming runoff elections from this Thursday until March 12. The reason given was "in order to allow McCarthy and and Rockefeller groups to set up tables in support of their candidates."

In addition to the presidential primary, the ballots also included questions on recruitment on campus by the "military-industrial complex" and on United States involvement in Vietnam.

60% of the total voters cast disagreement with American presence in the Vietnam conflict, many filling in blank spaces with such answers as "I am honestly quite confused about the war."

An overwhelming majority voted in favor of recruitment on the campus, however.

Among the interesting aspects of the voting was the popular response to the name of TV comedian Pat Paulson (Smothers Brothers Show). An advertisement by the Ad Hoc committee for S. T. A. G. Party candidate was run in Tuesday's Collegian urging students to "vote for write-in candidate Pat Paulson for President."

The New Guard stated it had no knowledge or explanation of the Ad.

Guard member Soini told the Collegian that he believed the election revealed the "seriousness with which the students voted, in that there were very few wasted votes and nonsensical write-ins. And also, in that as far as our records appear to indicate, no one voted twice, even under a partial honor system."

The figures of the primary are as follows:

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Delegates at a meeting of Communist parties are drafting a final communique calling for a world Communist conference in Moscow to strengthen unity against imperialism, Zoltan Komocsin said Monday.

The chief delegate of the host Hungarian Communist party told a news conference the Moscow meeting would be limited to that aim.

Reports had circulated that some delegations, led by the Soviets, wanted the final communique to censure Romania, which opposes a world meeting and walked out of the conference here Thursday. Other delegations, led by the Italian Communist party, opposed any censure.

Komocsin said the final communique must be approved by all, meaning the Italians had a veto power over the censure of Romania.

Kellogg Foundation Grant To Support Negro Colleges

The Kellogg Foundation has awarded a $50,000 grant to the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges for a project to help increase private support of predominantly Negro public colleges and universities. The grant was announced today at a meeting of the Association's Executive Committee in Washington, D.C.

The grant will provide $25,000 a year for two years to support a development office to be established in Atlanta, Georgia, on behalf of the nation's 35 public Negro institutions. The remainder of the supporting funds for the new office will come from other private sources.

The office's functions would include gathering information about these institutions, organizing workshops and internships to help train development officers, presenting their case to potential donors, and other activities, designed to focus on their need for greater support.

Commenting on the grant, NASULGC President W. Clarke Wescoe, Chancellor of the University of Kansas, said: "This is one of the most important ventures on which this Association has ever embarked. These institutions have provided educational opportunity for the majority of our Negro college graduates. They have been poorly financed, particularly in respect of their inability to establish substantial sources of private support."

The 1967 enrollment of predominantly Negro public colleges and universities stands at about 90,000 students. Less than one per cent of the income of these institutions comes from private support.

McCarthy Wants To Meet Johnson In Direct Debate

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, candidate for the Democratic nomination in the Apr. 30 Massachusetts Presidential Primary, called for a direct confrontation between himself and Pres. Johnson. Speaking as he left for further campaigning in New Hampshire for the Democratic presidential nomination, Sen. McCarthy said:

"Tomorrow Pres. Johnson will decide whether to ask the Democratic State Chairman not to enter his name as a candidate in the Massachusetts Primary. I would welcome his decision to enter and the opportunity for direct debate. I can think of no more appropriate state in which to ask the people whether they want to return to the principles of President John F. Kennedy."

Device to Aid Deaf Children Developed by Engineering Prof

By M. ELLEN MacKENZIE

Dr. Thomas, who was appointed to the faculty of the Electrical Engineering Department at UMass last September, told a Collegian Reporter in an interview about his research. He has worked briefly in industry, but prefers the freedom of the professor's life.

"There is a precise definition of problems in industry vs. the flexibility of the college professor. Industry demands a machine that will do such and such a thing, but in college research they tell us to do research in a broad area." Dr. Thomas stated that he preferred the theoretical approach of a professor vs. the experimental approach of industry.

When asked if he felt that the profession of engineering would be reduced in the future, Dr. Thomas stated: "The role of the engineer in the future will be the 'pure scientist' approach similar to the field of physics. It will be nearly impossible to distinguish the fields of physics and engineering in the future."

Dr. Thomas is interested in the area of speech and its intelligible factors. He has recently completed a machine which he hopes will be a success in aiding deaf children to learn to speak. The machine is based on "visual feedback," lights which are placed strategically across the vision board and tell the child how far away from the desired vowel his efforts are.

The machine shows tongue position—high, low, back, front, and is dependent upon any type of sound the child makes. For children who are less deaf, Dr. Thomas' speech machine uses what he calls "residual hearing," shifting higher frequencies into the useable range.

There is a limited amount of sound which the child is able to produce, and he can relate this sound to the vision board.

"There are several advantages of the machine," Dr. Thomas stated. "The distance to the goal can be recognized by the child, and there is no emotional hang-up between child and therapist."

Dr. Thomas said that the primary weakness of speech machines for the deaf in the past has been "using too much visual information and too complicated a visual pattern, which confuse the child." His machine keeps the visual information clear and at a minimum.

The important significance of the entire scheme, is that "it may put the speech therapist out of the scene a bit," grinned the professor.

Dr. Thomas is originally from Australia. His undergraduate study was done at the University of Sidney, and graduate level study was done at the University of Illinois.

Senate Adds Anti-riot Provision

WASHINGTON (AP)— The Senate nailed an antiriot provision into its civil rights bill Tuesday and then refused to exempt individual home owners from a ban on discrimination in the sale or rental of housing.

Over administration protests, the Senate adopted 82-13 an amendment providing for a 5-year prison term and a $10,000 fine for crossing state lines with intent to start a riot.

Then by the narrow margin of 48-43 it rejected an amendment by Sen. Howard H. Baker, Jr., R-Tenn., which would have removed about 29 million owner-occupied single-family dwellings, or about 44% of the housing market, from the anti-discrimination clause.

As now written, the bill provides that effective Jan. 1, 1970, owner-occupants of single-family homes may not discriminate if they sell through a real estate agent or broker. If they handled the sale themselves they would be free to discriminate.

Loyalty Oath Challenged

Two arguments will probably dominate in the consideration of the challenge by a UMass instructor of the constitutionality of the Massachusetts state employees' loyalty oath. The first is that the oath—to uphold and defend the constitution of the United States and Massachusetts and to oppose the overthrow of the national and state governments by force, violence, or any illegal or unconstitutional method—is a denial of the First Amendment guaranteeing free speech. The second argument is that the oath violates the Fifth Amendment in denying the due process maxim that presumes innocence until guilt is proven.

The oath, and it would seem any oath, does violate the bill of rights in denying a presumption of innocence. This ground is sufficient to oppose the oath provided that, as discussed below, the requirements of the whole society do not outweigh this individual liberty.

The Massachusetts state employees' oath in no way infringes upon the freedom of speech. For freedom of speech is part of a democratic society, but no one part of the Constitution may be employed to destroy the whole Constitution and the whole democracy. However, those contemplating extension of free thought to the point of defiance of the respective constitutions or illegal overthrows of the government would not be deterred by having to take the oath.

The possible justification for the oath is the right of a democracy to protect and perpetuate itself. For a democracy to allow those who wish to destroy it to use or abuse democratic methods or to do so by illegal methods is sheer madness. As Walter Lippmann expressed it: "Men may not use the facilities of liberty to impair them." However, whenever any measure is to be accepted for the good of the democracy, it must be examined for flaws and alternative means to accomplish the same end must be evaluated.

In this case, a glaring flaw in the oath method is that it denies a presumption of innocence. Secondly, there are many alternative and more effective means of protecting our democracy against subversion.

Because it is not needed, it is imperative that we rescind or have declared invalid the law requiring an oath of loyalty of all employees of the state. For us to keep faith with the delicate balance between individual rights and self-imposed, lawful limits to the exercise of individual rights, it is essential to remove this law from the books.

Channeling Campus Dissent

Why call the group Sufi? Anyone majoring in early Arabic History or who was familiar with non-Western religion and philosophy might tell you that the Sufists were an ascetic sect of Islam, otherworldly men who practiced a philosophy of transcendental mysticism. However, as it regards encouraging student activity and perpetuating student awareness, the term Sufi can be loosely interpreted, "no hang-ups."

Sufi is an apolitical organization —to provide a non-suppressive, unhung-up intermediary of expression, it must be. Sufi's claim of no hang-ups can be best clarified by an example:

On-campus recruiting, especially by concerns such as Dow Chemical and the United States Armed Forces, has been a matter of general concern around campus. Recruiters have come to the University, set up recruiting tables, or held conferences and interviews; vocal opposition to such recruiting has argued and continues to argue that they should be kept off campus. Suppose Dow Chemical and the Armed Forces recruiters were banned from on-campus recruiting, what would be accomplished? Such a ban would prove to be of little value; an impressive show of power, but not an intelligent use of power.

Rather than fortify the University, it would undermine the true principles of education! The Dow Chemical Corporation and the U. S. Armed Forces are for better or worse, a real part of the world, not so much evils in themselves, but rather part of a greater world problem. Such problems must be dealt with seriously and rationally; how can people who believe in freedom of expression, especially those who now so vehemently protest the existing censorship laws and decency codes, justifiably resort to such tactics? How convinced can a man be of his beliefs if he must suppress opposite points of view?

McCarthy-ites Unite!

To the editor:

The New Hampshire presidential primary is scheduled for Tuesday, March 12, 1968. Last week-end over twenty college students from Cornell University in New York, plus others from institutions in Vermont and Massachusetts, volunteered their help at the Keene McCarthy for President Headquarters. An even larger group of college volunteers are expected for this coming week-end, the last one before the primary. Efforts will be made to find local housing for the volunteers Saturday night.

Student volunteers will be used for person to person contacts in Keene and the surrounding towns. Due to financial problems volunteer help is very important in the New Hampshire campaign since the Senator cannot afford the massive mailings to the voters traditional in such campaigns. Student volunteers should be clean-cut, and neatly dressed to make a good impression for the Senator. Far-out and radical outfits on student volunteers are not desired by the Keene McCarthy Headquarters. In other words, hippies are of little help in the McCarthy campaign in New Hampshire, which is a very conservative state.

At least one car will be leaving the Student Union building for Keene at 9.30 A.M. on Saturday. The training that can be gained this week-end will be valuable in the Massachusetts presidential primary which will be held on April 30. Interested students should contact the:

The Daily Collegian welcomes comments from candidates entered in Thursday's election. The letters should not exceed twenty-five typewritten lines, double-spaced.

Hospitality for Arab Students Lacking

The Arab students in the four College area have devoted their energies recently to planning an Arab Banquet, in the hope of acquainting Americans with their culture and heritage. We hoped this event would lead to mutual understanding, as well as American appreciation of our heritage and aspirations.

In return, our posters are being removed from the dorms and buildings on Campus. The poster at the Student Union has been removed three times, and the name of the speaker crossed out. We do not have material evidence to accuse any group of such acts. Those who differ with us must have a certain honor and standard to uphold. The Zionist Organization, with whom we differ, held many activities and we never attempted to harass them or remove their posters. On the contrary, we attended their events and listened to their point of view.

This is the country of freedom of speech and meeting. We as guests here expect Americans to uphold these principles, and give us the opportunity to work for better understanding.

Faik Ali Abdul-Rasool
President, Arab Students Organization

Crash Diets Are a "Waist" of Time

Belts Are Back, Waists Are In

Fasten your belts—fashion's heading toward the waist land. The dominance of the A-line is over; no longer can you hide that "thickened" waist, that ripply midriff (more than one knuckle's depth of skin in that area indicates pure flab).

What's to be done, then, now that you're going to have to show you have a waist again? Fortunately the waist is one area of the body that responds quickly and satisfactorily to efforts to reduce it. Diet and exercise, the usual means of reduction, are most likely to gain results and lose inches.

The most sensible diet, both for your health and for lasting effects, is simply to stop eating—not everything, but those snacks, deserts, and extras that you know are weight-adders, superfluous food, mere indulgence.

Cleverly, keep snacks in your dorm room, in the dorm refrigerator: not goodies like cookies, nuts, candy, but snacks you know are good for you, that you can have without feeling guilty when you get that undeniable craving for something to eat (it's all in your mind anyway, keep telling yourself)—a hard boiled egg, apples, crunchy vegetables, a little cheese, a few raisins, diet fruit cocktail, diet cola.

When it comes to actually eating a meal (and don't skip them especially a high-protein breakfast, or you'll lose ground by compensating, rationalizing), make every dish a big choice. Easy enough to do if you really concentrate: a great big salad, meatloaf without sauce, fish instead of macaroni-and-cheese, two green or yellow vegetables instead of potatoes and a roll, fruit for dessert instead of cake (if possible with dining commons cuisine). And remember those snacks back in your room if you withstood the pressures of starches and sugars and walked away from the table a bit hungry.

Exercise is the second part of the waistline campaign. The old tried-and-true "stand with legs apart, arms outspread, twist torso from side to side," and "stand with legs apart, bend one arm over the head, slide the other down your leg as far as you can," and "touch your toes," and "put on an old record and do the twist," have been attempted by most everyone.

The thing to remember is that they work; the waistline is very susceptible to determination, so be positive and do them faithfully — for at least two weeks

Only a month and you'll be in the waist land; two months of campaigning and you'll be a full-fledged citizen. You'll be eligible for a whole new world of body-fitting fashion.

Facts on Figures

— True or false ?

• You can melt away extra pounds by wearing special tight plastic blouses and slacks.

• You can buy an electrical device for effortless reducing that is a convenient, pleasant, comfortable and relaxing form of exercise resulting in substantial weight and girth reduction.

• There are pills that allow you to "lose 54 pounds of ugly, dangerous fat in only three short months" while eating all the spaghetti, malted milks and pizza you want.

False is the answer to each of these questions, according to the American Society of Bariatrics — the association of physicians who specialize in weight reduction.

Losing Money Not Weight

Americans spend more than $250,000.00 each year for a fantastic array of easy weight reduction schemes and these "treatments" of obesity are perhaps the fastest growing form of medical quackery there is!

It cannot be overemphasized that overweight is a medical problem, capable of control by medical means, not by self-addinistered crash diets, fad foods and magic pills.

According to Dr. Norman C. Joliffe of the New York City Dept. of Health, "At least 90% of all the people who lost weight on a diet proceed to gain it right back, and usually they gain more than they have lost."

For the vast majority of people, there is no royal road to slimness, short of the necessary change in eating habits accompanied by an increase in activity.

Certain medication is used only as a crutch when needed to help the patient improve his eating habits. Weight reducing pills should never be taken unless the individual is under the direct supervision of a physician and should never become a permanent way of life.

A Woman's Perogative

Expanding the Mind—Exercising the Body

By HELEN KENSICK

"Physical education is not all at the graduate level here." The study of physical education entails a far more diversified and broader curriculum than many people imagine.

Mary Anderson, a 21 year old woman who has studied extensively in several areas at UMass, has learned through participation in the field of physical education that games and sports are only one part of this rapidly expanding field.

Miss Anderson is working on her master's degree in physical education at UMass and is presently a teaching assistant in this department.

MARY ANDERSON

At age 16, Miss Anderson began her studies in medicine at UMass. She then excercised the prerogative of every woman—changed her mind, and went on to get a bachelor's degree in political science.

A broken wrist that wasn't properly set influenced her to study medicine. The study and use of animals in laboratories, where experiments were performed over and over again to support scientific hypotheses and which brought no new knowledge to the field of medicine, were wasteful and cruel to her.

Miss Anderson then decided that she was not interested in medicine, and she turned her attentions to government and political science.

Although she someday hoped to go to law school, she felt at the time of her graduation in 1966, that her educational background in political science would not enable her to expand significantly in that field. She then seriously considered the Peace Corps but decided to continue her education first.

The search for a worthwhile career-orientated major ended quite happily for her in physical education. Her interest in sports prompted this. To her surprise, she found varied and difficult science courses in the curriculum. Miss Anderson is now quite content in her choice, and consequently has developed a great deal of respect for the field.

Because it is a new field, she has found it to be open and challenging, with a good opportunity to become outstanding by doing good work. She is particularly excited by the great amount of research that can be and is being developed in physical education today.

Miss Anderson's varied educational background has given her a great deal more than a bachelor's degree in political science and a master's degree in physical education. Her acquired knowledge seeps rather subtly into everyday life. Her background in political science enables her to read a newspaper with far more understanding and depth.

Miss Anderson feels that her general interests reflect the value of her education, because she has the ability to become deeply interested in many more things. She has been exposed to those subtle aspects of a college education that inevitably develop articulation, sophistication, and a certain amount of poise.

Miss Anderson is glad she decided to teach physical education, because she finds it personally satisfying to help people to learn a new and better way to participate in athletics, while at the same time, she herself is learning through the expanding research in physical education.

G. Bernard Shaw Collection Donated to Smith College

The distinguished George Bernard Shaw Collection assembled by the late Willard A. Baldwin, of Baltimore and New York, has just been received as a gift to the Rare Book Room of the William Allan Neilson Library, Smith College. The donors, Mrs. Isabel Bruce Baldwin Nichols, widow of the collector, and his daughter and son, Juliet Baldwin Taylor and Willard A. Baldwin, Jr., have made the presentation in Mr. Baldwin's memory. Mrs. Nichols' daughter, Mary Ellen Nichols Fahs, was graduated from Smith in 1958; Mrs. Taylor's daughter, Juliet S. Taylor, in 1967.

The Shaw collection of 259 items consists of first editions of Shaw's works, including magazine and newspaper articles, and books with letters, prefaces or introductions by him; biographies and bibliographies; and a 7-page carbon typescript, "The Interlude at 'The Playhouse', with some holograph corrections in ink. Its special value for research rests in the excellent coverage of the early years of his career, his controversial journalistic writings, and the pieces in which he promoted and publicized himself and advanced his own reputation. This phase of his biography has not been adequately covered.

The collection is particularly welcome at Smith as a major addendum to the Irish Literary Renaissance collection of Herbert Hitchen which was purchased last year. Previously known in the book world as the Willard A. Baldwin G.B. Shay Collection, it will retain its name in its new quarters with an appropriate bookplate in each volume indicating the memorial nature of the gift, with names of donors.

SGA Working to Revise Senate's Constitution

By MARIE ROBERTS

Student Power, the issue that is becoming a major cause of student unrest on many U.S. campuses, has come to the University of Massachusetts.

During the mass meeting of the student body on Feb. 19, some members of the Ad Hoc committee said that Student power implies student responsibility. On this campus, the Student Senate is trying to fulfill this responsibility by serving the students as their recognized representative.

With this obligation in mind, Senator Frederic Hartwell, chairman of the Student Government Affairs Committee (SGA), has reported that SGA is working to revise the Student Government Association Constitution. It is this constitution that gives the Student Senate its authority.

According to Hartwell, "The present Constitution was written over 20 years ago when the Student Senate was the only government on campus. With the creation of residence hall and area governments, the role of the Student Senate has to be re-examined."

One of the major issues involved in the change is the role and power of the class administrations. Are the classes social committees or legitimate governing bodies?

What a class administration should be and what it may reasonably be expected to be are also questions that are being debated.

The strength and role of the Student Senate executive is also being examined. There are two possible systems, the parliamentary form and the so-called American system.

Under the parliamentary form, the president is elected from the legislative body and is answerable to it. The American system is a system of checks and balances.

Each system has its advantages. The American form encourages student interest in elections and provides a check on the Senate.

Arguments for the parliamentary form include that the Senate is large enough to check itself. Furthermore, the parliamentary form allows for faster action. If, under the American system, the president and the Senate were to disagree during a crisis on which immediate action would have to be taken, student welfare might suffer.

"The parliamentary form is now being used and will probably remain so," Hartwell said.

Another issue being discussed is the amendatory procedures for the Constitution. Should class administrations be included? The supremacy of the Student Senate and in what areas is also being debated.

The SGA committee will give its report on the document in the beginning of March. The Constitution will then be presented in a series of constitutional conventions where a vote will be taken. The vote of the constitutional convention is final subject to a referendum.

"It looks like the new Constitution will be fairly generally accepted and a vote may not be necessary", said Hartwell. However, it's really too soon to tell."

Rocky Withdraws; Ignores Refiling Deadline in Wisconsin

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — Gov. Nelson Rockefeller bypassed a chance Tuesday, as he said he would, to put his name back on the Wisconsin presidential preference primary ballot April 2.

The 5 p.m. deadline passed with no word from the New York governor that he wanted Wisconsin Secretary of State Robert Zimmerman to withdraw the disclaimer that Rockefeller had filed after he originally was named to the ballot Feb. 6.

Withdrawals from the GOP primary by Rockefeller, Michigan Gov. George Romney and Illinois Sen. Charles Percy reduced the field for the April voting to three Republicans and two Democrats.

DVP and Hillel to Sponsor Wiesel Lecture March 11

Elie Wiesel, author, survivor and chronicler of the Nazi concentration camps, will present a lecture at the University of Massachusetts under the co-sponsorship of the Distinguished Visitors Program and the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation.

The topic of Wiesel's lecture will be AFTER AUSCHWITZ—CAN WE STILL BELIEVE, to take place on Monday, March 11, 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

Born in Hungary in 1928, Elie Wiesel was deported to Auschwitz and after the liberation made his way to Paris, later to Israel and ultimately to New York where he presently resides.

A distinguished novelist, Mr. Wiesel has been the recipient of the B'nai B'rith's Jewish Heritage Award for Excellence in Literature, the Prix Rivarol in Paris, the National Jewish Book Council Award, the Remembrance Award of the World Federation of the Bergen-Belsen Association, and numerous other literary awards both here and abroad. His most recent book, The Jews of Silence, a personal report on Soviet Jewry, was serialized in the Saturday Evening Post.

Other books by Mr. Wiesel include Night, Dawn, The Accident, The Town Beyond the Wall, and The Gates of the Forest. He is also the author of a new play dealing with Soviet Jewry which is soon to be produced in Paris and New York.

A limited selection of Wiesel's books are now available at the Hillel Office, Student Union, for those wishing to purchase them.

Wiesel will give a second lecture on Tuesday, March 12, at Smith College, under the joint sponsorship of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation of Smith and Amherst Colleges, the Northampton Jewish Cultural Center and the Helen Hills Hills Chapel.

Mathias Ranks High on List Of Recent Freshman Scorers

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
Sports
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1968
Page 8 Vol. XCVI, No. 100

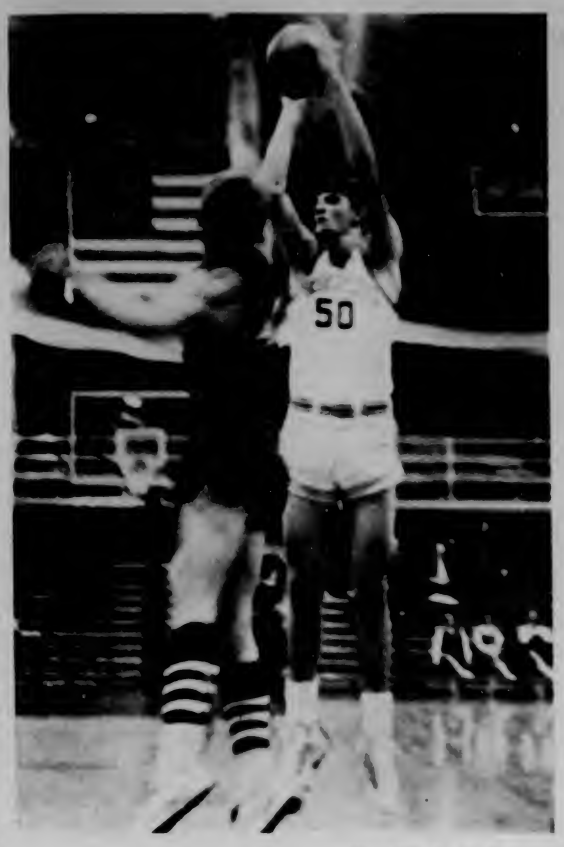
By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

There have been some great basketball players through the years at UMass, who began their careers in sparkling fashion playing freshman basketball. However, Ken Mathias, of this year's frosh edition, scored 336 points to pass all players save one in recent years, for points scored in a season.

The only performer to surpass Mathias' total in this decade, was the great Tim Edwards, who in his freshman season of 1962-63 scored 342 points, averaging 20.6 in leading his team to a 12-5 record. Also on the '62-63 freshman team was Don Gamble, who averaged 17.6 points before leaving school for academic reasons.

It has held true in past years that the freshman leaders have for the most part, been the varsity stars later. In the 1960-61 frosh season, Rodger Twitchell scored 199 points, averaging 15.3 as his frosh team finished 8-5. Twitchell, of course went on to place fourth in all-time UMass scoring.

The next season of 1961-62 brought to the Redmen a new freshman figure who was destined to be the school's all-time scoring leader. He was Clarence Hill, whose first season at UMass saw him score 283 points, on the way to a 13-1 season.



Following the '62-'63 season mentioned, came a crop of frosh led by the scoring of Jim Babyak, who scored 220 points, while Mike Meola scored 192 points, as this freshman edition finished 8-5.

1964-65 saw the coming of two of the finest freshman players ever to perform at UMass. One went on to stardom while the other passed into obscurity. Bill Tindall scored 216 points in this season, on a team that went over the 100 mark three times while posting a 10-3 mark. Mike Bernard in only six games scored 115 points. Tindall, of course, capped a sensational career Saturday as he became the second highest scorer in UMass history. Bernard meanwhile left school due to scholastic difficulties and has never been heard from again.

The '65-'66 frosh, although producing Joe DiSarcina, Peter Gayeska, John Dreyer and John Shockro, were led by Mike Gemei, who scored 195 points. Gemei left the varsity the next year.

Last year's Little Redmen were not surprisingly led by this year's sophomore star, Ray Ellerbrook, who scored 245 points, while averaging 16.3. Jack Gallagher averaged 12.5 while Dick Samulson averaged ten.

Mathias' 336 point output therefore stands as only the second 300 plus performance by a UMass freshman in this decade. His 17.7 average is also the second highest. Jim Ryan followed Mathias this season with 253 points and a 13.3 average.

Second Baseball Clinic Is Saturday

On this coming Saturday, March 9, at 9 a.m., the Second Annual UMass Baseball Clinic will be held. Last year the clinic proved extremely popular, attracting over 100 high school coaches and over 500 high school players.

Dick Bergquist and Al Barber, Redmen baseball coaches, will conduct the clinic utilizing the Yankee Conference Championship varsity team for demonstrations.

The first session will start at 9:30, following registration, and will deal with the "Fundamentals of Hitting." This will be followed by "Building a Pitching Staff" and "Catching."

After lunch at a campus Dining Commons, the Clinic will gather for the afternoon sessions at the Boyden Physical Education Building. A taped television film will show the Redmen team during early session practice, followed at 2 p.m. with the "The Sacrifice Bunt-Offense and Defense."

The last session will be "The First and Third Situation-Offense and Defense." The Clinic will end at 3:30 p.m.

All high school and prep school players and coaches are invited to attend. Also invited are other coaches from teams such as Junior Varsity, Junior High American Legion, and Babe Ruth Leagues. In addition, all interested students may come. Special parking will be available in Area No. 5, adjacent to the Boyden Building

Red Sox Practice Five Hours For First Intrasquad Contest

WINTER HAVEN, Fla (AP) — The Boston Red Sox were sent through their longest workout of the training season—nearly 5 hours—Tuesday in preparation for their first intrasquad game today.

Manager Dick Williams named the starting line - ups for the teams to be directed by coaches Eddie Popowski and Bobby Doerr, surprising many observers.

The "Popowskis" appear to have a big edge with the possible starters, except for the pitcher, for the American League opener next month. The team includes Tony Conigliaro in right field and Carl Yastrzemski in left.

The "Doerrs" were made up of reserves and rookies, but Williams predicted jokingly they would win.

"They'll win because they're a hungrier team," the manager said with tongue in cheek. "I predict they'll win more than they lose."

Rookies Dick Hoban and Mike Jackson were named to pitch for the "Doerrs" against Bill Landis and Ivy Washington.

Yastrzemski, who has been rounding into shape slowly, announced that he plans to start in the exhibition season opener against the Chicago White Sox at Sarasota, Fla., Friday. Conigliaro, coming back from an eye injury, said he hopes to play.

DiSarcina On ECAC All-Star Team

Redman backcourt ace Joe DiSarcina was among the players chosen for this week's Eastern College Athletic Conference Divison I all star basketball team.

DiSarcina, selected for his fine performances in UMass victories over Northeastern and BU, was joined on the star squad by U-Conn's Bill Corley, the key man in the Huskies' upset of Rhode Island. It was this big victory that enabled the Redmen to tie the Rams for the championship of the Yankee Conference.

EDWARD LOGUE

DVP to Present Edward Logue Tonite

With a 10 yr career in public service as assistant to Governor and later Ambassador Chester Bowles and with the development of renewal programs for New Haven and Boston to his credit, Edward J. Logue will speak from experience about "The City and Urban Renewal" tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. This lecture is the fourth event in the symposium, The American City: 1968 and Tomorrow, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Robert Weaver, Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, described the New Haven program as "coming closest to our dream of a slumless city." Boston's urban renewal program has so far involved 10 major projects. It included the planning and execution of 3 large residential rehabilitation projects, three downtown projects combining clearance and rehabilitation, and a downtown neighborhood rehabilitation project. Over a seven year period, the Boston Redevelopment Authority has brought over $200,000,000 in Federal redevelopment funds to Boston.

Student Senate to Investigate Possible Forensic Fund Misuse

Ronald J. Matlon, Faculty Advisor of the Forensic Society and Assistant Professor of Speech, was verbally charged, at last evening's Student Senate meeting with falsifying receipts for a debating trip to Emory University on Nov. 1, 1967.

A resolution presented by John Dubois, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, stated the Emory University trip as one definite example, and mentioned evidence "that this falsification has occured on numerous occasions in the past."

The resolution, prepared by Senators Fred Hartwell and John Dubois, called for a full investigation by the Ways and Means Committee of receipts incurred by the Forensic Society, and a specific report to be submitted on the Georgia trip at the next Senate meeting.

The resolution calls for "the funds of the Forensic Society (to) be frozen until the report of the Ways and Means Committee is received by the Senate." Because of the upcoming New York tournament, an amendment was introduced by Sen. John Dubois, originator of the resolution, to allow funds to move freely.

In rebuttal, Senators Needle, Beharry, Gurwitz, and Marcus urged that the funds be frozen and stressed the importance of each member of the Forensic Society knowing the actions of the group. Marcus called the question (the vote) and the entire resolution, with funds stopped, was voted unanimously!

STUDENT SENATE FINANCE RULING

SATF Monies shall not be used to finance faculty or staff members for any personal or departmental trips or conferences. Neither will SATF monies be used for any expenses incurred by such persons on trips or conferences in their capacity as advisors to SATF supported organizations, unless specifically approved by the Student Senate.

Two specific cases were revealed stating "deliberately falsified receipts." The first consisted of two hotel copies where names of the inhabitants of the room were cut off. Verification of who actually inhabited the rooms was presented from one hotel as Ronald Matlon. The hotel is being contacted for the needed information. Additional evidence were copies of two airplane receipts having $55.20 (cost of each student at Special Student Fare) crossed out and $110.40 written over.

The Forensic Society has previously explained that an airplane delay caused this additional charge. Senators Dubois and Hartwell commented that airplane oficials had been contacted and the cost was $55.20 for each of the two passengers.

The Collegian contacted Mr. Matlon who stated that "I know so little about it, I have no comment at all."

Fast for Peace Ends At Smith College

By MICHAEL BRADLEY
Staff Reporter

The "fast for peace" on the Smith College campus ended last night at 6 p.m. as planned. Co-chairman Kathryn Greene called the fast a "taste of commitment."

Over 1700 persons participated in the protest, including five faculty members. Included were 74 per cent of the Smith student body, either fasting or wearing white armbands in sympathy. The United States commitment in Viet Nam was the cause of the protest.

Both co-chairmen Kathryn Greene and Margo Stein agreed that the demonstration was successful. "It has provoked a great deal of discussion on campus," stated Miss Greene. "It showed that we could work together successfully for a worthwhile cause." Miss Greene went on to express the view that many of the fasters would go on to work for Democratic peace candidate Eugene McCarthy, both in the New Hampshire primary and in this state. Many students plan to initiate anti-war letter writing campaigns in their home towns during the spring vacation.

Miss Stein stated that the demonstration arose out of concern for the "deterioration of American interests in Viet Nam." She emphasized that the fast was "a gesture. It was catalyst to initiate real political action." In her opinion, the demonstration did this. Any reaction against the protest was "inarticulate and inactive," Miss Greene added. At a spontaneous meeting at the close of the fast, it was decided that the group would work to raise money to aid hospital patients of both North and South Viet Nam.

Fire Traps Salt Miners

CALUMET, La. (AP) — Fire in the shaft trapped 21 men somewhere in the vast white caverns of a coastal salt mine Wednesday. Rescue work was stymied for hours by lack of equipment.

The last desperate word from below: "Pull up the cage!" It was too late. Flames cut communications and burned out the elevator hoisting gear.

Firemen ferried in from Morgan City hosed water down the vertical shaft—a straight fall of 1,200 feet—the only entrance to mine levels branching off at various depths. Though steam and smoke continued to rise from the Cargill mine for hours afterward, the water apparently doused the fire.

Citizens Peace Corps Founder To Speak at Student Union

By NEAL NOVAK
Staff Reporter

"Positive constructiveness" in the American mind will be the theme stressed by the Revitalization Corps Tues., March 12, in the Middlesex Room at the Student Union from 8 to 12 p.m. Edward T. Coll, National Director of the Corps, will address the students in an effort to recruit people for this organization and the University's newly formed chapter.

The riot-torn cities and their quiet, comfortable suburbs often seem separated by invisible but impenetrable walls of apathy and indifference. But much that appears to be apathy is really ignorance. Many genuinely well-motivated persons are at a loss to know what they can do in an immediate, personal way to reach the slum child or the violence-prone teen-ager or the family in the city that is of another color and another cultural background.

Moved by the death of President John F. Kennedy, Ned Coll, a former teacher and public relations man, began the corp's operations June 22, 1964 in Hartford, Conn. Coll, a native of Hartford, had the idea while visiting his cousin, Eamon DeValera, president of Ireland, at President Kennedy's funeral.

The Corps is a citizen peace corps organization comprised of volunteers of all races and creeds, both career people and students alike, who donate their time to aide the poor, the illiterate, immates of jails, bed-ridden people, and others who are in need of help. The volunteers working in the program do so without leaving their regular occupations or educational pursuits. Among the Corp's better known members are historian Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., and Betty Furness. The Corps has also been recently endorsed by New York Senator Robert F. Kennedy.

Volunteers in this non-political, non-sectarian movement are proving that a united effort among citizens of different ages and ethnic backgrounds is the key to combating the apathy, lethargy and negativism that is crippling the American mind. Structurally, it is an effort to construct stronger human ties between cities, suburbs and universities.

Recently, Mr. Coll began a program in the jails in an attempt to reach the inmates and to help them realize that "they are better than they think they are".

New chapters, having been formed in the fall of 1967 at Boston College, Regis College, Yale University, City College of New York and Westfield, New Jersey,

Dean Allen Plans to Revamp Ed Curriculum

by KATHY SMITH

Behind every progressive curriculum there is an energetic, foresighted dean. In the School of Education that man is Dwight Allen.

He has recently arrived from Stanford University with the aim to make the U Mass teacher training program one of the best in the country.

"By September '69 students will see the first results of the year of re-evaluation which just began in January," says the 37 yr. old Dean who arrived Jan. 2.

Dean Allen is doing great things for the School of Education. As chairman of the Initial Planning Executive Committee, he aims to completely "rethink the process of education" in order to eliminate unnecessary programs.

"For Example," he says, "can you remember the capital of So. Dakota? Much time is spent in elementary school memorizing facts like this. More time should be spent learning how to research the answer."

Dean Allen's concern is how to instruct teachers how to be most effective. After this year of study, his planning committee will recommend new "performance criteria" for student teachers.

Dean Allen and his committee want to "weed out the irrelevant" content in educational programs in order to make education more functional.

Changes will gradually occur in the UM teacher training program. Dean Allen says, "We want to remove only those things that can no longer be justified as useful."

The students will be asked to give opinions and criticisms about the present program. No date has been set as to when they will be asked, but the new Dean intends to consult them.

With the energy of this exceptional man behind its new year of planning, the School of Education is on its way to becoming tops in the country.

SALT MINERS . . .

tained breathing apparatus, similar to scuba diving gear, were ordered flown in.

Officials said there wasn't much flammable material in the mine tunnels but timbers and plywood brace the shaft at seven-foot intervals.

"I think the men will make it," said Arthur Olivier, foreman of the day shift. "They have 11 oxygen bottles down there. The mine is so big they could have possibly escaped the fire."

What caused the fire?" "There is lots of guessing but we have no idea and we may never know" said Tonnemaker. "There are electrical lines down there that could have hit a pocket of gas—but that is strictly conjecture."

"I have no idea when we can get to them," Tonnemaker added wearily, 15 hours after the fire erupted. "It depends on how bad the damage is. There might well be some obstruction which has to be cleared out first."

A new "man cage," a sort of elevator, was built at the top of the shaft. Plans were to lower it down the shaft, which is a circular hole about 16 feet in diameter. Rescue workers could ride it down to the mine levels below.

PEACE CORPS . . .

are indicative of the response by college students. It is hope that chapters will be established in every state in the near future in an effort to tap talents, ideas and energies.

Last summer two unique projects in the greater Hartford area which received national attention were designed to increase the understanding between families in that city's inner core and outlying areas. "Operation Suburbia" is aimed at getting diffeernt kinds of people involved and setting them in touch and in sympathy with each other. In this program last summer 100 urban children were placed in suburban homes for several weeks.

The second program, "Operation Hank", gathered seventh and eighth grade pupils from poverty areas and provided them with an eight-week leadership training program geared to daily conducted field trips. The project will enter its fourth summer this year.

The Revitalization Corps receives no funds from any governmental organization and depends entirely on private contributions and volunteers.

Paul Mason and William Sibley, spokesmen for the organization on this campus, hope the UMass chapter can institute volunteer programs which will operate in the Springfield, Holyoke, and Northampton areas and provide aid to volunteer organizations which already exist.

Those interested in the Revitalization chapter here at the University can learn more about it by calling Paul Mason (546-9000).

Nixon Charges LBJ Commission Blames 'Everyone'

LITTLETON, N.H. (AP) — Richard M. Nixon accused Pres. Johnson's advisory Commission on Civil Disorders Wednesday of in effect blaming "everybody for the riots except the perpetrators of the riots."

He also complained that the panel "put undue emphasis on the idea that we are in effect a racist society."

Nixon said the nation needs more talk about reconciliation, less about racial division.

Smith College President Announces New Facilities for Fine Arts Center

President Thomas C. Mendenhall of Smith College recently announced the names of five facilities in the new Center for Performing Arts. They are: Theatre 14, the Berenson Studio, the Eliot Alcove, the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, and the Werner Josten Library.

The Center, which includes new construction just being completed as well as Sage Hall, the home of the department of music, will provide for the first time in one location on the campus all the housing and equipment necessary to the performing arts.

The main theatre, which will seat an audience of 460, will be called Theatre 14 in honor of the Class of 1914. Given by a member of the class who wishes to remain anonymous, Theatre 14 will have an orchestra lift which can either be raised to form a stage apron or lowered to provide a pit for up to 37 musicians. The theatre is supported by a full range of technical areas, including a shop, a design studio, and a costume studio.

Berenson Studio, which forms a separate unit of the Center, includes two dance studios, one of them equipped with a viewing gallery, and dressing rooms. It is named in honor of the late Senda Berenson Abobtt, the first director of physical education at Smith. Mrs. Abbott, then Miss Berenson, joined the Smith faculty in 1892 as the only teacher of gymnastics.

The Eliot Alcove situated just off the main lobby, near the Werner Josten Library, is named in honor of Samuel A. Eliot, professor emeritus of theatre at Smith.

The studio theatre, which has a seating capacity of approximately 180 will be called the Hallie Flanagn Studio Theatre. It is named in honor of Hallie Flanagan Davis, professor emeritus of drama, who came to Smith in 1942 as dean and chairman of the newly established theatre department.

One wing of the Center will be the Werner Josten Library. It will house the extensive collections of books, records, and scores of both the music and the theatre and speech departments, including the Alfred Einstein Collection of Italian madrigals. The late Werner Josten, a distingu'shed composer and conductor, was professor of music at Smith from 1923 to 1949.

In addition to the five facilities already named the Center includes a two-story student lounge given by the Smith College Parents' Committee to provide an informal gathering place for students in the southwestern portion of the campus. Adjacent to the theatre lobby and readily accessible from the neighboring dormitories, the lounge will provide refreshment facilities, television, and a conversation pit.

Parking Problems

By KEITH BROWERY, Editorial Staff

There is presently a motion in the Student Senate concerning student parking priorities which involve both resident and commuting students. This move is specifically aimed at reassigning the parking priority in the north (N) parking lot from commuters to resident students. The resident students would thus have parking convenient to the campus residences.

It seems to me that the resident students have convenience enough just by living on campus. When one considers what the commuter must go through, getting up often before sun rise and driving from as far away as Springfield to make it to class on time, it is apparent that the commuter has it many times more inconvenient even with the parking priority than the resident student.

The only conceivable advantage to the resident student would be opportunity to park within closer proximity to his respective dorm. Since driving to and from classes is forbidden the advantage to the residents would be nil.

The disadvantage of such a change to the commuter would be great. The only other student lot is the "F" lot below the Southwest Complex. The commuters who would be forced out of the "N" lot by a reassignment of priorities would be forced to park in the "F" lot.

This would amount to a daily walk of over two miles to reach most of the campus in the morning and a similar trip in the evening. It seems grossly unfair to expect commuters to walk this great distance daily in order to provide resident students an opportunity to park near their dorms.

The Student Senate should consider this proposed change in the view of the people concerned. In order to avoid hurting many for the convenience of a few this proposal should be defeated.

To The Campus:

Happiness is Giving

Beginning formally this Saturday evening with a dance in the Student Union Ballroom is Campus Chest 1968 sponsored by the Class of 1970. Our theme for the week "Happiness is Giving . . ." I hope that you will join with the Executive Council, officers and myself during the coming week and provide those in greater need with a little more happiness and in so doing give ourselves the satisfaction of helping others.

You will be deluged with the publicity for our events so I will not enumerate them here. But, I do ask everyone if you cannot attend some of these events to at least contribute by dropping any donation in the Campus Chest barrel which will be in the Student Union lobby or by contributing Tuesday evening when members of the Executive Council, Scrolls and Maroon Keys go door to door in the residence halls. Our hope is also to entertain you this week and not just solicit donations; so we are offering much of both.

All our monies will be given to charities. Seventy-five per cent of our funds will be donated to the Upward Bound Fund. This program is university sponsored and its purpose is to take economically and socially deprived children out of their hostile environment and provide them with a better living and educational atmosphere. These teen-agers live and study at UMass during the summer and then are placed in high schools in this part of the state. All students are from Massachusetts in this program. Many of these former drop-outs and poor students have demonstrated remarkable ability.

The other one-fourth of our money will be divided between a scholarship in the ABC program (A Better Chance) which is similar to Upward Bound but is not sponsored by the University of Massachusetts, and a party for the retarded children at the Belchertown State Hospital. Mount Holyoke is now in the process of raising $25,000 for ABC. The Class of 1970 gave the Belchertown State Hospital youngsters a Christmas party and thereby witnessed the joy that this type of event can bring and we want to do it again.

I know that you are constantly solicited for donations. But we believe that the above charities are such that we can see our money accomplish something. Just think if everyone on this campus gave a quarter; we'd have scholarships for a lot of needy and talented young people.

So, I ask every person on this campus: Administration, faculty and students to donate. 15,000 quarters would be great!!

Sincerely,

Bruce Balboni
President, Class of 1970

Channeling Campus Dissent

By "facilitating the presentation of all points of view and by making relevant facts available; by encouraging and aiding individuals and groups to play an active role in expressing their ideas and acting upon them, we (Sufi) seek to foster and perpetuate student awareness."

All over campus there are perhaps hundreds of unheard voices, paraphrasing the same ideas, sharing similar points of view. Seldom is there any sense of the unity of these voices because seldom is there any intercommunication. Folksingers and other social critics often haunt us, tell us of man's inability to communicate with man; because we are part of a mythical massive decentralized multiversity complex, must we resign to the metaphors, allusions and abstractions without first sounding out the existing channels of communication ourselves?

Sufi is here. By its constitution, it is at the disposal of this university's students. Much of Sufi's success will depend on how well the students use it. If anyone is interested, we need you!

Campus Comment

Don't Complain, Change It!

To the editor:

The prevailing sentiment on campus seems to be that of student dissatisfaction; dissatisfaction with the University social structure, dissatisfaction with the University curriculum offerings, dissatisfaction with the University student government.

One solution to these grievances rests in the assertion of student power, but for student power to be respected and effective, it must first be unified and responsible. Responsibility and eventual student effectiveness emerge from a strong student government which can translate campus attitudes into a respected, unified block.

If you think student government is a farce, then don't just complain, change it! There are numerous areas open to the student for participation and expression.

On March 7, Student Senate elections will be held for vacancies in the following constituencies: John Adams Lower, Baker, Field, Greenough, Hamlin, MacKimmie, Mills, Wheeler, Dickinson, Hills South, Sororities and Fraternities.

Therefore, if you are genuinely dissatisfied with the system, don't merely grumble about your discontent, take an active part in student affairs, become a candidate and run! Your student government is only as good as you make it!!!!

Mutual Understanding?

To the editor:

It was with shock, anger and dismay that I read Mr. Abdul-Rasool's letter in the Daily Collegian of March 6th.

I am in whole-hearted agreement with him that the damage to the posters advertising the Arab Banquet is the ultimate of insults, especially in a university community, and the culprit, whoever he may be, deserves swift punishment for this reprehensible act.

But if it is "mutual understanding" which Mr. Abdul-Rasool seeks, then he must not make libelous accusations after himself admitting that "we do not have material evidence to accuse any group of such acts." He clearly implicates the members of the Student Zionist Organization in an act which angers and repulses them at least as much as it does the Arab students. In fact, several members of SZO not only had planned to attend the banquet, but had also been actively engaged in selling tickets for the event.

Though we may differ with the Arab students in methods of achieving peace in the Middle East, we should at least be able to communicate without insulting each other's integrity. Mutual respect is a prerequisite for mutual understanding.

No Flash, Please

To the editor:

We—and without doubt we are not alone—resent the presence of photographers at the concerts in the S.U. Ballroom. Last night's was the first concert in some time which was not disrupted by flashes—and this amazing feat was accomplished through a mid-concert request by the performer.

Photographers circulating and shooting flashes during the performance not only distract the artist but also disrupt the involvement of the audience with the music. Surely an equally acceptable photograph could be taken between numbers or after the concert.

"Don't take it while I am playing," Andres Segovia put it, as one photographer crouched directly at his feet—and he unquestionably reflects the feelings of the majority of performers and listeners.

The Exit

7 March 1968/Vol. I, No. 1

Published weekly by students for students.

Enter . . .

There exists a void on the UMass Campus.

The memory of Critique is fading fast, though it died only last year. Efforts are still being made to revive the nearly defunct literary magazine Caesura, though they appear to be in vain. And now a valiant attempt to resume publication of the controversial Yahoo is being made by a completely new staff, though it has not published since the spring of 1966 due to political/administrative problems.

This year Spectrum, formerly the student handbook, is making a feeble effort to replace them all under the label "general interest magazine", but a magazine which may or may not publish once each semester is hardly an adequate outlet for the enormous creative potential of 15,000 students.

Therefore the need exists for a new medium — one which will offer the entire University community an opportunity to share and enjoy the talent in its midst.

We see one way out . . .

Through the Door to Thought

THE BIG FAD TODAY is a gravitation towards reform and overall change. It is desirable to change any facet of our society that is not geared to meet our own personal needs. Many people think that the concept of black power is no more than just a desire on the part of the Negro to see things go his way. I, personally, cannot accept these views. I can only speak for myself, and I want to make it clear that I am speaking not only as a Negro, but also as an individual.

Black power is an expression. It is not synonymous with violence. It is not some dread disease to be kept secret in order to prevent wide spread panic. Riots do not break out wherever advocates of black power appear. Has it ever occurred to you that for years in this country white power has been dominating factor in shaping society? Having been forcibly brought to America from Africa many years ago, isn't the Negro entitled to have a say in what is to be done in society? Is there any justification to his not being consulted about what is being done "for" him? Why must people of good will always do t h i n g s "for" the Negro anyway? Shouldn't he be allowed to make his own mistakes, rather than always have them made "for" him? As far as I'm concerned, black power is merely an expressed desire for equality and fairness. Many people still find it difficult to believe that there is such a thing as discrimination. After all, wasn't a law passed about making discrimination illegal? Doesn't it say in the Declaration of Independence that "all men are created equal"? It doesn't say that all white men are created equal to each other. Am I insane? No, the insane ones are all the sweet, shy, naive, and trusting, innocent little souls who think that words like discrimination, bias, intimidation, prejudice are figments of the imaginations of dirty old men like H. Rap Brown and Stokely Carmichael. Maybe the methods of reform that they use aren't the most desirable, but don't they deserve a chance to prove to the white people that the Negro can and will do things for himself? We are not asking for anyone to sit back and let us run the country our way. We are asking for a complete change in the laws. But if we are asked to abide by the laws of this country and the various states, don't we also get a chance to share equally in the formation of certain laws? Are these laws to be interpreted the same for us as they are for the white man? Even strangers in this country get better treatment than we do, simply because the color of their skins match that of the white man.

IT IS QUITE USUAL for many people to say (and I could name a few distinguished individuals) — "Look at all we've done for the Negro. They've got televisions, refrigerators, cars and some of them even own their own homes. They can go to school. What more do they want?" I'm waiting to hear someone say look what we've done "to" the Negro. "We took them away from their native land. We made them slaves for a long time. We've stepped all over their pride. In fact, we kept them as second rate citizens for a long time." Maybe this is all pride on my part; but can't a race of people hold their heads up as high as they want? Wasn't is pride that caused the "trend of human events" which were responsible for the American Revolution? Well, my pride tells me that if we can die for this country, we can live as equal to the whites. The 13th and 14th amendments to the Constitution, along with the Civil Rights Acts of 1957, 1960 and 1964 tell me that I am as good as any white.

Don't snicker yet and say that I'm talking about the South. I'm talking about the whole United States of America, including right here on this campus. Of course, there are people on this campus who are willing to accept the Negro as an equal and don't even see skin color. However, I'm sure there must be some suburban-bred darlings on this campus who look at us and say, "My goodness what are they doing here?". If you really want to know how most of the Negro students feel about being on a predominantly white campus, imagine yourself on a predominantly Negro campus.

You see, black power is a useful phrase for the American Negro. For the first time we are being heard. The white Americans are starting to take time to notice us. Whether they listen out of fear, compassion or understanding I don't know. All I do know is that an awful lot of white people have been listening to his black neighbors lately.

I'll bet that there are a lot of white students on this campus who feel as if they really understand us. They've studied all about the Negro in sociology and in history. After college, they're all set to go out and improve the position of the Negro. Let me caution you that no matter how many books you read and no matter how much education you've got, the only way to realiy understand what is really bothering the Negro is being one. I don't mean to stop any noble crusaders who might be going to join VISTA and clean up Roxbury and Harlem. By all means, go right ahead. However, don't be shocked when nothing is the way you expected it to be. Don't let it bother you too much if after all your friendly gestures, 15-year-old Willie Reed is still reulctant to take to you and would rather stand around on the corner smoking with his buddies. You see, Willie came from down South where Mr. Charlie couldn't stand the "nerve of them impudent black folks talking about bettering their conditions." Willie's been held back by Mr. Charlie for so long that he's not going to reach out and grab the first white hand that offers help. This kind of an attitude is one that white people will never be able to understand. Do you have any close friends who are Negroes? How about your roommate? How well do you know this friend as a Negro? Do you ever talk about Negro problems with your Negro friend? Do you know how this friend feels about you as a white person? This is not a joke. I'm not laughing. Are you?

Viola Osgood

THE MOST PERPLEXING PROBLEM I've found anywhere as a Negro is that most white people feel as if they're obligated to do something for you. They smile sweetly when we pass and always go out of their way to be nice to us. Isn't that nice? First of all, this is not what I want; nor do, I'm sure, other Negroes. I think that the way to treat us as equals is not by judging us as a race, but by judging us separately as individuals. If you hate us, hate us as individuals. Hate us because we have personally (and individually) done you an injustice. If you like us—great. But again, like us because you find in the individuals that you know something that is worthy of admiration. Don't like us because you feel sorry for us as a race. This would make your admiration mere pity. We do not want, we do not need, pity. We need and want the same opportunity that the white man has.

On this campus, for example, Negro students are asking foir this same fair treatment. Do we have to walk around wondering if we'll get a CHANCE to show off our acting abilities, because the plays that are presented offer very little and, more often, no opportunity for us. We don't demand to always be the oaks of social activities, but when we can't even be acorns, then something is wrong somewhere.

If I have stepped on anyone's toes and if anyone feels any hatred towards me because of my personal views—good. At least, I evoked some response. Chalk up one more victory for black power.

Sarah

by Janice Rayner

SARAH WOULD HAVE made a good mother," he reasoned as he poked his head into the refrigerator. He set eggs and milk on the counter. "She should have kept that first kid; it wouldn't have mattered to me." Her muted sobs came from the bedroom. A feeling which had assaulted him frequently in the past came over him.

The kitchen was cold in the early morning. He held a match over the pilot light, watching it flare suddenly in the bleakness of the room. Stooping, he lit the oven, then he rubbed his hands together in front of it. He turned back to the counter and broke the eggs, one by one, on the edge, spilling their contents into a plastic bowl. He yanked the drawer below the shelf open. It squealed, metal against metal. He grabbed a fork from the neat tray and slammed the drawer shut with his hip.

Sarah's sobs were becoming indistinct. His grim lips relaxed a little. He had to tell her the adoption agency turned them down. She guessed the rest. Her record . . .seven years ago. . .unwed mother. . . baby given up for adoption. He thrashed the eggs in the bowl, slopped in some milk and stirred them again. Rustling and shuffling sounds came from the bedroom and then Sarah appeared in the doorway fastening the front of her dressing gown. Her dark hair tumbled from a barrette at the back of her head. She would have been lovely except for the pink rims about her eyes. She was twenty-eight, but her figure was much like it had been five years before, when they married.

He threw a slight smile at her over his shoulder, then concentrated with renewed energy on stirring the eggs. She crossed the room and slipped her arms around to his chest.

"Peter. . .?"

He turned and hugged her. "You want breakfast honey?"

"Yeah."

He moved to the stove and reached up for the frying pan.

"Peter?" she said barely audible above the sizzling of the butter in the pan. "It doesn't matter that we have no children."

He turned his head and fixed her eyes with his own. After a moment he said, "Yeah,. . .yeah, I know." His voice was low and sad. He poured the egg mixture into the pan and Sarah moved to set the table. Silently he dished the eggs and they sat down to eat.

"Peter, did you see the nasturtiums?" Sarah asked, brightening. "You know I put them all around the garden, sort of like a border. They're almost all in bloom."

He smiled at her with a mouth full of scrambled egg. "Yeah, I saw them. You're quite a little gardener." Then, pushing back from the table and standing up, "I gotta get to work now or I'll be late."

Sarah rose and stacked the plates, gathering the silver in one hand. He dressed hurriedly in the bedroom while she ran water for the dishes. Passing through the kitchen, he grabbed his jacket from the rack. Then he walked to the door. Sarah watched him. He turned abruptly in the doorway, crossed over to her and tipped her chin in his hand.

"Take good care of your flowers," he said in mock seriousness. Then he kissed her and went out.

Pensively, she looked out the window over the sink, past the expanse of lawn behind the house. There in neat rows and patches her flowers bloomed, red, pink, yellow, purple, and white nestled in green. Beyond the garden and along the sides of the house (in front, too, although she could not see from the kitchen) the little wire enclosure gleamed in the sun. The single wire was raised all around about a foot from the ground upon little white posts. In the front a little sign with CAUTION and the voltage written on it swung from the wire. It had been up only four days and so far not one dog had entered her yard. The shock discouraged them without really hurting too much.

She finished the dishes and wiped her hands on the towel. After she tidied the bedroom and washed her face, she slipped into a pretty sun dress with enormous pockets. She ran a comb through her long hair, pinned it back and plopped a bonnet on top. She strapped sandals on her feet.

"June is such a lovely month," she thought as she stepped outside. The sun twinkled in the dew on the grass. She walked into the garage and picked her trowel off the shelf which lined one wall. She also grabbed a little can of Plant Grow and walked to the garden. There she settled hersef among the flowers and became absorbed in her work.

AT ABOUT THIS TIME, down the street, Mrs. Saunders loosed her three little girls from the house. The two older ones raced for the garage and in seconds reappeared, one on a red two-wheeler and the other one a blue one with training wheels. They rode down the driveway and turned into the street. The two older girls were allowed to ride on the street since it was a dead-end, but only to the last house and around the small circle back to their own home. Mrs. Saunders, despite their relative safety, was a vigilant mother and scarcely ever five minutes went by that she didn't check up on her three girls. Melanie, only two-and-a-half, was restricted to the yard where the sandbox occupied much of her time. This day, however, she was reluctant to leave her sisters. So down the road she toddled after them, calling in her wavering baby voice, "Weswie! Gai-ew! Weswie! Gai-ew!" Shortly, the two on bikes noticed Melanie following them. They laughed and sped up, pedalling faster and faster. . .When they reached the circle, they rode round and round it. Just as Melanie reached them, they took off back toward the house. Melanie stood watching them with frustration. Then she saw their dog Butter romping toward her from the trees beyond the road's end.

"Goggie, goggie," she exclaimed, clapping her hands with glee. She ran to meet him, but he evaded her, running toward the house on the other side of the street. She paddled off after him still calling, "Goggie, goggie."

Butter ran up to the lawn and sat panting in front of the wire. Melanie toddled to him and plopped herself down in the grass beside him. She put her arms around hus furry body, saying, "Hi, goggie." But Butter ran away back into the street. Melanie grabbed the thin wire to help herself to her feet.

THE ANGUISHED CRY of the little child roused Sarah from her work. Dropping her trowel, she ran around the house in time to take in the situation. She gasped, "Ohh!" as she darted to the child and gathered her into her arms. She nestled her face in the soft baby hair whispering, "Shhh, baby, Shhh, please don't cry, little baby." She rocked Melanie from side to side with her body, burrowing her face in the hot little neck, crooning and kissing the velvety skin. "Baby don't cry," she moaned.

Suddenly Mrs. Saunders was there snatching Melanie from Sarah's arms.

"It was the wire, wasn't it!!" Mrs. Saunders snapped. Her eyes narrowed in accusation as she shifted her frightened baby onto her hip. "A thing like that. . .with children around!. . . You've got a lot of nerve! Electrocuting little children!. . .You've got no feelings!" She whirled around and took a few steps. Then she glared back over her shoulder. "No feelings whatsoever!" and she marched away.

SARAH STOOD FROZEN, watching her carry the child down the street. Her shoulders drooped and her cheek was still wet with the tears of the baby she'd held in her arms. She turned suddenly and walked toward the garage. "Baby don't cry," she whispered as the tears stung in her eyes. She entered the garage and walked toward the switch that sent the current through the wire. She flicked it to "Off." Then she walked back into the sunlight and approached her garden. "Baby, don't cry," she whispered again. Then with a sob she threw herself down across the flowers.

The Mass Media

Conveying An Image Through Photos

By selecting a small portion of the above panorama we can project an image of a sparse crowd of disinterested onlookers.

The photographs on this page attempt to illustrate how the printed media can "use" pictures to reinforce the image it is trying to project. In this instance, selective photography could be employed to create discrepancies in the estimates of the crowds at the recent anti-Dow demonstrations. Selective photography is simply a process by which one cuts or "crops" a portion of a photo in order to convey the desired message.

This is a method by which many publications support slanted material, thereby duping an unsuspecting public.

The original photo above clearly shows the size of the crowd which gathered to watch the demonstration at Southwest, while the closeup below could be accompanied by an estimate and the reader who wasn't there would only take is as being true.

The photo at left could be used to reinforce an idea that only a few students were present and they found the proceedings rather ridiculous. At right we see more clearly that the crowd is larger and somewhat intent.

In the above photo the focus is on one particular student. The size of the crowd around him is unknown. At right is the original photo.

Pacification in light of the TET offensive

By Luther Allen

The Year of the Monkey is now five weeks old. Tet, the Chinese New Year, the private pleasures of the South Vietnamese people were brutally displaced by the generation-old quarrel in the Vietnamese national family—a quarrel in which International Communism, French, Colonialism, and American Foreign Policy each have intervened.

The Tet Offensive has demonstrated the country-wide strength and will of the Viet Cong. Indeed the term Viet Cong is now proudly used by National Liberation Front propagandists. The enemy has seized the initiative and impressed on the minds of those Vietnamese most protected by American intervention the determination and long range prospect of National Liberation Front control of all South Vietnam.

It helps little to point to high Viet Cong casualties or to the reestablishment of U.S.—South Vietnamese authority in Hue, in Saigon, and in the thirty-odd-cities that were simultaneously attacked in late January and early February. Officially reported high Viet Cong casualties are no more impressive today than they were in 1962-1963 when General Paul Harkins convinced former Secretary MacNamara that we would be able to withdraw from South Vietnam by 1965. What we must recognize is the fact that neither the U.S. nor the Saigon government anticipated the nature and scope of this Tet offensive. To crow over their failure to defeat us completely in one fell swoop offers no hope. We were told in 1965 that the NLF was so close to cutting South Vietnam in two that we had to pour in a half million Americans —this threatening to transform the nature and objectives of the conflict. In Saigon, the recent vast destruction of residential areas was ordered to prevent the Viet Cong from cutting the city in two. But haven't these cures become worse than the illnesses?

By stubbornly insisting that the real test in Vietnam is Khe Sanh—a fortified strategic outpost up in northwestern Quang-Tri province, we misunderstood the nature of the war. There will be no American Dien Bien Phu, our President insists.

BUT HAVEN'T WE ALREADY SUF-.ED OUR DIEN BIEN PHU.? Isn't .t the meaning of the Tet Offensive and of our responses to it? What the V.C. have done is to demonstrate that they have extraordinary morale and ordinary morale and organizational ability, that they are everywhere—that they can invade the cities, attack the U.S. Embassy in Saigon, and that they can hold the Imperial City of Hue (symbol of Vietnamese national unity) for weeks. This is their bid for legitimacy—an overpowering response to the sought for legitimacy of last year's elections under the newly written South Vietnamese Constitution. South Vietnam's belated start at free institutions was wiped out in a day by the decree rule which the Thieu government invoked early in the Tet Offensive.

But more important was the way in which "order" was restored in the cities. Under American pressure some cities such as Ben Tre and My Tho in the Mekong Delta area were more than half destroyed. In Saigon itself, according to Robert Shaplen in the latest New Yorker, a dozen separate residential areas comprising sixty to seventy blocks were totally burned out. Apparently 200,000 people—seven per cent of the population of Saigon-Cholon—are homeless refugees. "Most of the damage" Shaplen reports, "was the result of rocket attacks by American armed helicopters and other planes." The story of Hue, as we all have seen and read, is much worse—seventy percent of the city destroyed—most of its population of 140,000 homeless and short of food.

It was of course a treacherous move—the Viet Cong Tet Offensive, picking the moment of an agreed truce, of holiday merrymaking, and family visitation—to show the world their claim to rule South Vietnam. But is this treachery by the Viet Cong what most South Vietnamese city dwellers will remember?

Won't we be more heavily blamed for our acts and those we urged on the South Vietnamese government in the name of military expediency—the bombing of SOUTH Vietnamese cities, the destruction of the homes and lives of the very people we seek to protect. The means at our disposal and our impatient insistence on quickly using them contradict our avowed ends. To add insult to the injury of creating floods of urban refugees, our Marines callously hauled down the Viet Cong flag which had been flying over the Thua Thien Province Headquarters in Hue only to raise the Stars and Stripes! CBS News deserves praise for its sensitivity to this affront to Vietnamese nationalism. But the Boston Globe carried the story straight, implying that the Marines were simply emulating the valor of Iwo Jima. What are we fighting for? Do we want empire in Vietnam? Are the bases at Cam Ranh bay and Tan Son Nhut permanent?

It is ironic that the Foreign Policy Association should have chosen "The Other War in Vietnam—PACIFICATION" as this year's discussion topic. The Tet Offensive is more than a set back to the latest of the series of historic efforts of France and the United States to try to persuade selected fragments in South Vietnam's tangled political and social substructure to organize security, reform, and new life in the thousands of villages of Vietnam. France's Groupe Administrative Mobile Organization, Ngo Dinh Diem's and Colonel Edward Lansdales Civic Action, Ngo Dinh Nhu's and Roger Hilsman's Strategic Hamlets (blessed by Sir Robert Thompson of Malaya fame), and the second Lansdale program described in our Great Decisions pamphlet as Rural Development have all been more the product of Western initiatives than the spontaneous expression of indiginours Vietnamese national and religious forces.

If pacification ever were to succeed it would have had to come from Vietnamese initiative such as the Dai Viet province chief of Quang Tri whom I observed in action for four years ago, a school teacher who spent eight years in Diem's prisons. But the Dai Viet leader was forced back into exile. With escalation it was the American, Lansdale who, to quote him, returned to his "homeland," Saigon in 1965. Now even the optimism of a Robert Komer can hide the failure of the latest effort. When the International Voluntary Service comes home isn't that clear enough evidence?

Since the military escalation of 1965, I have characterized my own position as neither hawk nor dove—but water buffalo. The water buffalo is weary—worn out by the military means that have crushed the honorable objective—the development of a viable non-communist and reasonably free South Vietnam. When I visited Vietnam in 1964, my friends wanted peace but they didn't want an NLF government. Today they face stark tragedy for the war itself has become the greatest evil. As an American, I feel guilt and shame.

We were foolhardy in our original unqualified support for Diem (the work of the Diem Lobby, the CIA, Lansdale, the Dulles brothers—sanctioned by President Eisenhower and Senator Mansfield). We were blind in our protracted "sink or win with Diem policy"—a policy for which the Kennedy administration bears more than three long years of responsibility. In 1963 and 1964, Washington was insensitive to those anti-Communist elements that emerged after the overthrow of Diem with a potential non-Communist coalition that might have concentrated on the other war. Instead, Secretary MacNamara ordered the "graduated military response" which, in the name of limited war, has made military and American a politic-military struggle which could only be sustained effectively with autonomous South Vietnamese leadership and construction.

Nonetheless the demise of my water buffalo position does not make me an enthusiastic or promising dove. I agree with Senator Eugene McCarthy and also with Ambassador Edwin Reischauer that further escalation is the gravest danger. Reluctantly, I recommend falling back on a defensive strategy. Let us pull out of the Khe Sanhs and Con Thiens, out of the relatively unpopulated mountainous areas of Western and Central Vietnam. Our duty now is to protect the population—in the cities and in the populous rural areas where anti-Communism remains serious. But this is no final solution. These enclaves bear no direct relation to our sea and air power and this move can only be a holding action. Can anyone conceive a meaningful new partition of Vietnam?

What we are faced with is defeat. The most we can perhaps do is make it a "graduated" defeat. In our relations with the people of South Vietnam this borders on dishonor. There is no simple, quick, honorable, face-saving solution. We are in for trouble—protracted frustration, difficulties abroad and at home. Ted Sorenson, President Kennedy's closest advisor, provided us yesterday with a comprehensive formula describing our dilemma:

> "Our worldwide military primacy cannot produce a victory and our worldwide political primacy cannot permit a withdrawal. We are unable to transfer our will to the South Vietnamese and unable to break the will of the North Vietnamese.
> Any serious escalation would risk Chinese or Soviet intervention, and any serious negotiation would risk a Communist South Vietnam."

American military might is not likely to be challenged in Vietnam the way we challenged Soviet military might in the Cuban Missile crisis. But as self-styled leader of the "Free World" our political primacy suffers a challenge analogous to that posed to Soviet Russia at Budapest today—in her vain effort to restore Soviet leadership in the Communist world. Only support for the NLF in South Vietnam unites the Communist world today. And in their opposition to American imperalism they have many fellow-travelers in the non-Communist world.

Let us not forget that the NLF fights a total war in South Vietnam. The bid for coalition is a bid for a new government shorn of the one relatively cohesive organization that has made for any governmental organization over the past five years in Saigon—the Army of South Vietnam. There is no cohesive neutralist leadership or organization analagous to Prince Souvanna Phouma in Laos. To recognize the NLF means agreeing to an NLF-controlled coalition government, to NLF administered elections and to graduated totalitarian Vietnam. Those in South Vietnam, the military, the anti-Communists among the Catholics, the Sects—notably the Hoa Hao and some Buddhists—will be the victims: their leaders, subject to the kind of mass arrest and execution that befell the government officials in Hue (100 of whose bodies were recently uncovered in a mass grave). The mass of people will be shaped up, brainwashed, transformed to proper citizens of a People's Democracy. Perhaps the most we can do is to seek ways to moderate this process.

Meanwhile the American political system is likely to suffer further ravages. After the strains put on it by the protest movement on the Left—a function of three years of futile and degrading military escalation—we are likely to see dissidence on the Right as a function of any serious policy of negotiation and accommodation to defeat. Militarists, Veterans, racists and chauvinists are likely to sentence us to a new McCarthyism (Joe, not Eugene).

Stanley Hoffman of Harvard in a recent letter to the New York Times reminds us of the success of DeGaulle in extricating France from Algeria. By analogy, he implies that we can look forward to a constructive American foreign policy once we extricate ourselves from Vietnam. What Professor Hoffman omits, however, is a reminder of the price of that policy—the overthrow of the French Fourth Republic. We need also to remember that it took DeGaulle over four years to get peace.

Do we have an American DeGaulle on the horizon? Can we expect a negotiation policy either from the Johnson Administration or from any other administration that could constitutionally and politically emerge by next January? In posing these questions we come close to asking whether free institutions in this country can survive both the dangers and frustration of military escalation as well as those of protracted and ultimately disillusioned negotiation, a negotiation which is likely to lead to Comunist rule in South Vietnam? Can we rethink American Foreign Policy in a post-Vietnam era without falling back to a new, blind, isolationism compounded by domestic turmoil? In sum, can we live with frustration, yet keep continuity in our relations with the world as a free nation?

I have been trying to think of the appropriate term to describe my new position. All I've been able to come up with is an American "buffalo," the bison which Webster's Third International describes as "any of several large shaggy-maned, usually gregarious recent or extinct bovine mammals. . ." They used to appear on nickels; there are a few left out in Yellowstone. But it's the soulful, long suffering face that bears witness to America suffering. May we yet learn from suffering?

The above speech was delivered on March 4, 1968 as part of the Great Decisions Program dealing with pacification in Vietnam.

Luther A. Allen is an Associate Professor of Government at the University of Massachusetts. He has been the Smith-Mundt Visiting Professor of Political Science at the University of Saigon (1960-61), and Consultant in Public Administration, AID, Saigon (called at the request of the South Vietnamese government) in 1964.

Golden Locks and the Three Squares

(with supporting cast)

or

A Fairy Tale Revised

or

A CLICHÉ OF TODAY

by Dave Diffendale

ONCE UPON A TIME, and much more often than that unfortunately, there were three squares, Momma Square, Poppa Square, and Baby Square. The three Squares lived deep inside the Pine Woods. . .Estates just outside of Glendale. Big Poppa Square was a renowned business executive, though only around Eastern Glendale. In his spare time he ran the local draft board. He was very pleased that through all the turmoil, complaints and strife, he had remained unruffled, "just doing his job." He liked to brag. "When the Army asks for a hundred men, why, I send them a hundred and ten of Glendale's finest." He knew whose side he was on. He wasn't a damn liberal.

Momma Square was active also. She was a good wife and mother, liked bridge club and PTA organizations that guarded her community and school against unamerican infiltration. She also was a good member of the Conservative Women's League and the D.A.R. Her heart was in the RIGHT place when she mused, "It's such a shame that we can't roll bandages anymore. It would let the boys know that we, on the home front, are right in there with them. The government knows best though." Her greatest preoccupation was as founder, co-chairman and chaperone of the community's most important youth group, the A.F.S.L., the Anti-Free-Sex League.

Baby Square was an officer in this fine organization. He was also a stalwart member of an old club, The Young Reactionaries. His big desire, however, lay in his plans to initiate a local chapter of the Ukra-Conservatives for God, Country, Rights for Those Deserving Few, and for the Preservation of National Institutions such as Wars League. He knew that such a group would bring together a bunch of right guys.

"I sure have looked forward to taking this trip today."

"Junior, that phrase!"

"Yes, Momma. I'm going on this excursion today."

"Well, the bus is here you two. Don't forget to leave the key out for Golden Locks."

With their gear, they scrambled on to the bus. The bus, emblazoned upon the side with "The John Birch Society's Semi-Annual Picnic and Witch burning" in bold red, white, and blue letters, then departed. A small garden plaque next to the house said, "The family that plays together, stays together."

Two hours later, a bus with large flowery advertisement on the side, stopped at the entrance to Pine Woods Estates. Off stepped Golden Locks. She had been apprehended by her mother, various police groups and other welfare organizations, taking part in anti-war protests, anti-draft protests, anti-poverty projects and programs and other obviously sick and unstable forms of behavior. "Mom wanted me to come here, be rehabilitated in a healthy community," she said. "If it means so much to her, I'll try. Look at all of the houses, all the same with a shiny car in front. Red houses, and white, and blue, and pink, and green, and fuschia, and unpainted?" Ahead of her was an abode that appeared tattered, battered, splattered, smattered, clattered, shattered and run-down. In the backyard an old degenerate automobile sat molting and rusting, occasionally shedding a portion or dropping a flake of skin. The plaque by the front door showed three animals lounging; underneath it read, "The Three Pigs." Mr. Pig sat with his wife in the middle of their brown, dusty front yard, surrounded by scattered bits of trash and blades of grass.

"And no one gives them a chance. Honey, I'm all for this open housing. They need all of the breaks they can get.

A sack of garbage came whizzing out of the door, landed with a cloud of dust, and split, the contents mingling in the yard.

"If one moved around here though. They lower the property values, you know. We'd have to move out. I guess you can take 'em out of the slum but you can't take the slum out of them."

Golden Locks continued past. Ahead, a man stood in front of an impeccable house with a finely preened lawn and pruned hedges. He matched the house in attire. An ivory grin cut across the tan expense of his face. "Hello, Mr. Wolf." (She had seen the name sign.) "could you direct me to the Three Squares' house?"

"Oh, you must be Golden Locks. They won't be back for hours. Why, don't you come back to my patio and have a drink?

Golden Lock's mother had wanted her to learn to make it in healthy society. She did not want to offend her first contact in Pine Woods. She allowed herself to be guided behind the house by an arm around her shoulders.

"I hope I can get to know you quite well, Goldy baby, Let's say we get started right now."

She spun away from the groping hand creeping around her side. She was facing him tightly now, within the circle of his arms. Was this what Mother meant when she said 'learn to make it'? He bent and kissed her, plunk, on the lips. I don't think this is what Mom meant. She twisted and ran down the driveway.

"Come back here, you trollop! you strumpet! The Squares told me what kind of girl you are."

"Never! You're just a big bad wolf."

As she ran down the cement she saw what must be the house. In the front was a large, shiny white Cadillac for Poppa Square, a shiny red Tempest station wagon for Momma Square and a shiny blue Sting Ray for Baby Square. Finding the key, she was inside. What shall I do till they get back and start my rehabilitation? She looked on an end table. Tranquilizers. Magazines. The National Guardian, with an article on the terrible extent of drug use among today's youth, sat under the tranquilizers. Towards the rear of the stand was a pamphlet entitled "Marijauna—The Dangerous addictive Narcotic." Behind that stood the family tobacco stand. Pipes, pipe tobacco and a box of cigars for Poppa Square. A carton of one hundred millimeter, mentholated green, triple charcoal filtered gold tipped cigarettes for Momma Square. A carton of non-filter Lucky Strike Kingsize made by the American Tobacco Company, with the health warning on the side for Baby Square. Momma Square wanted him to be a man, a real American man like on the T.V. commercials, as she started hi on Luckies early. "A gun case. Let's see. A big gun for Poppa Square, a medium size gun for Momma Square, and a .22 for Baby Square. A family that kills together, thrills together." She made that one up. She must have seen the plaque outside about playing and staying. "A family that smokes together, chokes together. Ha! Mom wouldn't like my attitude. I've got to stop poking fun."

The next room was the bar, a large black leather one. Behind it were rows and rows of California wines. Old Mister Boston gins and Kentucky bourbon. Across the liquor shelves was a large locked glass door. In the corner of the glass was a little plaque, "The Family that abstains together remains together."

"That's too much! I'll nap and maybe get in the right mood. Mother would be disappointed." She walked past the kitchen and the smell of apple pie, in towards the bedrooms. She went into the room where Poppa Square slept and lay on his bed. It was too hard and lumpy. She went into the room where Momma Square slept, (After all, she was founder, co-chairman and chaperone for the Anti-Free-Sex League.) and lay upon her bed. It was much too soft. She went into the room where Baby Square slept and lay in the bed. It wasn't just right but she fell asleep anyway.

Soon the three Squares came home. "It sure was fun playing war with real guns."

"Remember, son, that was more than a game. We'll be prepared when our country needs us.

"It's a good thing we discovered that dirty Communist infiltrator from the C.I.A. It was fun taking care of him."

In their fervored excitement they had forgotten all about Golden Locks. Poppa Square said, "Someone's been sleeping in my bed and they've gone." Momma Square said, "Someone's been sleeping in my bed and they've gone." Baby Square went to his room and shut the door stealthily. "I suppose this means I can't be president of the A.F.S.I. anymore. But if they don't find out. . ." And he crept across the room. Just then Poppa Square entered the room. He was agast and taken back. "Why, I'll put your folder back in the files at the draft board." But collecting his wits about him, he followed his son, after shutting the door quietly so as not to disturb Momma Square. She wasn't listening though. She thought they were both asleep and was paying a social call on Mister Wolf. Would Golden Locks awake? Or woud she learn how to make it in the healthy american society of Pine Woods Estates?

before i met you

i was just another one of those human oafs then and didn't notice the way the wind blew till a straw caught me in my misdirection and motioned my eyes
your way.
that vagrant run-down dream-in-the-wind came whistling up the alley and i saw you
standing by the lamp-post.
it was then that love ran thru my days breaking them like a dozen eggs.

La Madrugada

The distant red lights indicate a line,
Betray a road
That crosses, floating, on the lake.
The dim lamps write a curve
Where, like a bridge,
The humped road arches gently up
Above the circled depths
Then slopes down intimate again
To unseen ripples felt in night.

Then David visits in my dream,
Intruding like the cat she is;
She wails her soft gray song,
La Madrugada, muffled through the glass,
And cowers on the window ledge
With confidence and wet with rain.
South is the weatherside, the bridge
Of Union Bay; and ghosts of women flee
As morning softens on the mountains to the South.

Folk-Rock Is Alive and Well

Once upon a time a new trend in pop music was developing and people were calling it "folk-rock." Due to its infectious beat, coupled with meaningful lyrics, this new sound was finding wide acceptance among the pop record buyers. But, as all trends must follow a trend (by either evolving or dying), folk-rock soon took the latter road and quietly made its exit from the center of pop music interest.

Several years later, a genuine attempt is being made to revive a music fad. Citing a number of recent album releases, one can hardly help but say that this attempt is noteworthy. A new group on the scene, the First Edition, has recently released an album which seems to have been given little or no recognition. Reprise records, in an attempt to leased two cuts from the album titled "The First Edition," which have skyrocketed into the Top 10 across the nation. The songs, "Just Dropped In (to see what condition my condition was in)" and "Shadow in the Corner of Your Mind," are not the best from the album, although it seems as though they were the best choice for a single release.

The album itself includes twelve original compositions, the better of which were written by the group's lead singer, Mike Settle. Writing your own songs in your initial recording attempt is something which is just not done, as noted, the Turtles' Howard Kaylan in a recent interview. But, this is exactly what the First Edition has done, and it is paying off.

Songs on the album include "Hurry Up Love," which features the group's only female, Thelma Lou Camacho. Her powerful vocal style could be compared to Mama Cass. The relaxing arrangement of "If Wishes Were Horses" should appeal to most listeners as it is performed by Mike Settle who also wrote the tune. "I Get A Funny Feelin' " is one of the standouts, again featuring Thelma as lead singer. The feature attraction of the album, is, of course, the group's single release "Just Dropped In," as mentioned. This is perhaps the only song on the album which seems less related to folk-rock and more closely geared to the teeny-boppers, while at the same time appealing to some hippies (complicated!). Opening with a pseudo-psychedelic guitar (played backwards on a tape-recorder), the song bursts into lyric concerning a poor soul who has been through a pretty bad trip, and has come down to "Just Drop In (And see what condition he was in)". The song ends with musical arrangement most likely derived from a mystery flick of the 1940s. Mickey Newberry, the group's drummer, wrote the song, and for a first try does deserve recognition.

Perhaps the cleverest idea that the album offers is of the very beginning of Side 1 and at the very end of Side 2. Using sound effects, the impression is given of being in a newspaper printing shop, and, as the papers come off, they are loaded on a truck and driven to the newsstand where a newsboy is heard screaming "Extra! Extra! Get the First Edition." This is immediately followed by the first song. At the end of the album a similar experience can be had, as the same newsboy yells "Extra! Extra! Get the Sixth Edition." (What happened to the other editions?). While listening with stereo earphones, you can attain the greatest thrill when realizing that the news truck at the beginning runs you over, as it moves from shop to newsstand.

One other album, just released with the same similarities to folk-rock, is by Roger Nichols and the Small Circle of Friends. Although this may seem to be just another album, it appears as though A & M records has a good deal of talent running through their grooves. Most likely, another Herb Alpert discovery, the group of three consists of Roger Nichols, Murray MacLeod, and Melinda.

Their harmony is beautifully smooth. The album is almost shocking, until it is realized that they have recorded their voices twice on most cuts to sound like six people. The album boasts three producers and three arrangers, yet the songs are not appreciably different in general sound. The most beautiful if not the most relaxing, is a version of John Sebastian's "Coconut Grove." Acoustic guitars, well-mixed with a delightful harmony of voices, makes for an impressive musical production. This album must be heard in stereo!

Other songs include the Lennon-MacCartney tune "With a Little Help From My Friends" which doesn't seem to be just another Beattle song, as the Small Circle perform it. "Just Beyond Your Smile" is another outstanding cut.

The album is easily recognized by a color photo of a long haired person (male or female unknown) wearing round rim sun glasses.

On The Pop Music Survey, the past weeks we have seen a good number of "better" records. After a slump of some months which seemed to bring nothing but terible music to the Top Ten charts in the country, it appears as though the situation is improving. A sudden invasion of "good music" single records has found startling acceptance on the charts. Dionne Warwick's "Theme From The Valley of the Dolls" was number 1 for two weeks; The song, which was written by Mr. and Mrs. Andre Previn, became number one after the popular instrumental "Love is Blue" by Paul Mauriat fell from that position.

Bringing stiff competition to these two tunes, and keeping rock near the number one spot, is the First Edition's "Just Dropped In" which was number two last week. Other contenders for the top chart positions included the late Otis Redding's recording, "Sittin' on the Dock (of the Bay)" and the Four Tops' "Walk Away Renee."

New releases are numerous. The English group, The Foundations, who had such a big success with their first release in the States, are now offering "Back on My Feet Again" as a follow up to "Baby Now That I've Found You." The Lemon Pipers' "Green Tambourine" has been replaced by a song with vague allusions to the Beatles' "When I'm 64." It's called "Rice is Nice."

One of the hottest songs this week is by the Montanas, "You've Got to Be Loved." Watch this record. Also making headway to the Top Ten is "Baby, What I Mean," by the Spiral Staircase.

Just released albums include "Spooky" by the Classics IV. The songs include terrible versions of "Daydream Believer," "By the Time I Get to Phoenix," and "Bus Stop." The Imperial Record group had little versatility, and offered a spicy, although cleverly-done record cover which shows an out-of-focus topless girl on a beach. The company seems to believe that there is more than one way to sell a record.

Other new albums may be more satisfying in their artwork, than music. The Eyes of the Beacon Street Union, Orpheus (both MGM) and Canned Heat (Liberty) provide examples.

With the great number of new records (both singles and LP's) it becomes increasingly difficult to decide what is good and what is great. Of course, there is always some poor material, but, with the advent of stereo, new recording techniques, and better instruments, much of today's music sounds better than it might have sounded several years ago.

David came bearing gifts of Winter

we're running now hands together against the snowflake river.
you say
it's like Berlin in December.
(i'm giddy with snowflake lace!)
i think of cinnamon smells steaming
thru cold german mornings.
did you run down storms
with the women there, holding hands like this?
i slake dragon snowflakes with my tongue.
i want to be one woman just one woman
you ran thru the streets with, galloping over dreams.

Peace Corps Report Reveals Impressive Achievements in '67

The growing impact of the Peace Corps both at home and abroad is sharply illustrated in the agency's Sixth Annual Report, released recently.

The Peace Corps celebrates its seventh anniversary during March.

Taking the Peace Corps through the end of fiscal year 1967, the report lists several major achievements for that period: The number of Volunteers since its inception reached 30,000, eight new countries were added, the number of returned Volunteers for the first time passed those in the field and significant improvements were made in the agency's operations to provide more efficient administration.

A highlight of the report is the findings of major independent studies of the effectiveness of Peace Corps programs overseas. They show how well the Volunteers accomplish thir purpose.

One of the more important long-range dividends of the Peace Corps is the effect its Volunteers have when they return to this country. From now on, says the report, "the spirit that returning Volunteers bring home with them must be counted as a substantive national resource."

Nearly two-fifths of the Volunteers who return go back to school, mostly for graduate work. The majority of those who get jobs are engaged in some form of service, directly applying their experience as Volunteers.

A third of those who go to work become teachers. The Peace Corps says for every teacher or would-be teacher it recruits, it sends two into the nation's schools. These Volunteers are much in demand. California and New York, among other states, make concerted efforts to recruit Volunteers as teachers, with special consideration in granting teaching certificates.

The agency believes it is getting better Volunteers and knows better how to train and place them because of improvements made in the various stages of preparing people to serve.

Most of the changes have been made in training. Extensive use is made of people with overseas experience, including former Volunteers, to train recruits. About 40 per cent of all Volunteers last summer were trained in part or entirely in the country to which they were assigned. In this country, trainees spend a great deal of their time in settings that introduce them to conditions they are most likely to find overseas: in slums, rural areas, farms and Indian reservations. The Peace Corps also opened five new training camps of its own, bringing its total to seven.

All these developments emphasize a move away from training on college campuses, recognizing, says the report, "the irrelevance of the lecture hall to the realities of overseas life at the grass-roots level."

UMass Professor Edits Textbook

Dr. Everett H. Emerson, professor of English at the University of Massachusetts, is an editor of The Prose of John Milton, just published by the New York University Press.

Included in the volume are full texts of all of Milton's major works and summaries with lengthy quotations from his minor tracts. Concise introductions explain Milton's writings and discuss their place in Milton's career. The book will be used as a text for college and graduate courses in Milton.

Dr. Emerson studied at Dartmouth College and Boston University and holds degrees from Harvard, Duke and Louisiana State Universities. Before coming to UMass in 1965, he taught at Lehigh University and was a member of the founding faculty of Florida Presbyterian College. He is currently director of the Honors Program at UMass.

UMass Grad Student Wins Story Award

The University of Massachusetts has a winner in the $6,500 STORY College Creative Awards contest, in its first nation-wide combing of college campuses for creative talent.

Grad student, Michael Thelwell, a native of Jamaica, West Indies, received $500 as first prize in the short fiction (short story) category. His entry, "The Organizer", a story of civil rights violence, was certified by Andrew Fetler, assistant professor of English.

The prize winning work appears in STORY: The Yearbook of Discovery/1967, just published in 362-page paperback and hardcover editions.

Where are the big - name writers of tomorrow to come from?

From the college campuses those hotbeds of protest and drug use investigations — which are also "the country's greatest proving ground of dedicated, hard - working and self - disciplined artists of the future." This came from Whit and Hallie Burnett, who have just published the results of a year's campus-combing in STORY: The Yearbook of Discovery/1968.

The Yearbook contains the year's annual STORY: The Year-Creative Award winners, who share more than $6,000 in prizes for the best short stories, poems, essays, biographies, plays, journalism and screen and TV writing.

"While college students get in the news for the vocal, peranibulatory or sedentary nature of their protests against so many elements in contemporary American life," says Whit Burnett, "the Award winning writers this year show that to really be a writer it takes more than marching or sitting on a pad and pipe-dreaming.

"What they are writing behind the ivy walls is in the mainstream of the day, but they treat their subjects with perception, and a thoroughly mature sense of values. At a time when we are tempted to think discipline is going by the board, there are plenty of young writers who know that they can't be artists without it, and these we'll hear about again."

LBJ Bows Out Of Primaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson will not voluntarily enter any political primaries this year, it was learned Wednesday.

This decision was among several factors prompting the President's associates to keep his name out of a Massachusetts primary contest with Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., a reliable source said.

The President's political advisers agreed that he "should and will not become involved in any primary except those where he must take positive action to stay out," the source told The Associated Press.

Thus the President may be entered in primary contests in Nebraska, Oregon, and Wisconsin, where a potential candidate must submit a formal statement of his noncandidacy for his name to be stricken from the ballot.

R&H Program Presents Food Seminar on Beef

A 10-session seminar for food service people on purchasing and utilizing beef by the University of Massachusetts restaurant and hotel management program will open Wednesday, March 6, at the auditorium of the Western Massachusetts Electric Co., Brush Hill Rd., West Springfield. The seminar is part of the off-campus educational offerings of the University of Massachusetts food science and technology program. Seminar sessions are scheduled from 7 to 9:30 p.m. on March 6, 13, 20, 27; April 3, 10, 17 and 24; and May 1 and 8

The series is designed to provide a better understanding of efficient procedures of beef purchase and preparation and is designed for food service managers, cooks, food buyers, dieticians, operators of restaurants and other commercial eating places, school lunch managers, hospital food service people and others in the food service industry.

The seminar will consider beef purchasing, handling, and storage, and the preparation of beef.

Complete information on the seminar content and registration fee is available from Restaurant and Hotel Management Program, Room 213, Chenoweth Laboratory, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass., 01002.

The department of forestry and wildlife management of the University of Massachusetts, in cooperation with the Extension Service and the New England Kiln Drying Association, will offer a five-day kiln drying workshop at UMass March 25-29.

The workshop is designed to help the beginning kiln operator understand the fundamentals of lumber drying as well as upgrade the more experienced operator. The course is open to both management and operating personnel.

Undefeated Frosh Matmen Travel to NEIWA

'One of better freshman teams,' says Coach Barr

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

A UMass freshman wrestling team that is, in the words of Redman coach Homer Barr, "one of the better freshman teams ever to be seen in New England", goes into its final action of the season when it travels to the Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn., for the N.E.I.W.A. meet. The two day affair begins Friday.

The Little Redmen grapplers finished their dual meet competition Saturday with an unblemished 12-0 record in dual meets. This week's action for the UMass squad will probably be the toughest of the season. Coach Barr assessed his team's chances, saying, "It will be a toss-up between us and Central Connecticut. They will have great strength in the heavier weights while we are strong in the lighter divisions."

This year's UMass frosh feature four undefeated performers and a collection of former high school champions. Leading them off in every meet at the 115 pound division is one of the four undefeated, Nick DiDomenico. DiDomenico, who hails from St. Belleville, N.J., is in the words of Coach Barr "very quick with good potential."

The 123 and 130 pound classes, due to heated competition among three members of the team, have been the strongest on the squad. Phil Davis, who is also undefeated has been wrestling mostly at the 123 level. Davis, from Geneva, N. Y., was a sectional champion in high school. The coach said of him, "He is the hardest worker on the team, with a lot of determination and drive."

Also competing for the two available berths is John Paltrineri. The brother of varsity captain, Gene, Paltrineri from Wellesley, was the Massachusetts state champion last year. He is a fine leg wrestler, as is his brother. Earle McCartney was third of the trio of lower weight contenders, is also undefeated. McCartney, who was third in the New Jersey state competition, from Pennsville, N. J., is very fast and as Coach Barr puts it, "a strong rider".

At 137 pounds is Howard Kaplan, from Sufferen, N. Y. Kaplan, who had a good high school record, is a skilled performer, but Coach Barr states, "He sometimes lacks the strength for execution."

Bob Freeman, who wrestles at 145 pounds, is termed by Coach Barr, "the finest all-around wrestler on the team." Freeman, from Allentown, Pa. has good strength, good skills and is fast. He is followed in weight order at 152 pounds by undefeated Tom Young. Young from Clairfield, Pa. was third in the state in high school and has good strength, is very fast and has excellent techniques.

At 160 pounds is the defending New England champion, Tom Andrews, from Springfield. Barr says of him, "he was overweight and is just rounding around." Andrews is strong with deceiving speed and in the coach's terms, "is real tough when he is ready."

The 167 pound wrestler for the Little Redmen is Mike Brauner, from Pottstown, Pa. Brauner, who as did all the rest, had a good high school career, has skills and determination, but in Coach Barr's words, "He will have to lift the weights this summer for increased strength."

The so-called strong man of the team, Bob Freeman, wrestles at 177 pounds and is the New Jersey state champion, coming from Teaneck, N. J. Freeman lost only one met all season, and that by one point. However, Coach Barr says of Freeman, "He relies on his strength a lot, but with more skills, should be outstanding.

Wrestling at 191 pounds, is George Zguris from Shirley, Long Island. Zguris has good strength and Coach Barr says,i "He is one of the most improved wrestlers and will be hard to beat next year.

Coach Barr terms this team "easily the finest in the school's history". However, he doubts the team can hope to duplicate the undefeated accomplishment at the varsity level, with Springfield and Wilkes on the schedule. But he said, "The whole frosh will inherit the varsity. They definitely will produce winning seasons and could come close to duplicating this season."

Puckmen End Year on Victory Note

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

Last week the freshman hockey team finished their 1967-1968 season on a promising note by way of an 8-2 victory over the Little Lord Jeffs of Amherst College. The reason for the optimism, however, is the talent which the frosh have to offer for next year's varsity team.

Coach John Canniff's hopes rest in the fact that the freshmen win what he calls "the battle of the books." Barring an academic disaster, he feels that there are several players who will bolster the varsity team next year.

The fact that freshman coach Eddie Poltepeck used only two lines for the last half of the season is a good indication of the boys with varsity potential.

The biggest problem for the varsity has been defensemen, and in that respect, the freshmen have two good prospects, Kevin Comer of Canton, Mass., and Mike Murray of Winchester, Mass. Both of these boys are good skaters, and Murray, a converted forward, has proved to be a valuable offensive threat as well.

The starting line during the last half of the season was centered by Ed Riley with Paul Riley and Tom Peters supporting him in the wing positions. Ed Riley, who only came to the frosh in February, hopefully will be eligible for varsity competition by next year.

At center ice for the second line was Ken Reddick with Mike Fallon and Woody Cook holding the other forward spots. ..Cook proved to be a valuable asset to the Redmen team due to his scoring ability and good hockey sense.

In the goal for the entire season was Larry Walsh who had only two shut outs in nine games. He played well most of the year, but he will have his hands full trying to displace Pete Scoville next year for the varsity. Defensemen Jerry Burke and Dave White also saw a lot of ice time for the frosh.

Regardless of any conjecture that can be made about the chance of freshmen moving into varsity positions next year, the positions are invariably won by those who come back with the proper attitude and in good physical condition. In view of the fact that the freshmen have worked hard all year, Coach Canniff can look forward to fielding a good team from the freshman material.

Three Berths Still Undecided In NCAA Basketball Tourney

Although three berths still have to be decided, the NCAA's major college basketball championship tournament opens a two-week run Saturday with UCLA's defending champions favored to meet top-ranked Houston again in the semi-finals on March 22.

Still up for grabs in the sprawling 23-team tournament are the spots for the Big Ten, Atlantic Coast Conference and the West Coast Athletic Conference.

Iowa is a virtual cinch to bag the Big Ten's berth Saturday.

The WCAC title will be decided in games tomorrow and Saturday. Santa Clara is first with 11-1 followed by Loyola of Los Angeles 10-2 and San Francisco 9-3. Loyola plays at San Francisco tomorrow and at Santa Clara in the key game Saturday.

Fifth-ranked North Carolina and sixth-ranked Duke are favored to battle for the ACC's berth in the Conference tournament today through Saturday.

If form holds, UCLA, 24-1, will meet its only conqueror, Houston, 28-0 in the semifinals at Los Angeles. If Houston, which edged UCLA 71-69 in the game of the season at the Houston Astrodome, should beat tne Bruins again there's a possibility that the final could match the only two unbeaten major teams in the nation.

George Reynolds, a starting guard for the Houston Cougars, the nations No. 1 collegiate basketball team, will be ineligible to compete in the NCAA playoffs starting next weekend.

Houston officials said yesterday the number of semester hours accepted by the university when Reynolds transferred from Imperial Valley Junior College is not sufficient to permit him to participate in post-season games.

TENNIS TRYOUTS

Senate Wrap-up

By-Laws Debated; Question Period Added

By PAT PETOW and NICK COSTA
Senate Reporters

A reduced quorum provision, and the establishment of a students' question period were given approval Wednesday as the Student Senate debated its revised by-laws in a highlight of its meeting.

The Senate—which adjourned the week before for lack of a quorum as it has had to do several other times this year — lowered its quorum requirement from two-thirds of the members to a majority. After the student government voted to make the provision effective, the number of remaining members dwindled as time went on.

Question Period Initiated

The Open Question period for members of the student body brings the Student Senate into agreement with Faculty Senate procedure for members of the faculty. The only difference between the two question periods is that the Faculty Senate relies mainly on its ex-officio members for answers. The Student Senate may not have as quick access to the people likely to have the answers. But the student government has committed itself to seek out the answers.

The wording of the by-law reads: "Before the general orders are considered, questions from the members of the general student body shall be in order although only the answers to those (submitted) in the agenda need be entered in the minutes."

In speaking against including the provision, Sen. Jane McCauley observed that if the senators were truly representative, questions should be put to the senators who would then secure the answers.

In the article describing the Executive Council of the Senate, which consists of the four officers and the chairman of the nine standing committees, a change was presented by the committee that prepared the revised by-laws. The Senate voted to sustain the new provision allowing the Executive Committee to act for the student government "when the Senate is not in reguar session." Regular session was explained as meeting on a regular basis whether weekly as at present or every two weeks were that the "regular" time period.

Amendments Defeated

Previously the Executive Committee has been empowered to act for the Senate only over the summer months. The members accepted the committee reasoning that there might be times when the Executive Committee need to act during a University recess or during finals. A motion by Sen. Joe Doucette to revert to the summer only provision was defeated.

Another area of contention in the article concerned whether the Executive Committee should be allowed to take action changing the policy of the entire body. An amendment to give the Executive Committee free rein was defeated by a large majority.

As a result of debate on the floor, particularly by Sen. Larry Marcus, an amendment was made to rule out the possibility of the Committee not meeting in person or not communicating by means of a telephone "conference" call. Marcus referred to a situation in the summer of 1966 when the Executive Committee made a decision after the president contacted each member individually for his view but when the Committee did not meet together for discussion.

Sen. Frederic Hartwell, speaking for the amendment, asserted that if the Executive Committee was going to act in the place of a deliberative body, he wanted it to be a deliberative body as well. The amendment was passed.

The Senate, in the same article, limited for the first time the number of non-Senate members who may be committee chairmen to three. The reason for the motion by Sen. Hartwell was the importance of the Executive Committee vis a vis the Senate as an institution.

In other areas of the by-law revision, the body decided not to change its rule permitting speakers to move to close debate (provided there has been positive and negative debate opportunities) after giving a speech. The Student Government Affairs (SGA) Committee has recommended that the motion to close debate (which requires a two-thirds vote) be made by a member who rises for that purpose only.

Chairman Hartwell, defending the 8-0 committee stand, declared that the Senate was abusing the practice of closing debate by allowing the motion to be made at the end of particularly moving speeches.

The Senate struck out a new provision providing that, "Any Senator who permanently leaves a Senate meeting before adjournment of that meeting without a proper excuse as defined in Article 1, Section 1, shall have that action recorded in the minutes."

Pending for further Senate consideration are the last five articles of the revised by-laws and a final vote on the tentatively-approved parts. (Only the quorum change was a final action.)

Field Answers Questions

In an open question period, Dean of students William F. Field answered student questions on Open Housing and on Civil Rights on Campus.

Field replied to a question of possible "white racism" on campus, and what work could be done if this condition did exist. "I have received no complaints," Field stated, and added that students may come forward if there are any. Field noted that, "The fundamental pressure is that we are an all-white campus," and cited efforts of recruiting non-white students to the campus.

Open Housing Question

When questioned about open housing, Field stressed the importance of the regular University newsletter, mailed to parents and other interested parties, which he mentioned, "hopefully will hit home by March 25." The newsletter will contain major changes in the University and will provide a special section on the open housing proposals.

D.V.P. Speaker Edward Logue Cites Nation's Urban Problems

By BILL DICKINSON
Specials Editor

Speaking before the Urban Affairs Symposium last night, Edward J. Logue, former administrator of the Boston Redevelopment Authority and a defeated candidate for mayor of Boston, cited "a lack of talent and resources" as the reasons for the failure of urban renewal programs around the country.

He also said that the war in Vietnam is a partial reason why cities don't have money to fight urban problems. But he added, "You'd have to be more optimistic than I am to expect Congress to give 30 billion dollars a year to the cities when the war is over."

Logue said that the cities need "new ideas and new spirit," but that they can't get the young people needed for several reasons.

First, Logue, who is presently a professor of government at Boston University, said that the universities have failed to provide adequate programs to train new people. Referring to UMass he said, "This is an urban state; you have a very fine program in agriculture and a good department in landscape architecture." Continuing he said, "We have a commitment to improve the University, but there is no such commitment for the Roxbury ghetto. We do not yet care."

He cited lack of funds for salaries and self-interest of bureaucracy at the local level as discouraging talented people from joining city agencies. He said, "The bureaucracy's first objective has become its own preservation."

Logue claimed that the civil service system discourages new talent from working in urban agencies by blocking "lateral entry" and demanding that a person work his way from the bottom. "The civil service system is the most effective bar to eager young talent that I know," he maintained.

Calling the American tax system "the most effective," he said by the time the money reaches the local level all that is left is revenue from "property and nuisance taxes. The money is more important than we like to think," he said.

He said that the cities are "failing" in their major function of housing, schools, routine services, safety, rapport with their citizens and taxes. He indicated that the suburbs wave surpasses the cities in these fields.

Rockefeller Nears Announcement; Primary Policy Undecided

New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller appeared to edge closer Thursday to candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination, and said he has not ruled out entering the Oregon primary May 28.

In Phoenix, Ariz., however, Barry Goldwater predicted that it will be all over by then—that Richard M. Nixon will sew up the GOP nomination within 30 days.

Nixon, himself, spent the day campaigning in New Hampshire for next week's primary there.

In New York, Rockefeller said at an impromptu news conference he has no intention at the moment of entering the Oregon primary. But he added: "I do not make a definitive statement ruling it out."

Only last week, Rockefeller had indicated he would file a disclaimer before the March 22 deadline to keep his name off the Oregon primary ballot.

Going just a little further than he has before, Rockefeller said he would be available as a candidate for the GOP presidential nomination "if the public and the Republican party want an alternative approach."

Although this fits in with efforts of his backers to portray him as the only remaining alternative to Nixon, Rockefeller insisted, "My efforts are not stop-Nixon."

In Washington, supporters of Rockefeller were hopeful of launching his formal presidential bid later this month by mobilizing broad congressional backing as the governor starts to speak out on such key issues as Vietnam.

"It's all a question of timing," one of those close to Rockefeller noted.

Yahoo Faces Trustee Board Censorship

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Day Editor

The Yahoo constitution faces a judgment day with the board of trustees because of, according to Pete Ward, "A reluctance on the part of the administration to treat Yahoo as a normal R.S.O. organization because of its past history."

Yahoo, in 1968, is a totally new and different Yahoo from that of 1965. It has a completely new constitution, and has experienced a huge staff turnover. The present staff, and its plans in Wards words, "in no way resembles the organization which the Administration objected to."

He continued to say that "censorship should take place only if Yahoo is unfit, constitutionally, to exist, and not because the name of the magazine is Yahoo."

Nixon Sees Cooler Summer; Attacks Johnson Viet Policy

By WALTER MEARS
Associated Press Writer

CONWAY, N.H. (AP)—Richard M. Nixon said Thursday night the summer ahead could be a cooler one in the nation's troubled cities because "we have been warned and can make plans to deal with racial violence."

"We must take the warnings to heart," he said, "and prepare to meet force with force if necessary—making it abundantly clear that these preparations are made and that retaliation against the perpetrators and planners of violence will be swift and sure."

"Above all, we should make clear to those who threaten violence that these means will be employed—and that they can not hope to carry out their threat and get away with it," Nixon said in a nationwide campaign speech on the NBC radio network.

Nixon's 25-minute speech was recorded Monday. An NBC spokesman said the $7,000 fee was paid by the Nixon for President Committee, based in Washington.

The broadcast speech climaxed another day in Nixon's campaign for a strong vote in the March 12 New Hampshire Republican presidential primary.

Turning to Vietnam, Nixon said, "I think that with different policies the war could have been ended before this. I think that with new policies it could be ended sooner—though not as quickly or as cheaply as if those policies had been adopted when they should have been."

Nixon said the administration has failed to understand "it is a war for people, not for territory, and it cannot be won by military means alone."

"Because of its failure of understanding," he added, "the administration has failed to press those nonmilitary measures—diplomatic, economic, psychological, political—that could have vastly increased the effectiveness of the military effort.

"It has failed to use diplomacy effectively with the Soviet Union . . . it has failed to do enough to enlist the South Vietnamese fully in their struggle."

"Only when our political, economic and diplomatic efforts are given a priority equal to our military effort will this war be brought to a successful conclusion," Nixon said.

"Only this way can we get the negotiated end of the war that we want—not a military victory in the conventional sense, but a durable peace in which the right of self-determination of the South Vietnamese people is respected by all nations, including North Vietnam."

Nixon said "it is essential that we end the war in such a way that we win the peace. And just as the cause we are fighting for is larger than Vietnam, the peace we must be concerned with is larger than Vietnam. The peace we must be concerned with is peace in the Pacific for the balance of this century . . . "

Criticising the report of President Johnson's Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, Nixon said it would be unrealistic to raise ghetto hopes "that the vast programs the commission proposed might all be done at once."

And it would also be a disservice to suggest to the dwellers in those slums that they need only wait for federal housing, federal jobs, a federaliy guaranteed income," said the former vice president.

He said private enterprise must be enlisted for the task of rebuilding the cities.

Congressional Interest Spells Trouble for Thieu

By BARRY KRAMER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — A rebuff by the Senate and a petition circulating among representatives Thursday indicated growing political trouble in the weeks ahead for President Nguyen Van Thieu.

In a 40-3 vote, the Senate turned down Thieu's request for additional emergency powers in finance and economy. The House had voted similarly last week to deny Thieu's request.

The petition, though it is only a first step, calls on the House to put on its agenda, a discussion of whether to bring up for a vote a motion of no confidence in Thieu's administration. The direct target of such a motion would be Premier Nguyen Van Loc and his Cabinet.

Dissent, Vietnam Will Be Topics at Smith

A panel discussion, "Dissent, Civil Disobedience, and Vietnam," will be held in John M. Greene Hall, Smith College tonight at 8 p.m. There will be three panelists: Ralph Brown, associate dean of Yale University School of Law; Sidney Hook, chairman of the division of philosophy and psychology, New York University Graduate School; and Ronald Young, national director of Youth Work for the Fellowship of Reconciliation. Myron Glazer, a member of the sociology and anthropology faculty at Smith, will act as moderator.

According to Myron Glazer, moderator of the panel, "This panel is directed toward securing an exchange of views on one of the most pressing problems facing this country. What action can the concerned citizen take when he believes that his government policy is both unrealistic and potentially disastrous? What alternative courses of action are open to him? When does disagreement become dissent, for certainly not all difference of opinion can be classified as dissent? When does dissent become resistance, for not all dissent leads to the active rejection of attempts to implement policy?"

Mr. Brown is Simeon E. Baldwin Professor of Law as well as associate dean of Yale Law School.

Sorority household hints from Schlitz

If the house treasury is low and the drapes on the front window are a drag, here's a stunt to keep in mind.

Take an old sheet (perhaps your roommate's) and cut it to fit the window.

Now set your work aside for a moment, and have a Schlitz. Schlitz is pure beer, carefully brewed to eliminate "beer bite."

Back to the window. Should your roommate object to your using her sheet (she shouldn't but she may), simply collect all the empty Schlitz cans left over from the last beer party. Punch holes in the cans and string them on wires across the window.

You'll not only have a very "in" window, but you'll be pleasantly surprised at the number of guys who'll offer to help make some more drapes.

When you're out of Schlitz, you'll have a good set of drapes.

Next Year, the Whole Beanpot

Despite Sports Illustrated's prediction that New Hampshire (1-22, 0-10 in the conference) would battle Rhode Island for the Yankee Conference, it was the UMass Redmen who gained a share of the beanpot with the Rams.

Coach Jack Leaman, in his second year at the helm, fooled the "experts" as he molded a winning team from a young, inexperienced group of players. The Redmen's 8-2 conference mark tied their best previous league record while the overall 14-11 chart is the best record by a UMass team in the last four years.

After a discouraging start the hoopsters, led by Captain Bill Tindall, came back to thrill UMass followers with exciting victories over Holy Cross, Rhode Island and Connecticut (2). The Redmen also defeated such outstanding teams as St. John's, Texas Christian, Fordham and Holy Cross.

It was not only Coach Leaman and Captain Tindall though; UMass got fine performances from senior Garry Gasperack, juniors Joe DiSarcina and Peter Gayeska and sophomore Ray Ellerbrook. Each of the substitutes also had moments of glory. The successful season was really a team effort.

It could have been nicer though. Fan support was poor when you consider the size of our university. The turnouts for the St. John's and Connecticut home games were particularly disheartening.

Next year, let's hope for the whole beanpot, a tournament, berth, and a Cageful of fans at every game.

The Every Only Free

"love is the every only god"
— E. E. Cummings

So much talk about love these days. About death as a roof, about the end of the world and some madman exploding the sophistications of the human race with the click of his heels and a blue steel eye.

No man, of course, has ever felt love without death peering; it is by far the thought of imminent death that forces men to love. What comes of force, though, is death itself. If you have ever tried to force a relationship out of the raw stuff of other people, you know that you invite the relationship to end before it has a chance to begin. Something may be lost, but it makes no difference.

One of the most difficult things to feel about something you love is that it is free. It has no commitments. It does what it pleases. It is pour soi in the middle of en soi. To think of it as a projection of yourself is enchanting, and maybe true. But it is itself. Alone. Not to be loved is merely a misfortune; not to love is immoral and obscene. To exist on melancholy is nothing but an existence, brutal; you can only end up killing yourself. There will be pain to ride, and you must gulp and go on with whatever it is you have to do.

If you choose not to acknowledge freedom, you are your own Hitler, and you have no rights to make the choice of who they are you want to love. You are bound by your own chains, tightening. They hang you. No one laps the ganglia.

To break the chain of oneself is hard. It is when you look upon the lines.

UMass...a Liberal Arts Factory

To the editor:

The University of Massachusetts was founded in 1863 as a state land grant college and was originally known as the Massachusetts Agricultural College. Today, over one hundred years after it was founded, the farms of the University are rapidly being pushed aside by the expansion of new high rise buildings and better athletic facilities. The stone milking barn, the beautiful horse barn, the green pastures and the sheep and swine area are soon to be overtaken with new innovations.

The very basis on which the school was founded, that of an agricultural college, has been forgotten and the school is rapidly becoming another liberal art factory. Don't the citizens of Massachusetts care what happens to their own university?

I think that it would be well for our "fine" board of trustees or our very own governor Volpe or any citizen of the Commonwealth to visit the agricultural complexes of our neighboring states, such as the University of New York or the University of Vermont just to see how far our state university has been left behind.

While the athletic department seems to have no trouble in obtaining funds for new facilities, the farm land bought in South Deerfield for the purpose of establishing a new farm complex has gone without money or even a definite plan for almost five years.

If something is not done in the near future, the University of Massachusetts in Amherst is going to be left without the very foundation on which it was established.

I Cannot Subscribe to the Proposal

General Hershey's reply to President Lederle's letter of protest:

Dear President Lederle:

I have your letter of February 15, 1968 transmitting the essence of a resolution adopted by the Faculty Senate of the University of Massachusetts, and I welcome the opportunity to clarify the issues involved. You are the 20th University President to write adverse or questioning letters and because of the fewness of such letters, I have been able to answer each in some detail.

The October 26, 1967 letter referred to was a reiteration and timely emphasis regarding the legal obligations of the Selective Service System for many years. It contained nothing new and has not been misinterpreted by the Selective Service System. Not a single instance of a Local Board taking action toward "discouragement of lawful political dissent" since the letter's issuance nearly four months ago has been brought to my attention.

The Selective Service System does not hold court. It does not "judge," convict, "sentence," or punish. I cannot subscribe to the view that military service is a punishment. By specific verbiage in the current and past law, as well as by American heritage, it is an obligation and a privilege.

The Selective Service System does not induct anyone. The law has already accomplished that, except as to the question of when military service begins. The Selective Service System is authorized to delay this service. When it stops its administrative delay, the law proceeds with induction.

As to "the constituent elements of illegal dissent or protest have not been defined": It is evident that a registrant who does nothing has no grounds for deferment because he patently is not contributing to the national interest.

It is evident that a registrant who is engaged in strictly legal acts that do not contribute adequately to the national interest has no grounds for deferment.

How then can it be argued that a registrant who is engaged in illegal, or probably illegal, acts that do not contribute to the national interest should be deferred when the first two are not?

I cannot subscribe to the proposal that the Selective Service System defer law violators while it permits the induction of others.

With every best wish,

Lewis B. Hershey

Symphony Band Performance To Open Concert Season

The University of Massachusetts Symphony Band opens its 1968 concert season with a performance Sunday, March 17th, at 4:00 P. M. in Bowker Auditorium.

Directed by John A. Jenkins, Conductor, and Larry Weed, Assistant Conductor, the band will present a variety of original works for band. Also included on the program are such varied works as the Overture in C, by Charles Simon Catel; Ohio River Suite, by Robert Russell Bennett; Concert Music for Band, by Michael Horvit; and Music for a Festival, by Gordon Jacob.

Pat Nugent Wants Vietnam Duty

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson's son-in-law, Patrick J. Nugent, said Thursday he's determined to get assigned to military duty in Vietnam or supporting areas and "I just don't want to be stuck behind a desk."

Nugent, 24, said he made the decision on his own to transfer to his former Air National Guard unit in the Washington area because it was called up on active duty.

Wife Luci, who probably will remain back home in Texas with eight-month-old baby Patrick Lyndon, was "quite sentimental" in her reaction, Pat said. "As a wife and mother, she'd have to be," he added.

Nugent is due to report March 21 to the 11th Tactical Fighter Wing at Andrews Air Force Base in nearby Maryland.

Course Requirements, Changes Announced By Sociology Dept.

By BRENT G. CAMBELL
Staff Reporter

The Sociology and Anthropology department in initiating a new policy in respect to course requirements, has announced that Introductory Sociology (Soc. 101) will no longer be a set requirement for entrance into all other departmental courses.

Dr. Everett S. Lee, head of the department, feels that the rising quality of the students demands the abolishment of "false requiremens." In a recent Daily Collegian interview, he stated that true education means a "minimum of requirements and not a maximum—the better the students, the less you need requirements."

The introductory course will still be required of majors, and is still a prerequisite for higher level sociology courses which demand a fore-knowledge of sociological concepts. Nevertheless, students may now take all but a few sociology courses without the burden of Soc. 101.

The new policy has long been under consideration. According to Dr. Lee, his dept. is keeping a close eye on the recently released "Cook Report" in considering future changes.

One of the new programs under consideration concerns the institution of two honor sections: one for majors and the other for non-majors who exhibit the qualifications and desire to make the program beneficial.

Concerning the general issue of academic reform, Dr. Lee is in favor of a broader based "pass-fail" system. He sees marks as serving no necessary function except as a reference point for graduate school admission. With this in mind, he feels that the administration would be doing a "great disservice" to the students if it were to entirely eliminate marks at this time.

The faculty of the Sociology-Anthropology department is working with graduates and undergraduates in special committees on future curriculum changes. Dr. Lee sees the student as an indespensable commodity in making these necessary reforms effective. He welcomes the ideas of students and strongly supports a close working relationship between students and faculty in seeking future changes.

Rescue of Trapped Miners Temporarily Halted By Fire

CALUMET, La. (AP) — Fire and searing heat deep in a ravaged coastal salt mine temporarily stalled efforts to rescue 21 trapped miners Thursday.

Three rescue workers who tried to douse a fire blocking their way in a tunnel 1,200 feet below the surface had to retreat from the steam and flames.

They were hauled back to the surface, in a makeshift elevator, up the fire-blackened vertical shaft of the small, isolated Cargill, Inc., mine.

Robert Fahs, a Cargill spokesman, said cool, compressed air will be blown into the mine and the rescue teams would wait several hours before making another descent.

There was no indication as to what was burning in the salt tunnel. In prior reports, officials said that there was little outside the vertical shaft, with its timber shoring, that would burn.

It has been almost two days since the shaft fire burned an elevator and all communications lines to the 21 men.

The mine is relatively small, but it was hoped that they managed to retreat from the fire area, through tunnels winding almost a mile, and hole up to await rescue.

GENEVA (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union jointly promised Thursday to protect all weaker nations from nuclear blackmail and aggression. The pledge is designed primarily to reassure India, fearful of a nuclear attack from Red China.

UMass Professor to Study Student Press

by LAURENCE V. KLEINMAN
Associated Press Writer

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — College students may not like it if they are told they are somewhat irresponsible and should learn when to keep their mouths shut and their hands off the typewriter.

On the other hand, school administrators could be accused of being a repressive lot who restrict students' freedoms.

Whatever the findings may be, a study is under way to define the relative roles of freedom and responsibility as related to the student press.

The National Council of College Publications Advisers (NCCPA) has named a 15-member commission to conduct the study under the direction of NCCPA President Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies at the University of Massachusetts.

"We'll collect all the material we can find about the student press," Politella said. "Then we'll investigate cases of censorship and cases where too much license was shown by students.

"Among questions we hope to answer are: is the student press free and, if so, by whose definitions? We'll also study the question of whether there should be a code of ethics."

The commission, said Politella, who has worked for three newspapers and been adviser to student publications at four universities, is patterned after the Hutchins Commission which published in 1947 a study on a free and responsible commercial press.

"Though the commission has no authority to enforce its findings it may end up exerting a strong influence. Administrators, student editors and faculty advisers, all have expressed an interest. Since the study was announced in the fall of 1966 we've had requests for guidelines from at least 40 schools," Politella said.

"In terms of numbers alone this kind of a study is needed. There are some 2,600 campus newspapers as compared with 1,844 commercial dailies. The university has become a city that lacks communication between its factions—students, faculty and administration. The campus newspaper could provide this communication.

"Moreover, the campus press is doing more off campus than ever before. Correspondents have been sent to Vietnam and it is not uncommon for a school paper to use The Associated Press wire service."

The commission is financed largely by private sources. It is expected to report to the NCCPA in the fall of 1968.

Politella says the commission will publish its findings. After that, it becomes a question of how many students and schools choose to adopt them as guidelines.

Skiers Can Take NEISC Championship

Cranmore Mt. Holds Key

For the first time in nearly 30 years, the UMass varsity ski team has the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference championship almost in their grasp. The last challenge comes tomorrow at Cranmore Mt, North Conway, N.H. Five seniors, four of whom will be skiing on the A team, will end their intercollegiate skiing careers in the Boston University giant slalom.

Team captain Collin Garstang winds up a brilliant four years at UMass. Garstang, who began as a junior racer in the Eastern Amateur Ski Association while racing for the Mt. Greylock Ski Club, set the NEISC back on its heels by continually beating the field while starting back at the end of the running order with the B team.

Another four year member of the team with junior racing experience is John Hurd, an English major from Melrose, whose skiing at Big Bromley helped UMass retain the conference lead.

The oldest member of the team Ned Kelley has added depth to the squad for the past two seasons. A one time alpine and nordic skier for St. Lawrence, Kelley joined the UMass squad after four years in the U.S. Coast Guard.

John Williams, a marine biology major and QTV brother, has been a team member for two years. The Middleboro, Mass., skier has added the back up needed for the A team. Mike Zanoli, a strong consistent performer, has helped relieve some of the pressure on the rest of the team.

Travelling with the seniors in the final meet will be Jim Garstang, Dave Kamila and Dick McHugh. With a comfortable lead and only one more race to get by for the Southern New England League Championship, Coach Bill MacConnell is looking for a victory this weekend to win his first conference championship.

Final Run for the Seniors

With a New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference within their reach tomorrow, five seniors will be skiing their last slalom for the Redmen.

Track Team to Travel to ICAAAA

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

Seven varsity men and four freshmen travel to New York's new Madison Square Garden for the ICAAAA competition and the close out of the indoor season tomorrow. The competitors will be running qualifying races in the afternoon in hopes of gaining a berth in the night action. All the runners have good chances of making the night meet.

Paul Hoss will be challenging against top flight competition in the two mile. John Arlenson, who won the Yankee Conference high jump last week in Maine at 6'4" will try to improve his height in his specialty.

UMass has not scored at the IC4A meet since John Madeiros placed in the broad jump in 1966. But Coach Ken O'Brien feels that he has two men with a good chance of ending the one year dry spell. They are hurdler Mark Levefer and 600 man John Anderson.

Levefer, a sophomore, will be going against what Coach O'Brien terms "class hurdles of the northeast". This is Levefer's first chance to make up for a poor conference meet showing.

Coach O'Brien is also hoping for a strong performance from John Anderson in the 600. Last year Anderson placed ninth in the afternoon meet with eight men qualifying for the night race. Anderson has an excellent chance of making the night meet this year and of scoring in it. He won the Yankee Conference 600 in 1:12.8, two tenths off the record. Anderson, who last year was ranked nationally in the 500, will be competing in his last race for UMass.

Also going to the meet will be a mile relay team made up of Greg Bowman, Dave Evans, Bob Hasselbaum and John Anderson. O'Brien stated that this foursome can qualify for the night meet, but he admits that they will be hindered as Anderson is doubling regular relay man. Diego Gonzalez will be out because of an injury. However, if Anderson can recover quickly enough from the 600, the team could be one of the eight qualifiers.

The freshmen are sending down a medley relay team that has an excellent chance of qualifying for the night action. E. Yale Stevens will run the half mile. Clarence Gaynor and Gerry Spellman, both of whom have been improving steadily all winter, will run the quarter miles. Ron Wayne, who has had a fantastic winter season, will anchor the relay team by running a mile. He will face some of the top frosh milers in the East but should be able to match them.

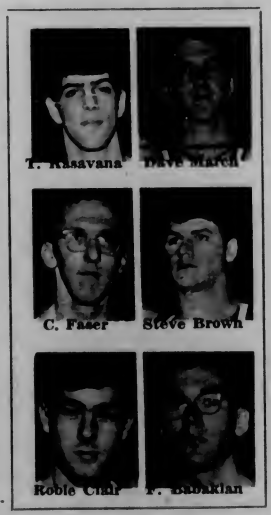
The top UMass IC4A performer was Dick Ward who won the hammer throw in 1963. This year's team will try to break the UMass record of six points in the IC4A.

Six Seniors End Gymnastics Careers

By JAN CURLEY
Sports Day Editor

Four years ago, when the UMass varsity gymnastics team joined the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League, they were ranked at the bottom of the eight teams. Since 1964 the team has come up the ranks to challenge for third place in the league. Things did not work out quite that way, as the team took fifth place in the championships last weekend behind some strong competitors.

Coach Erik Kjeldsen is losing half of his 12 man squad by graduation this year. These six seniors were members of the team four years ago.



Toby Kasavana, a three year varsity letter man from Stamford, Conn., has competed in the floor exercises and posted his best score, 8.60, against Pittsburgh earlier in the season. In competition on the trampoline his best score was 7.65 against Syracuse and 8.75 was his highest score on the long horse vault in competition against Penn.

Two year letter man Dave March from Winchester has competed in four events, rings, parallel bars, horizontal bars, and high bars. Two of March's highest seasonal scores rings, 8.45, and high bars, also 8.45, were made against Syracuse. His best score on the parallel bars was an 8.70 in the meet with Pitt.

The third senior member of the team, Clarence Fraser, specialized in the side horse. In this event, he scored a high of 8.55 against Pitt. In his sophomore and junior years he also competed in the parallel bars, rings and long horse. The North Syracuse, N.Y. native is a two year letter man.

The team is also losing its tri-captains, Steve Brown, Bob LeClair and Fred Babakian. Each captain is a three letter varsity man.

Brown competed in three events, long horse, parallel and horizontal bars. An 8.85 against Army, 9.15 against Syracuse and 8.70 against Pitt were his high scores in these events respectively. His sophomore year he was an all around competitor, and in his sophomore year he qualified as a finalist in the Eastern championships on the parallel bars.

Brown's 9.50 against Syracuse on the side horse was the highest score ever posted by a UMass apparatus man. He scored a 9.15 on the long horse in competition against Army.

In both his junior and senior year he placed fourth in the Eastern championships. His junior year he was also an NCAA finalist at Southern Illinois.

Side horse specialist Fred Babakian posted his highest score 9.25, against Army. He tied for sixth place in the Eastern championships this year. In his junior year he also qualified for the nationals at Southern Illinois.

Tim Steves, Dave Woods and Michael Koffman, also seniors, were team members who could not compete due to the 12 man team rule, Junior Dick DelGallo qualified for the finals in both the floor exercises and rings. A consistent 9.0 performer, he placed sixth in the Eastern Gym Meet. In overall placement, he was the second highest scorer. The NCAA meet will be held at the Univ. of Arizona in Tucson, April 4, 5, and 6.

URBAN AFFAIRS SYMPOSIUM — Senator Abraham Ribicoff spoke yesterday at the Student Union Ballroom on "The American City — 1968 and tomorrow".

Ribicoff Speaks on Riots And Vietnam War for DVP

By RICHARD S. KLINE

"A century of neglect has turned America into a nation of defiant cities," said Connecticut Senator Abraham Ribicoff yesterday at the UMass Student Union Ballroom.

Speaking as a part of the Distinguished Visitors Program Symposium on "The American City: 1968 and Tomorrow," Ribicoff continued by stating that we must choose whether we shall be one nation or two, a better society or a broken society."

He claimed that "many believe we cannot avoid disaster. They say we are too far down the road to a final showdown . . . But that is not a place one reaches by choice—but by failure to choose and failure to act."

"It is true," said the Senator, "that time is running out in America." He also said, however, "But it is also true that no problem in our history has been so completely and vividly documented as the crisis in our cities, and thus, so open to solutions."

One of the problems Ribicoff felt was there has been since 1910 an increasing "concentration of Negroes in the central cities" and that "as soon as the Negro moved in, the whites moved out."

"The whites," he continued, "were abandoning the central cities for the suburbs. That alone was not disasterous. But they were taking the jobs and factories with them."

Emphasizing that the problems had existed for a long period of time, the Senator came to a point where he said, "But if these facts existed for many years, why did they suddenly explode in 1964 and every summer since in cities both large and small? Clearly there was no single answer. And just as clearly, the explosions were not as sudden as we might like to believe."

On the Kerner Report, issued by the President's Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, Ribicoff said, "everything in the Kerner report has been known to us for years. That is both the tragedy of the nation and the wisdom of the report."

"Our responsibility is clear," stated the Senator, "America needs more than a temporary truce between the rioters and the police. America needs an end to the conditions that the fuel and feed the fire.

We must provide more jobs and better employment opportunities, eliminate substandard housing in America, improve our schools and neighborhoods, encourage private investment in rebuilding our cities, reorganize our governments so they are attuned to the future, and let each individual walk with dignity and control his own destiny."

Ribicoff emphasized that failure to take major and sweeping actions to relieve legitimate tensions and grievances that press so heavily on our central city residents will further widen the gulf that already threatens to divide our nation.

"Failure to mount such an effort," he said, "could also create a leadership vacuum that soon would be filled by the know-nothings of both races."

"Ribicoff felt that, "I would say that America is just about working up to the realities of the situation" and he stated that "I'm afraid that while we're spending $30 billion a year in Vietnam, we will not make the commitment, or make the expenditures that are needed to solve the problem of our cities."

"We're an affluent nation, rich enough to do both," the Senator claimed, "but we won't." He urged that "the crisis of the nation is more in the cities than it is in Vietnam."

"I believe that when the Vietnam war ends," Ribicoff flatly stated, "this nation will do what it can to end the crisis in the cities."

Ribicoff said, "I look to the year 1969 when this will finally be started."

The main reason for the Senator's look to the year 1969 was his prediction of an end to the Vietnam war within the next year through the means of a negotiated settlement at "the conference table in Geneva."

"I think it is a war that everyone realizes cannot be won by anyone in a military sense," stated Ribicoff. "I think there is a realization on both sides that they both are a loser . . . that the world is a loser."

"If there was ever a time that the nation needed clear thinking from its people and its leaders," said the Connecticut Senator, "this is the time."

Rocky's Conclave Adjourns; No Candidacy Announcement

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, still protesting that he isn't a candidate for president, played host in his 5th Ave. apartment yesterday to top Republicans from across the nation.

The guest list was kept secret, but newsmen waiting outside the apartment observed the early arrivals all were Rockefeller supporters including Gov. Tom McCall, Ore. McCall told the reporters he had urged the N. Y. governor to enter the May 28 primary in his state.

There was no indication that former V-Pres. Richard M. Nixon has been invited, although he lives in the same building and was reported home this weekend.

Nixon, whose apartment has a different entrance from Rockefeller's, left the building about an hour after the Rockefeller meeting started. It was reported he had gone to the airport to fly to New Hampshire for some final campaigning before Tuesday's first-in-the-nation primary.

When Rockefeller arrived from his home in Tarrytown, newsmen asked if he might announce his candidacy for president after the meeting.

"No, no," he said. Was he cheered by the support shown for him?

He said the word "cheered" had a "certain implication."

"I'm ready and willing to serve if the people want it," he said.

McCall said Rockefeller and Nixon are "2 giants of the Republican party" and they could make the Oregon primary "the match of the century."

He said if it were held today "it would be almost a dead heat." 3 polls of Oregon Republicans taken recently showed Rockefeller slightly ahead.

A Rockefeller aide said the meeting was to discuss the status of the GOP after the withdrawal of Gov. George Romney, Mich. from the presidential race, leaving the field to Nixon. Rockefeller had backed Romney.

When Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., arrived for the meeting, newsmen asked him what it was to be about.

"I think you know very well," Javits said.

Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller, Ark. said he hoped his brother would decide Sunday to enter the presidential race.

"If he makes a decision to run, this will give those of us in the central part of the nation a chance to organize," he said.

Romney, who was invited, declined to attend, saying he does not engage in politics on Sunday.

William Miller, former congressman from upstate N.Y. who was Sen. Barry Goldwater's running mate in 1964, also appeared for the meeting and told newsmen he thought Rockefeller should actively seek the nomination.

Mayor John V. Lindsay, New York arrived with Sen. Edward Brooke of Massachusetts.

Concentration Camp Survivor to Speak

Elie Wiesel, author, survivor and chronicler of the Nazi concentration camps, will present a lecture at the UMass under the co-sponsorship of the Distinguished Visitors Program and the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation tonight at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

The topic of Wiesel's lecture will be "After Auschwitz—Can We Still Believe."

Born in Hungary in 1928, Wiesel was deported to Auschwitz and after the liberation made his way to Paris, later to Israel, and ultimately to New York where he presently resides. A distinguished novelist, Wiesel has been the recipient of the B'nai B'rith's Jewish Heritage Award for Excellence in Literature, the Prix Rivarol in Paris, the National Jewish Book Council Award, the Remembrance Award of the World Federation of the Bergen-Belsen Association, and numerous other literary awards both here and abroad.

His most recent book, The Jews of Silence, a personal report on Soviet Jewry, was serialized in the Saturday Evening Post.

Other books by Mr. Wiesel include Night, Dawn, The Accident, The Town Beyond the Wall, and The Gates of the Forest. He is also the author of a new play dealing with Soviet Jewry which is soon to be produced in Paris and New York.

Wiesel will give a second lecture tomorrow at Smith College.

Elie Wiesel will speak at Mahar tomorrow at 8 p.m.

Test Results to Be Released Today on Whitmore 'Bomb'

A black box containing batteries, wires, a timing device and liquid center were found Friday in the Whitmore Hall Administration Building. The State Fire Marshall's office is conducting tests on the box with the results to be announced later today.

State Police Lt. George J. Powers of the fire marshal's office said Saturday night that he did not know whether or not the device was a bomb. He added that investigation has probably ceased for the weekend, and a report will not be made until Monday.

The box was found Friday morning after an anonymous caller to university police and the UMass switchboard warned that a "bomb" is in the ladies' room of the Whitmore building." Campus police and janitors located the bomb-like device in the first floor rest room. After emptying the building, they took it to the university dump.

No arrests were made Friday, and campus police said Saturday night that no new developments have occurred.

The bomb squad from Westover Air Base, however, said the object, somewhat larger than a shoe box, "looks like the real thing."

Gallup Poll Results Indicate More Americans Against Vietnam

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP)—A recent Gallup Poll conducted throughout the country indicates that more Americans now than at any previous time feel the United States was wrong to get involved militarily in Vietnam.

Moreover, only 33 per cent of those interviewed thought the United States and its allies were making progress in the war. The figure compared to 50 per cent in a November poll.

The survey showed that seven out of 10 doves — those who favor reducing our military efforts—believed we were wrong to have become involved in Vietnam, but perhaps more surprising, four in 10 hawks also felt we were wrong. A hawk was defined as a person who wants to step up our military effort.

This question has been asked in several surveys in the last two and one-half years: "In view of the developments since we entered the fighting in Vietnam, do you think the United States made a mistake sending troops to fight in Vietnam?

The latest poll showed that 49 per cent of those questioned answered yes, 41 per cent answered no, and 10 per cent had no opinion. In February 1967, replies to the same question were 32 per cent yes, 52 per cent no, and 16 per cent no opinion.

Two years ago in March 1966, 25 per cent of those questioned thought we were wrong in sending troops, 59 per cent said no, and 16 per cent had no opinion.

The survey also showed that 23 per cent of those polled felt the United States and its allies in Vietnam were losing ground, 38 per cent believed we were making progress, and 6 per cent had no opinion.

Urban Affairs Announces Meetings With Human Renewal Fund Experts

The House Republican Urban Affairs task force announced Sunday the first of a series of meetings with urban experts in connection with the Human Renewal Fund, proposed last week by 48 House Republicans.

The fund would cut $6.5 billion from the federal budget and redirect the money to meet urgent needs of the cities. The first meeting will be held Wednesday.

Church to Hold Clothing Exchange

A Clothing Exchange has been set up by the Grace Episcopal Church to sell used clothing Tuesdays from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The Exchange's 25 volunteers code and price every garment that's clean and in good condition. When clothing is sold, 60% of its price is returned to the original owner. The remaining 40% is used for both the Exchange's operating expenses and church donations.

The Clothing Exchange, which has been open from September to June for 20 years, is also a community service. Any clothing not saleable is donated to local and foreign charities, state hospitals, the Salvation Army and to Goodwill.

Since new merchandise is often donated by local shops, the Exchange is a place to find bargains, too.

Romney, Chafee Urge Rockefeller To Challenge Nixon in Oregon Race

WASHINGTON (AP)—Two top Republican governors called on Nelson A. Rockefeller Sunday to meet Richard M. Nixon in an Oregon showdown in the race for the GOP presidential nomination.

They spoke while insiders among Republican moderates privately expressed confidence the New York governor will accept the Oregon challenge.

Gov. George Romney of Michigan said Rockefeller should run in the Oregon primary and indicated he feels Rockefeller cannot capture his party's nod unless he makes the plunge. Until his recent withdrawal, Romney had Rockefeller's backing for the nomination.

Rhode Island Gov. John H. Chafee said Rockefeller should announce he is a presidential candidate in the May 28 contest. "I think he's got to go all out," Chafee said.

Rockefeller said earlier he wouldn't enter any primary, but said Wednesday he would study the Oregon situation to determine whether a genuine demand or draft exists.

"I think that this is a battleground that is favorable to him, or at worst neutral," said Chafee.

Chafee, chairman of the Republican Governors Association, is an open supporter of Rockefeller. He, like Rockefeller, had been backing Romney against Nixon until the Michigan governor bowed out of the race two weeks before the Tuesday primary in New Hampshire.

Chafee said 18 or 19 of the nation's 26 Republican governors now back Rockefeller. But Romney steered a neutral course between the two men now regarded as the frontrunners for the Republican nomination.

"Vietnam is the problem of problems, and neither man has really spoken out in specific terms about Vietnam," Romney said.

Asked if Rockefeller could avoid the primaries and still win the nomination, Romney responded, "As I indicated, I think he should enter the Oregon primary."

Chafee was more explicit: "He should get into the Oregon primary if he's going to win this thing, win the nomination." Romney appeared on the CBS television-radio program "Face the Nation." Chafee was interviewed on the similar ABC program "Issues and Answers."

Oregon, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, and Nebraska have been regarded as the key Republican primaries in 1968, and Oregon is the last of the four. Chafee conceded Nebraska leans to Nixon. Rockefeller took his name off the Wisconsin ballot before Romney's reversal.

He: Seven wonderful years . . . and every college vacation since then we've been coming back to New York and the Sheraton-Atlantic. For Thanksgiving, Christmas, Mid-years, Spring vacations . . .

She: And the Sheraton-Atlantic has such convenience to theatres, museums, libraries, Lincoln Center, Fifth Avenue shops, and with such swinging restaurants right in the Hotel and dancing nightly and such low prices . . . no wonder we students always make out best at the Sheraton-Atlantic.

He: You were always such a romantic, darling.

WHY THE DRAFT?
The Case for a Volunteer Army

By James C. Miller III (Editor), David B. Johnson, Cotton M. Lindsay, Mark V. Pauly, Joseph M. Scolnick, Jr., Robert D. Tollison, Thomas D. Willett

With an Introduction by Senator Edward W. Brooke
A PENGUIN PAPERBACK ORIGINAL $1.25

• • • •

WHY THE DRAFT? is a book that every thoughtful American will want to read, consider and discuss in this important election year.

Seven young political economists take a critical but objective look at the draft in all its aspects and at the alternatives to it. They conclude that conscription in any form is inequitable and then examine in detail the advantages and problems of a volunteer army.

"This is an excellent piece of work by a group of men of sound professional training and of the relevant age and concern. Policy on the draft has always been made by the old and the aging, and never so much as now, and by the specialists in cliché and tradition. This fresh view is exceedingly welcome and I, for one, hope it will be highly influential."

A Crossing Problem

At the intersection of North Pleasant Street and heretofore unnamed street (diagonally across from the Newman Center) a serious traffic hazard exists.

There are no traffic signs of any kind at this point, and at times it is nearly impossible to walk across the street because of the heavy volume of traffic. This situation has been the cause of so many near accidents that it should not go unnoticed. It is especially hazardous during this season, when road conditions and visibility are so poor and since there is no traffic control on the "unnamed" road where it joins North Pleasant Street.

At this time, a solution to the problem is in the planning stages. The Security Office will, sometime in the near future, close off this unnamed road and reopen Stockbridge Road. A stop sign will be placed at the corner of stockbridge Road and North Pleasant Street to help alleviate some of the danger to drivers and pedestrians.

This seems to be a much safer arrangement, but hopefully action will proceed quickly enough to avoid the fatal traffic accident which is inevitable if this condition persists much longer.

Teaching Congressman

Senator J. W. Fulbright, ex-president of the University of Arkansas and head of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has reverted to academic methods of opposing the Viet Nam War in the form of a course for the members of his committee on the "Nature of Revolution". Sen. Fulbright has arranged for lecturers to explore "the nature of revolution and the significance of revolutions abroad for American foreign policy". Prof. Crane Brinton of Harvard gave the first lecture, drawing from his recent book "Anatomy of a Revolution" in which he traces the various phases of revolution.

Dr. Brinton began by examining revolutions in England, France, Russia, and the United States leading up to the "modern revolutions" taking place in China and Vietnam. He suggested that revolutions are internal affairs which the United States should not attempt to interfere in unless they clearly endanger world peace. The Vietnam War, he maintained, was a local, nationalistic revolution. History shows "that there has never been an instance of successful intervention by a major power in the civil strife of another nation." Professor Brinton said that most Americans associate revolutions with Communism and sympathize with anticolonial struggles. The United States, Fulbright contributed, "cannot put up with revolutions that are not in our own image."

This rather belated venture typifies the type of confused "leadership" that is running our country in Washington. While thousands die in Vietnam with little progress being made and domestic problems mount each day that a "long hot summer" draws nearer, a well-intentioned senator arranges untimely lectures attended by one or two senators who haven't hopped a plane home to do some "fence-mending" on Mondays and a Foreign Service officer from the Administration "diligently taking notes at the back of the room." With th situation as it is, who can blame a person for voting Pat Paulson into the presidency?!

Sam Spark Speaks Out
Summer in the City

Because of the recent reports of prospective violence for American cities this summer, urban areas are bracing themselves for racial war. And at the same time, innocent idealists are thronging to join VISTA, to escape the Vietnam War. Let's look in on a typical VISTA volunteer discussing his future with his friendly VISTA recruiter.

"Sir," he said, holding a copy of The Other America with his draft card as a bookmark, "I would like to join VISTA."

"Fine," said the recruiter as he handed him an M-1 rifle and a hand grenade.

"But sir," he said. "Perhaps you misunderstood me. I don't want to go to war. I want to work in the ghettos and help the discriminated and impoverished become useful citizens."

"I understood you" he grunted. "What size helmet do you wear?"

"Helmet? What's the meaning of this?"

The recruiter looked at the volunteer in astonishment "Don't tell me you haven't heard about what the cities are going to be like this summer."

"No. Tell me."

"Well, there's going to be riots like last year's only bigger. There'll be open combat in the streets — bombings — rapes — knifings — murders. No one under 18 will be allowed on the streets unless accompanied by an adult."

"Not really."

"Yes. And that's not all. There's going to be lynchings, looting and molotov cocktails. In short, an all out war between the whites and the blacks — Hey wait a minute. Where are you going?"

"Sorry. I guess VISTA isn't for me. I'm going to enlist so maybe I'll be sent to a safer city — like Saigon."

Campus Comment

A Deteriorating Situation

To the editor:

I am a member of that upper echelon known as seniors, and I have spent nearly eight semesters here as a Zoo major. Many times in these four years I have wanted to write to the Collegian, and today my spirit was such that I just had to. I was on my way from the Union to Morrill when I literally stopped to reflect on the condition of the campus.

The day wasn't particularly lively, so what I thought wasn't at all affected by the dazzle of sunlight or a bright blue cloudless sky or snowflakes gently falling, lightly blanketing every object. Before me was a building in which I had studied, worked, and socialized for four years; yet, had I really ever looked at it?

So, I looked at each floor, and each window, and I considered which room was which, and the differences between "old" Morrill and "new" Morrill, and why, for instance, some windows had black shades whereas others had no shades.

I thought of the beauty of construction in the geometry of the main entrance, "old" though it might be. This led me to a general reflection about the campus—what it was like four years ago versus what it is at present as versus ten years hence. Four years ago, all was too wonderful; the buildings were new and the campus was beautiful and the class rooms had a special atmosphere.

Within the past four years, there has been apparent decay—such as I saw in Morrill. For example, I wouldn't know from the scattered letters on Morrill's facade that it was Justin C. Morrill Science Center.

Little deteriorations like this are all over campus evidently ignored or unseen by the majority. More generalizing and thinking of this sort and I concluded the following, a question which has plagued me a long while: is it really that nobody cares about the campus or is it mostly that we, the students, don't care?

The Men at the Top

KENNEDY AND JOHNSON. By Evelyn Lincoln. New York: Holt, Rinehart & Winston. 207 pp. $4.95.

President Lyndon Johnson is only too well aware that this election year is going to be rough going for him. Braced as he must be for political challenge from every quarter, he will probably be startled, even nettled, at this embarrassing salvo from an unexpected critic. Mrs. Evelyn Lincoln, personal secretary to John F. Kennedy before and after he assumed the Presidency, has written a book about the relationship between the two men, and LBJ is not going to like what he reads

Not that Mrs. Lincoln is ever openly hostile to Johnson: it's just that she constantly contrasts the style and behavior of the two men and the comparison turns out to be highly unflattering to the Texan. Kennedy, she makes clear, was seldom at ease with Johnson, and never more so than on his rare visits to the LBJ Ranch. Its noise and ostentation made him acutely uncomfortable, right down to the Muzak piped in over the public address system.

From her desk outside Kennedy's office Mrs. Lincoln missed very little of what was going on. There was no love lost between Kennedy and Johnson over the race for the Presidency. It made itself apparent for the first time when Johnson backed Hubert Humphrey in the West Virginia primary in the hope of eliminating Kennedy then and there.

After Kennedy was elected, Mrs. Lincoln recalls, he went out of his way to keep his Vice-President usefully occupied. But this was not enough for Johnson. She tells a story about his habit of coming to her office to scrutinize the guest lists for White House dinner parties. If he were not included, he'd ask the reason why. On one occasion, when the President was giving a dinner for his personal friends, he failed to find his name on the list and asked her whether a mistake had been made. She referred the matter to President Kennedy, who replied: "Tell him you've checked and there was no mistake.'

The contrasting backgrounds, characters and manners of the two men was a constant source of irritation between them. Mrs. Lincoln describes a typical meeting: Mr. Johnson's dropping in wasn't so bad, but every time he did he would try to take over. Again and again I would hear him say: 'But now let me tell you, Jack.' Mr. Kennedy's fingers would begin to drum on the desk. Soon he would stand up, or would sit with the muscles in his jaws quivering—a sign to me that he was trying his best to keep from losing his temper."

Johnson, on the other hand, frequently lost his temper, and there are many examples in the book of the resultant scenes. He would express his anger in intemperate language and storm out of rooms. In time, she says, a coolness developed between the two men, and toward the end of his term Kennedy was leaving the Vice-President more and more to his own devices. The Bobby Baker rumors gave the President further cause for alarm.

Near the end of her book Mrs. Lincoln reports a conversation she had with Kennedy. "I ventured one question: 'Who is your choice as running mate'?" Kennedy answered without hesitation: "At this time I am thinking of Governor Terry Sanford of Nortn Carolina. It wi'l not be Lyndon." But fate intervened.

Detroit Psychiatrist Claims Riots Were Not an Expression of Apathy

DETROIT (AP)—A Detroit psychiatrist completing a study of racism for the National Institute of Mental Health says social scienists should stop blaming the white man for all the trouble.

Dr. Elliot Luby, associate director of Detroit's Lafayette Clinic and professor of law and psychiatry at Wayne State University, says last summer's Detroit riot was "not an expression of apathy, hopelessness and despair."

Instead, Luby said, it was an expression of the black man's "growing identity, growing pride, growing esteem and an indication that the black man no longer is measuring himself in terms of the white man."

Luby's report on his findings was broadcast yesterday over the "Sunday Supplement" program of radio station WJR in Detroit.

Luby, who is white, was given a $135,000 grant by the institute, a branch of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, to conduct his study. He and a staff of psychologists and psychiatrists interviewed 400 persons arested in last July's riot and also talked to whites and Negroes in the areas where the rioting took place.

His findings are in direct opposition to a report released last week by the President's Commission on Civil Disorders. The Kerner report placed much of the blame for the riots on white racism and Negroes' poverty and despair.

Luby, however, said he is "becoming weary of social scientists" making white people "culpable for all of the difficulties which blacks have experienced in this country." He said "this seems to be the etiquette of social science research today."

Luby said "Riots in the past have been related to notions of hopelessness and despair, to the unemployment and to poverty."

However, he said, "Our studies strongly suggest that these rioters were a well-employed group making an everage of some $115 to $120 a week, a group which felt that it had substantially improved its status in the community during the past three to five years, a group that was very optimistic about its future.

"And certainly this was not a despairing group of men, or an impoverished group. They in a sense were making a good income and they were rather confident about themselves and their future."

When asked to explain why such people would riot, Luby said, "The closer the distance becomes between the lower and middle class, the more militant and aggressive and assertive the lower class becomes."

Luby said, "Black people. . . are now developing a sense of identity, a feeling of self-determination and feelings that they are now able to control their own community."

Applications Being Accepted For Atlantic Studies Program

Applications are now being accepted for the 1968-69 Atlantic Studies Program sponsored by UMass at the University of Freiburg in Germany.

Established in 1966 at one of Germany's leading institutions, the Freiburg program emphasizes study of the Atlantic Community—the U.S., Canada and Western Europe. The studies deal with the politics, economics, history, society, thought, literature and art of the two continents. Courses are taught by resident UMass faculty and by the University of Freiburg staff.

Designed primarily for graduate students in the humanities and social sciences, the program is also open to qualified undergraduates from accredited institutions in the U.S. and Canada.

The program begins in Freiburg Sept. 15, ends July 31. The program is preceded by a six-week orientation period which stresses language. Qualifications for admission include a good academic record and a thorough knowledge of German.

Inquiries should be addressed to the Department of Germanic Languages and Literature, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002. Admission deadline is May 1.

Efforts to Break Arab-Israeli Deadlock Collapse

JERUSALEM, Israel (AP) — The effort of U.N. special envoy Gunnar Jarring to break the deadlock between the Arabs and Israelis over peace talks apparently has collapsed because of Egypt's refusal to meet with Israeli officials under any circumstances, diplomatic informants said Sunday.

Jarring flew to Jerusalem and met for 90 minutes with Foreign Minister AKBBA Eban and informed him officially of the Egyptian rejection of direct or indirect peace talks with the Israelis, the sources said.

There were reports Jarring had hoped to bring negotiators together on Cyprus, the island in the eastern Mediterranean.

In Cairo the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram said Egyptian Foreign Ministry officials were contacting foreign diplomats to explain Egypt's reasons for turning down peace talks.

The newspaper said the officials, in meeting with the ambassadors of the Soviet Union, Britain, France, India, Spain, Italy and Pakistan, had placed the blame on Israel for the stalemate. Al Ahram added that the ambassadors were told Egypt rejected peace talks because the Israelis insist that the U.S. resolution on the Middle East in November was "merely an agenda for negotiations with the Arabs."

There was some anticipation in Cairo in official circles that a special session of the U.N. Security Council would be called to consider the breakdown in Jarring's mission.

Diplomatic informants in Jerusalem said the Egyptians had reverted to a hard line: No peace talks until after the Israelis pull out of occupied Arab lands in Egypt, Jordan and Syria.

Juilliard String Quartet to Return

The distinguished Juilliard String Quartet will return to UMass for the third in a series of four chamber music concerts Thursday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The group has been quartet-in-residence at the Juilliard School of Music since 1946 and the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. since 1962.

Concert tours have taken the musicians all over the world, and in 1961 they became the first American string quartet to visit the Soviet Union. Since then, they have taken several tours on both sides of the Iron Curtain, the Far East, and North and South America.

First violinist Robert Mann attended the Juilliard School of Music where he studied violin and composition under Edouard Dethier. After his debut in 1941, he toured as soloist and first violinist of the Albuquerque Festival String Quartet.

Second violinist Earl Carlyss also attended the Juilliard School under the auspices of a six-year scholarship. His professional debut was made with the Pasadena Symphony. He has toured Scandinavia twice and also appeared at the Casals Festival in Puerto Rico. He made his recital debut in New York in 1962.

Violist Raphael Hillyer studied at Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and then attended Dartmouth College where he majored in mathematics. After receiving his M.A. degree from Harvard he played with the Boston and NBC Symphonies and toured with the Stradivarius and NBC String Quartets.

Cellist Claus Adam, born in Indonesia of Austrian parents, went to schools in Europe and then came to the U.S. where he studied under Emanuel Feuermann. He has also served as cellist with the National Orchestral Association and the Minneapolis Symphony.

World famous for their extensive repertoire of 135 works ranging from classical to modern composers, the quartet will perform Mozart's Quartet in G Major, K. 387; Beethoven's Quartet in F Minor, Op. 95; and Hindemith's Quartet No. 2 in C Major, Op. 16.

The group's appearance at the University is sponsored by the UMass music department and is open to the public without charge.

'Noah' to Be Presented By Smith College Theatre

The Smith College department of theatre and speech will present "Noah," a play by Anne Wood, in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre in the Center for Performing Arts. The performances will be given March 14, 15, 16, and 17 at 8 p.m.

"Noah" was one of two plays to receive the Denis Johnston Playwrighting Award of 1967, the first time that this contest was held. The author is a senior at Mount Holyoke College.

Miss Wood's "Noah" is based on the Biblical story, but it takes place in the future. A bomb shelter replaces the ark and a nuclear holocaust, the flood. The Smith production, which is directed by Denton Snyder, associate professor of theatre and speech, is being presented in the style of a comic strip. According to Snyder, Miss Wood's play is based on the assumption that man, by his nature cannot be perfect but, that also by his nature, perfection will always be the object of his greatest effort.

In Miss Wood's play, the Noah family is the only one to survive the nuclear holocaust. The continuation of the human race becomes the responsibility of the family, particularly Noah's grandson Benny. Noah's major preoccupation during the time in the bomb shelter is with Benny's education, realizing that Benny will be the sole source of the cultural heritage of mankind.

Members of the cast are Jerry Zaks, graduate assistant, as Noah Pasternack, Phylis Geller '68 as Mrs. Pasternack, Mary Kennedy '70 as Penny Candy, John Pendleton III, graduate assistant, as Mr. Michaels, Stephen Edelstein, graduate assistant, as Job, William Yaggy, graduate assistant, as Shem Pasternack, Annabelle Davis '71 as Rhoda Pasternack, William Cwikowski, graduate assistant, as Sam Pasternack, Catherine Cline '71 as Sonya Pasternack, Robert Emerson, graduate assistant, as Jake Pasternack, Jane Hurst '70 as Tootsie Pasternack, and Peter Judson, as Benny Pasternack.

Also assisting in the production are Susan Haddad '68, assistant director, William Hatch, associate professor of theatre and speech, designer, Elsa Vitols '70, stage manager, Mrs. S. A. Randall, costumer, and Colleen Callahan '69, assistant costumer.

Tickets for "Noah" are now on sale from 2 to 5:30 p.m. at the Alumnae Gymnasium Box Office and will be sold at the door the evenings of each performance from 7:15 p.m.

National Salvation Front Calls For End to 'Rampant Corruption'

SAIGON (AP)—Calling for an end to "rampant corruption" in South Vietnam, the militantly "anti-Communist National Salvation Front" held its first nationwide convention in Saigon Sunday.

More than 1,500 persons representing many of South Vietnam's religious and political groups gathered in a movie house to hear demands for stern austerity measures including food rationing.

The platform of the convention warned that inability to unite and deal effectively with the Communist challenge would "spell doom for our nation."

Although it includes both anti and progovernment elements, the Front has government backing. Many of its organizers are closely linked to Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky.

The platform of the Front is stronger than any pronouncements of the government. Informed sources said convention organizers had a go-ahead from President Nguyen Van Thieu to push for strong reforms.

The convention platform noted that: "More is needed than mere emergency tactical measures like the curfew, martial law, relief of war refugees and so on."

"Under the current war conditions, the nation ought to observe a wartime way of life and practice austerity . . . restriction of nonessential imports, rationing of food, etc."

Senate to Act On Civil Rights

WASHINGTON (AP)—House Democratic leaders looking ahead to Senate passage of the civil rights bill are hoping to get it passed by the House without any changes.

They particularly want to avoid another fight over the open-housing feature in the bill, which plunged the House in to prolonged controversy two year ago.

If their strategy succeeds, House passage would send the bill to the White House, making a conference with the Senate unnecessary and avoiding the threat that a compromise measure would be caught up in another Senate filibuster.

The Senate has its bill ready for a final vote and is expected to pass it Monday after more than seven weeks of debate.

Under present plans when it gets to the House it will be sent to the Rules Committee where a resolution would be sought making it in order for the House to adopt the Senate version.

Such a resolution could not be amended, giving the House only the choice of accepting or rejecting the entire civil rights package.

Besides outlawing discrimination in the sale or rental of housing, the Senate bill bans using force or threats to interfere with anyone exercising his constitutional rights; makes it a crime to cross state lines with the intent of inciting a riot or to teach how to make and use firearms and explosives in riots; and extends Bill of Rights guarantees to American Indians.

RFK Says He's Not Running For Fear of Party Split

LONDON (AP) — Sen. Robert F. Kennedy said Sunday one reason he hadn't run for presidential nomination was a fear of splitting the Democratic party.

Speaking in a prerecorded interview in the United States with the British Broadcasting Corporation, the New York senator added he also considered running "would not be a very hopeful effort."

A third reason was that a "deep division" among the Democrats could result in a Republican being elected, "with whom I might disagree even more."

Asked by British interviewer Keith Kyle whether he reached the conclusion that running for the nomination wasn't worth undertaking, Kennedy replied:

"It's worth undertaking but the possibility of achieving some useful goal seemed to me very slight and I'm not going to run just for the exercise."

Kennedy said he felt the American position in Vietnam was stronger a year ago than it is at the moment.

I've always felt that it's not just a military struggle . . . A strong political base hasn't been built in South Vietnam and if more effort is made perhaps we can accomplish more."

He said he disagreed with President Johnson as far as tactics are concerned, but he had to accept that the President wanted to find a peaceful solution. But he added he felt a settlement with North Vietnam was more difficult to achieve now.

Frosh Win New England Wrestling Crown

Varsity Manages 15th Slot; Paltrineri Hurt in Semis

NEW LONDON, Conn.—UMass's freshman wrestlers came off of a 12-0 dual meet season to overwhelm twenty-three other New England freshmen teams in the 22nd annual New England Intercollegiate Wrestling Association Championships, held at Roland Fieldhouse, the Coast Guard Academy, March 8 and 9.

UMass entered a man in every weight except heavyweight, and all ten men placed in their respective weights with three champions, three second places, three thirds, and one fourth. During the two day sessions the Little Redmen racked up 100 team points, and were followed by Springfields 64, M.I.T.'s 61, Brown 52, Central Connecticut 51, and UConn 41.

The three UMass champions were Nick DiDomenico wrestling at 115 lbs., Tom Young at 152 lbs., and Bob Willman at 177 lbs. Nick won his gold medal by pinning Gordon of Tufts, decisioning Galperin of Springfield 3-0, pinning D'Errico of Lowell State and decisioning Edwards of Coast Guard in the finals 7-3.

Tom Young won his championship by pinning Evans of Lowell Tech, and then pinning Phillips of Hartford, decisioning Heaton of Wesleyan 14-3, and decisioning Stahlman of New Hampshire in the finals 5-2.

Bob Willman won the third gold medal by pinning Baker of Wesleyan, decisioning Chambers of Springfield 2-0, and decisioning Zager of Central Conn. 6-4 in the finals.

Second place winners were Earle McCartney at 130, Bob Freeman at 145, and Tom Andrewes at 160. Earle McCartney reached the finals by pinning Brunner of Brown, and pinning Freiberger of U Conn. In the finals Earle dropped a 2-1 decision to Pollard of Springfield.

Bob Freeman reached the finals by decisioning Shallecross of Dartmouth 12-0, pinning Greene of Brown, and pinning Cary of Coast Guard. Bob lost in the finals to Detrick of Central Conn. 6-3.

Tom Andrewes reached the finals by decisioning Kinsman of Lowell Tech 2-0, and decisioning Dunne of Springfield 2-0. Tom picked up his silver medal after losing to Beemer of Brown in the finals 5-1.

Consolation winners for third place were Phil Davis at 123, Mike Brauner at 168, and George Zguris at 191. Davis decisioned Bailey of Central Conn. 9-2, and then lost to Smedley by a pin in overtime. Davis came back in the consolations to defeat Teitlebaum 3-2, and Sheppard of M. I. T 4-2 to take third place.

Mike Brauner started his winning by a referee's decision over Harris of Central Conn., before losing 6-4 to Hawkins of Williams. Mike returned to the consolations and defeated Wendt of Coast Guard by a pin, and decisioned Turley of Springfield 6-2.

George Zguris lost his first bout to Lockhart of Wesleyan 9-3, but came back to take two close decision wins in the consolations from Brown of Central Conn., and Hermes of U Conn to take third place.

Howie Kaplan placed fourth by pinning Connors of Emerson, pinning Beck of Coast Guard, before losing to Saia of UConn 1-0. Howie came back in the consolations to pin Ferg of Brown before losing in the consolation finals 5-3 to Granowitz of Central Connecticut.

It is quite unusual to have every team member place in a tournament of this size. There was great team and individual effort on the part of the Little Redmen. Balance goes a long way in any sport towards winning championships. Wrestling is looking up on the U Mass campus.

The Varsity wrestlers placed 15th in the field of 24, and could only come up with one place winner. Dave Wade wrestling at 123 managed a fourth place by Decisioning Rohrback of Hartford 10-0 before losing to the eventual champ Matias of Springfield 7-2. Wade came back through the consolations with a pin over Grillo of W.P.I., and a forfeit from Levin of Amherst before losing to Davidson of Brown 5-0 in the consolation finals.

UMass hopes of making a mark in the tournament went down the drain when Gene Paltrineri lost to finalist Lerman of Brandeis in the semi finals. Seeded fourth Gene first pinned Orsini of Holy Cross, and then decisioned Wu of M.I.T., 8-2. After Gene's loss to Lerman Gene withdrew from the consolation rounds because of an elbow injury suffered in his second bout with Wu. Gene had placed fourth in 1967 and was aiming for higher position this year.

Springfield won the NEIWA for the 18th consecutive time with 104 points. M.I.T. with 72 points and three champions with a sophomore team made a good showing. Wesleyan, who had defeated Springfield in a dual meet just last week was third with one champion and four second place winners and 61 points. Wesleyan had a chance to upset Springfield going into the final round, but Springfield came up with five first places to take the trophy home again. Marchetti of Central Connecticut who once attended Oklahoma won the outstanding wrestler award at 137 lbs.

N. E. Meet Finale

Mermen Take 7th Place

SPRINGFIELD—Captain Bob Asquith led his teammates to seventh place in the 39th N.E.I.S.A. Championships at Springfield College as he took second in the 200 Yd. Backstroke, fourth in the 100 Yd. Backstroke and seventh in the 200 Yd. Ind. Medley. Bob's victories were further heightened by the fact that, in all three of his events, he set new University varsity swim records.

Bob, only a junior, was one of the most mentioned swimmers of the meet, when by chance he missed the finals of the 200 yd. Ind. Medley by one one-hundreth of a second, and won the consolation finals with the fastest time of all competitors.

Diver Dave Larson also a junior captured two second places in the one and three meter diving. Dave's form and execution of dives were superb. His choice of dives easily overcame the tight competition and pleased the capacity crowd as he spun, twisted, and flipped his way to the coveted silver medals.

Sophomore Mark Miller placed eighth in the 100 yd. Freestyle as he came within four-tenths of a second of the University record. With more practice and work, Mark could prove to be a top swimmer next year for Coach Joe Rogers.

The relay team of Nowak, Miller, Morton and Senior lent their efforts for points as they captured tenth place in the 400 yd. Free Relay against a strong field of swimmers.

Bob Asquith and Dave Larson, because of their high performance in these sectional championships, have earned positions of competition in the National College Swim Championships in Georgia next week.

Skiers Cop Conference Title for Initial Time

NORTH CONWAY, N.H. —The UMass ski team became the NEISC conference champions at Cranmore Mt. in North Conway, N.H. Saturday. This marks the first time in the history of the school that the ski team has won the conference.

The Boston University giant slalom was run on very soft and wet snow, while the mercury soared into the sixties. Coach MacConnell selected the right combination of wax, applied in a stepped pattern to break the suction of the skis on the very wet snow. The wax proved to be very important on the sun-bathed flat sections of the course where skiers from other schools showed noticeably.

Ned Kelley, who suffered a badly sprained ankle earlier this season, was reinjured prior to the start of the race. While memorizing the course, another racer fell and piled into Kelley. During the race, his ankle was weak and the number two skier for the University had to pull out of the badly rutted course.

Collin Garstang, Dave Kamila, Jimmy Garstang and Mike Zanoli finished well in pacing the team to its first place victory over Amherst, B.U., Tufts, Bentley, W.P.I., Northeastern, AIC and Boston College. The same skiers finished high in the individual standings for the season.

Collin Garstang was first, Dave Kamila, seventh, and Mike Zanoli, eighth. With four skiers in the top ten, UMass took the championship.

The NEISC held an awards banquet at the Town and Country Inn in Gorham, N.H., Saturday night after the race. John Hurd received the annual award for sportsmanship and service to the conference. Dave MacBride, B.U. coach and president of the NEISC presented the award.

Trackmen Are Shut Out in IC4A Meet

By JOEL FOX

NEW YORK, N.Y. — A weary UMass track team finished its winter season Saturday at the IC4A competition in New York's Madison Square Garden. The UMass runners for the second straight year were unable to score in the competition that has representatives from the major colleges of the Eastern United States.

The man coming the closest to scoring was sophomore hurdler, Marc Levefer, who made it to the quarterfinals of his event. His time of 7.7 seconds established a UMass varsity record. The only field event man to travel to New York was high jumper, John Ariensen, who did not qualify for the finals of the high jump as only the top six men were chosen.

Three Redmen tracksters were entered in the 600. Of the three men, John Andersen, Bob Hasselbaum and Dave Evans, Andersen ran the best. He covered the distance in 1:14, six tenths of a second from the final qualifying time of 1:13.4. These 600 men and senior co-captain Greg Bowman made up the UMass mile relay team.

This relay team placed third in their heat with a time of 3:26, losing to Manhattan and Holy Cross. The time of the relay team was the 12th fastest of the meet.

The freshmen also entered a relay team, made up of half-miler Ellio Stevens, quarter milers Paul Taylor and Gerry Spellman, and miler Ron Wayne. This quartet finished fifth in their heat of fifteen with only the top two qualifying for the finals at night.

The top team of the meet was again Villanova with Harvard and Army following them in the point totals.

Training Session Slated By 'Daily Collegian' Editors

By JUDY LEONARD
News Day Editor

In an attempt to increase and improve campus news coverage the Daily Collegian Board of Editors has announced that applications for the second training program of the semester are now being accepted. The training program will begin Monday March 18 directed by Editor-in-Chief Jack Dean.

Dean explained that the training program consists of a number of half hour sessions in which general information of the Daily Collegian is discussed. Upon completion of the training program students begin an intern period in their selected areas of journalistic interest.

Both Managing Editor Don Epstein and News Editor Ron LaBrecque have commented on the success of the first training program. LaBrecque added that "even though we obtained a large group of fine reporters from the first session, the staff isn't as large as it ideally should be." He went on to say that reporters are especially needed in the area of fine arts.

"We've done pretty well," Epstein said, "in disproving the myth that staffers must be outstanding writers and put in a 40 hour week on the paper." The managing editor said that only 3 to 5 hours a week devoted to the paper is expected and desired by the editors from staffers.

The three editors agreed that exceptional writing talent does not necessarily make a good reporter. LaBrecque said that "only an average writing talent is required. More necessary is the ability to discriminate between the important and the unimportant. We want people who can take an issue or event and look at it objectively and piece its main components together into an informative report to the campus community."

Dean said that anyone interested in becoming a Daily Collegian staffer could leave his name with the secretary in the Daily Collegian office any day this week or come to an organizational meeting which will be held at 6:30 p.m. Thursday evening March 14 in the Student Union.

Rusk Restates that U. S. Attacked In Tonkin; Hearing Continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Sen. J. W. Fulbright exchanged firm, unchanged and opposing views in public confrontation on the Vietnam war Monday—and Rusk reported President Johnson has reached no new decisions on his course in that conflict.

The setting was a nationally televised and broadcast session of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which is chaired by the Arkansas Democrat and included several other vigorously dovish senators.

It came against a background of recently published reports that the administration may add as many as 200,000 troops to the half-million-man force already in Vietnam. Much of Monday's dialogue turned on this possibility—and the role Congress might play in any massive escalation.

Rusk said what he has said before: the United States is "prepared to negotiate today without any conditions whatever." And the State Department said later this represents no change in policy.

Chairman Fulbright said what he has said before: U.S. policies in Vietnam "have had and will have effects both abroad and at home that are nothing short of disastrous."

But with the exception of opening statements by Rusk and Fulbright, the anticipated clash between Rusk and the Senate's most prominent war critic failed to materialize in the morning hours of the hearing.

Fulbright set that straight at the outset, welcoming Rusk with the observation that "It is not possible to talk about foreign aid, or indeed any problem of this country's foreign relations, without discussing the war in Vietnam . . ."

"I am sure you would not want us to remain mute, given our misgivings, doubts and fears. Silent and acquiescent or obsequious legislatures are not symbols of democracy but of totalitarianism."

Eighteen of the 19 Foreign Relations Committee members were grouped about the massive committee table. The only absentee was Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., who is winding up his New Hampshire primary campaign as an antiwar candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Fulbright and Rusk agreed on what the secretary described as "the central problem before the human race — how to organize peace in the world."

But they were far apart on how to attain that peace.

Fulbright and others—especially Sen. Wayne Morse, D-Ore., who voiced his anger quite loudly—made it clear they felt they were misled by the administration when the Senate approved a resolution endorsing Johnson's Southeast Asia policies after the Gulf of Tonkin incident in 1964.

Fulbright charged that the resolution — which followed reported attacks of North Vietnamese beats on two U.S. destroyers—was not based on true facts.

"Do you believe the chairman rightly states it was not founded on fact." Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., asked Rusk.

"I do not," Rusk said. "I am

Friday's 'Bomb' Harmless After Tests

The State Fire Marshall's office announced yesterday that the "bomb" found in the Whitmore Administration Building Friday was "harmless."

The device, which was found in a ladies' room, contained harmless glycerine, according to the state laboratory report. Glycerine is a non-explosive liquid.

Campus Police said that they are continuing the investigation to discover who planted the device and phoned in the tip.

Fire Destroys Home Of UMass Professor

The home of Prof. Olaf Prufer, anthropology professor at UMass, was heavily damaged by fire Sunday night.

According to Amherst Fire Chief Doherty, the fire started in the basement where Prof. Prufer had stored a large collection of bones, including a valuable collection of Indian bones. His collections had received much recognition lately. An entire collection of about 350 burials, the result of five years work, was destroyed by the fire.

Prof. Prufer has been living in his Amherst home with his wife and two children since he came to campus last June. He has been teaching here for the past two semesters.

Many faculty members in the Sociology - Anthropology Department at UMass suspended classes on Monday as they and students aided in searching the gutted house for salvageable objects.

Wiesel Sees Auschwitz as Man's Final Death Where Everything Died

By PHYLLIS COYNE
Staff Reporter

"Because one cannot believe after Auschwitz, one must believe after Auschwitz: it is the only hope," stated Elie Wiesel, author and survivor of the Nazi concentration camps, last night at Mahar Auditorium.

Co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, Wiesel spoke about "After Auschwitz — Can We Still Believe?".

Wiesel began his lecture by saying that students are asking fine questions and that he has no more answers than they do. "We can only join in a mutual quest for answers."

"I believe man underwent final death in Auschwitz."

People are killing absurdly in Vietnam and elsewhere as a result of Auschwitz was Wiesel's claim. He attributed the hippie movement and the search for love to the Nazi holocaust. "Love died in Auschwitz; everything died in Auschwitz." Questions raised by Wiesel included the following:

"How can one believe in man knowing what man did to man?" As an example of man's inhumanity to man he cited the lack of aid and eventual plundering of Jewish homes by his non-Jewish neighbors and school "friends" in Eastern Europe when the Jews were forced out. He "lost all hope in man."

"How can one believe in culture of intellect?" The high executioners all had Ph.D.s. They could recite poetry and kill children "with the same innocense". "The first people to collaborate were the intellectuals," he claimed.

"How can one believe in God, in an owner of the universe when Jews have seen what they have? Why should the Jew be Jewish?" Wiesel believes that even the Jews did little to help the Jews and some kept knowledge of the holocaust from others in their indifference.

International News Briefs

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Two black Africans convicted of the political murder of another black were hanged Monday by Rhodesia's white minority government. Britain immediately ruled out any further negotiations with the breakaway colony.

Francis Chiresa and Taka Jeremiah went to the gallows after a special meeting of Prime Minister Ian Smith's Cabinet decided Sunday that "the law must take its course."

Three other blacks convicted of murder had been hanged in Salisbury last week in defiance of a reprieve by Queen Elizabeth.

The action was condemned by Britain, the U.S., other nations around the world and two committees of the U.N., and Pope Paul VI appealed for clemency for the more than 100 blacks under death sentence in the territory.

The latest executions heightened pressure on British Prime Minister Harold Wilson's government to act against Rhodesia.

At the Sunday meeting, the Smith Cabinet granted clemency to 9 other blacks who had been sentenced to die prior to the declaration of independence in 1965. The cases of 4 additional Africans, who had been scheduled for execution with Chiresa and Jeremiah, are still under review, an official announcement said.

LANY, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Several thousand persons marched Sunday in a public memorial to Jan Masaryk that ended two decades of officially imposed silence about Czechoslovakia's first postwar foreign minister, who died mysteriously in a plunge from a window.

The mass pilgrimage to a wreath-laying ceremony conducted by Prague Univ. students at Masaryk's grave in this village west of the capital took place in a driving snowstorm. Newspapers praised Masaryk as a man who had sought independence for his country.

The affable, pro-West diplomat, son of the first president of the republic and of his American-born wife, plunged from a second-floor window of Palais Czernin, the Foreign Ministry, on March 1, 1948.

Masaryk's death two weeks after the Communists took over Czechoslovakia was officially listed as suicide. Some Western writers have speculated that he was assassinated by being pushed out of the window. Rumors about his death live on.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Foreign Minister Torsten, Nilsson said after a meeting with U. S. Ambassador William W. Heath on Monday the views of Sweden and the U.S. on the Vietnam war are "irreconcilable at present.

Heath has been summoned back to Washington for consultations on deterioration in U.S.-Swedish relations over the war.

Nilsson acknowledged that U. S.-Swedish relations are "a little disturbed" but he contended they would improve when the war is over.

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Communist activity slackened last week after 3 months of intensive fighting in the Thai backlands, the government reported Monday.

Premier Thanom Kittikachorn said that in the week's actions 1 Communist was killed, 9 were captured and 10 others surrendered. Government losses weren't announced.

He reported government forces also seized a Communist terrorist camp capable of accommodating 40 men.

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israli troops will continue to blow up houses in occupied territory if it is proved they are used for sabotage operations, the Defense Ministry declared Monday. One house blown up last week was that of a suspected saboteur.

CALCUTTA, India (AP)—A steel foundry 125 miles northwest of here in a coal mining area was closed indefinitely Monday after the ground under the 1-acre site started sinking.

The Indian Iroff & Steel Co., the nation's third biggest steel producer which owns the plant, said heavy machines were tilting dangerously, rivets had snapped and girders were bent.

PARIS (AP)—The imminent move out of town by Paris's old central market has caused concern among tramps as well as antiquarians. Rats are as numerous as people in Paris, and it is feared that, deprived of their market food supply, they will attack the tramps who live under Paris bridges.

DUNSTABLE, Eng. (AP) — A 4,000-yr.-old skeleton found in a chalk quarry near here shows signs of surgery for a brain tumor, archaeologists report. The skull is badly pitted inside, indicating a tumor, but there are signs of healing around the edges of a neatly cut hole in the bone.

convinced there were two attacks on our destroyers in the Gulf of Tonkin . . . I believe it was a wholly unwarranted action, and the air strikes we then carried out were measured carefully in terms of retaliation."

"For the record, Mr. Secretary, why are we in Vietnam?" Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., inquired.

"To take steps to meet the common danger," Rusk said.

Morse bore down hard on the Tonkin Gulf incident. His face flushed, he cried at one point, "I believe the destroyer Maddox was on a provocateur patrol: I believe history will show that we were provocateurs!"

Morse challenged Rusk to turn the Vietnam impasse over to the United Nations Security Council.

Rusk said the United States believes "the Security Council has responsibility in Southeast Asia," but because "Hanoi and Peking feel it is not a matter for the Security Council, the feeling in the council has been that it would be a mistake."

Rusk stated U.S. policy toward negotiations this way — and a State Department spokesman later said it indicated no change in U.S. policy:

"In terms of negotiations, we are prepared to negotiate today without any conditions whatever. We'll meet today.

"They have raised a major condition: the stopping of the bombing. We are prepared to negotiate about conditions, to see if we can't find some way to bring about a cease-fire and get serious talks started toward peace."

Columnist Comments On UMass Today

By MILTON R. BASS

EDITOR'S NOTE: Milton R. Bass is an alumnus of UMass and writes a daily column in the Berkshire Eagle. Mr. Bass was a participant in the recently held Communications Symposium at UMass. This is a reprint of his March 7, 1968 column.

ALL YOU PEOPLE who have been screaming about how much you hate this newspaper can now put your money where your mouth is and start one of your own. There are now some 50 "underground" newspapers in this country, and they have a combined circulation of some 350,000.

If you'll take the trouble to typewrite your own stories and paste them up on the right sized sheets, you can get about 5,000 copies of an 8-page paper printed for $80 in an offset shop in a big city. Then you just have to go around selling them and you can end up with a profit on your investment.

I RECENTLY took part in a symposium on communications at the University of Massachusetts and part of my preparation was to read the college papers of the university, Smith College, Mount Holyoke and an underground paper called "Mother of Voices." This is published by a group of students and graduate students from the colleges in the Amherst valley plus a collection of dropouts and flower children.

The regular college papers are concerned with only one thing: Vietnam. The male students are obviously eating, drinking and sleeping the problem, and the female students are worried because the male students are worried and because the war itself sickens their feelings of rightness. It is obvious that nearly all of the faculties are dovish and and that the rapport between students and teachers has never been higher.

IT IS ALSO obvious that the teachers are somewhat different now than in my day because one feature story had to do with a botany professor who did 50 pushups in front of his class before starting his lecture and then devoted most of his time to discussing the social effects of the birth control pill. Its no wonder that some of my tomatoes won't blossom.

The thing that most caught my attention in the college newspapers is the free use of the pejorative noun describing steer manure. Students nowadays use this term as a catchall phrase to describe the phony, the absurd and the ridiculous in matters pertaining to social, economic or political life.

MOTHER OF VOICES makes no distinctions in obscenity level. It uses all the words there are in its columns, and it uses them without fear or favor. Like all the underground newspapers, Mother (and I hope you know what that word means) puts down police (always called "fuzz"), political administrations that are in, President Johnson and the Vietnam war. The editors of the paper are continually being busted by the fuzz for publishing dirty words. Judges have little sympathy for this kind of freedom of the press, and each week the paper lists how many times its editors have been brought to court, how many editors are incarcerated and how many cases are pending.

THESE PAPERS annoy the political, social and economic establishments because too often what they are saying is true. Mather states that forthcoming issues will carry stories about: "business abuses, water pollution, the peace movement, American fascism, local sweatshops, overpricing, hiring discrimination, economic monopolies and artists of the Connecticut Valley."

The paper doesn't worry about being fair to its enemies, about law suits or about responsibility to other than its own beliefs. In short, it's about as fascist as its fascist enemies. It is also badly written, impossibly edited and hard to read.

But if you want to see what an underground paper looks like, you can write to Mother of Voices at 110 Prospect St. in Northampton. The paper sells for a quarter an issue, but I'm sure if you enclose a buck, they will mail you one first class in a plain brown envelope.

WIESEL . . .

"How can I believe when I see no shield offered anywhere?"

Wiesel answered by saying, "Because there is no reason, one must do it. We must take despair and turn it into song.

Wiesel entertained questions at a reception in Memorial Hall after the lecture.

'Yankee' Plans First Annual Poetry Contest

The editors of Yankee Magazine have announced the magazine's first annual poetry contest, designated The Annual Yankee Magazine Poetry Award.

Yankee, the monthly magazine of New England with a national monthly circulation of 390,000, will award a total of $175 for the three best poems published in the magazine's monthly poetry page during 1968. First prize will be $100; second prize $50, and third prize $25.

Poems will be judged by Hayden Carruth, noted poet, novelist and critic.

The Poetry Page of Yankee Magazine is edited by Jean Burden, who said that Yankee's only restriction is that submitted poetry be of high quality. "We care not whether poems are rhymed or unrhymed, and they needn't necessarily be about New England," she said. "However, long poems have difficulty at Yankee; we prefer verse of no more than 30 lines."

Commenting on the new contest, Mr. Judson Hale, Managing Editor, said that it is hoped that the competition will be further incentive to both established and fledgling poets. Our annual contest, we feel, will help sustain and strengthen Yankee's tradition for providing poets with a continuing vehicle for expression, and our readers with the best possible verse."

UMass Chorale Will Travel Far in Spring Tour; Piano Solo Featured

The University of Massachusetts Chorale will begin its most extensive spring tour to date when it leaves March 23 to give nine concerts in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois.

Under the direction of Dr. Richard du Bois, director of choral music at UMass, the 60-voice a capella choir will present a repertoire of sacred and secular music from the Renaissance to the present, including religious music, Negro spirituals, folk tunes and sea chanteys.

The group will perform a 16th century composition in which the choir voices imitate the sound of church bells, and an adaptation of a traditional death chant from the Georgia Sea Islands with bongo drums as the sole accompaniment. Composers represented include Gottfried Wagner, Bach, Palestrina, Lotti, Carrissimi, Brahms and Poulenc.

The Chamber Singers, an ensemble of ten singers who perform with the Chorale and as a solo group, will sing a selection of madrigals and chamber music by Stevens, di Lasso, Hindemith and Janequin. Selected from the Chorale for their outstanding ability, the Chamber Singers have appeared on television and radio.

A piano solo by Roger Spadafora, a graduate student in music at the University, will also be featured. He will play Scarlatti's Sonata, Brahms' Rhapsody in B minor, Schumann's "In Der Nacht," and Chopin's Scherzo No. 2.

In its tenth year of musical activity, the Chorale is one of eight performing groups of the UMass music department. The voices are selected by audition from among music students and others from the UMass community.

"Association" Concert Tickets On Sale Now

The Association, a group whose meteoric rise to popularity has made recording history, will make its campus debut on April 6, under the auspices of the Southwest Social Committee.

The Association has managed to maintain an individuality of appearance by avoiding the long hair, beards, and other cliches of modern groups.

Norman Mark, writing for the Chicago Daily News, said that, when he viewed the Association, he saw "six neat looking young men, with hair just long enough to be in, but not so long that mothers would want to protect their daughters from them."

But it is not only appearance, which distinguishes the Association. Their music is totally original and the feeling behind it reflects life.

Before making their first public appearance, the Association lived together in an old house and rehearsed together every day for five months while perfecting their acts. When they felt they were ready, they tried out their act in a local nightclub. That was the beginning.

Today the group is composed of Brian Cole, Terry Kirkman, Jim Yester, Russ Giguerem, Ted Vluedel and Larry Ramos.

Appearing with the Association will be the popular British group, the Yardbirds.

Social Committee Chairman, Tom Mason, said that "the combination of these two groups will yield the best concert we've had this year."

Tickets will be on sale tomorrow at the Student Union box office. As a special convenience to the southwest area residents, tickets will be on sale tomorrow in Dining Common No. 7 and Thursday in Dining Commons No. 5 between the hours of 4:30 and 8:30.

Hillel to Celebrate Purim With Puppets and Carnival

Hillel is preparing a special program for the children of Jewish faculty members this Sunday at the Masonic Temple in Amherst. Purim, a Jewish holiday commemorating the deliverance of the Jews from the wicked Haman as told in the Book of Esther, the story of the deliverance of the Jews will be narrated by students and acted out by the marionettes of Leonard Radin '69. Jewish folk songs will accompany the show.

This is one of the programs of B'nai B'rith Hillel, serving 1,400-1,500 Jewish students and faculty at UMass. Under its newly elected president, Mike Ross '69, Hillel will sponsor many programs, cultural, religious, educational and social.

Besides the puppet show for Purim, Mike Ross has started other activities. Sabbath Day services were changed by the addition of male and female direction of the services. On April 27, Hillel will sponsor a benefit nightclub at the Student Union to raise money for the United Jewish Appeal (UJA), which serves Jewish immigrants and to help celebrate Jewish Independence Day. Lectures and brunches are planned for the next two months. The brunch on April 7 will have as its theme "Israel and the six-day war."

Coll Lecture Given Tonight

Edward T. Coll, the founder and head of the Revitalization Corps, America's citizens' peace corps, will speak at 8:00 tonight in the Middlesex Room of the Student Union.

His subject will be the objects and goals of the corps and its efforts to bring about greater understanding between families in a city's ghetto community and those in its outlying areas. He will also describe programs to be initiated by the University's newly formed chapter of this organization.

Re-examining Older Drivers

While elderly motorists hold unrestricted rights to the wheel, innocent people are dying. Immediate re-examination of the legislation concerning these rights is vital if man is to make a responsible effort to prevent a needless waste of lives. And this problem concerns the young as well as the old, for anyone can fall the victim of the inadequate driver.

No one can deny that a person, having reached seventy years of age, suffers significant physical deficiencies. The condition might be connected with the heart, eye, or ear, each a definite handicap for the driver. Or the problems might be attributed to vascular disorders, arthritis, rheumatism, mental alertness, physical coordination, or any number of other age connected disorders, each in itself a serious hazard.

Yet, the elderly driver, who is equally as capable of destruction as the drunken driver, remains relatively unrestricted. He merely encloses his renewal check in an envelope every three years, sends it to the Registry of Motor Vehicles, and receives his new license. There are no strings attached for another three years when he will again merely repeat the procedure.

Repeatedly there is talk concerning an investigation of the issue, usually most heated and determined after a fatal incident, but the talk diminishes, action never begins, and to the present, no satisfactory measures have been taken. The excuse is always the same. Hesitation is attributed to an age discrimination feature. And, as action is delayed, more people die.

Mandatory annual license examinations for all drivers would eliminate much of the problem. Absolutely no age discrimination is involved, and those elderly people, would be prevented from endangering their lives and the lives of others.

In addition, however, it is a necessity that we require all drivers, having reached a predetermined age, to undergo an annual physical examination, including eye and ear tests. This must be done to assure the physical capability of every elderly driver.

Prolonged negligence in this matter has already resulted in numerous fatal accidents. The problem calls for immediate action. Driving is a responsibility and those unable to cope with this responsibility must be prevented not as a punishment but rather as a precaution.

Are Dissenters Cowards?

It has become increasingly annoying to hear student dissenters chastised as cowards. The argument is that those who protest do so because they are afraid of fighting in Vietnam. Let's be realistic, virtually no one enters war totally unafraid; everyone has a certain amount of fear.

Yet, if cowardice were the only reason for dissent, there are ways of avoiding combat other than outright civil disobedience. Strange as it may seem, it can be done within the armed forces. Rather than await induction, a "coward" could enlist in the Navy or Air Force, greatly minimizing the chance he may see actual combat. While this would entail an extra year in uniform, to a "coward" it is far superior than increasing his possibility of being killed and losing fifty years of life.

Rather than submit to governmental dictates, the dissenter, in an act of civil disobedience, refuses to enter the armed services in any capacity; he will not support a war he does not believe in.

Following his conscience, he is fully aware of the consequences: a possible five year jail sentence and ten thousand dollar fine. In addition, once the "coward" has served his primary sentence and returns to society, he carries the stigma of being an ex-convict with a jail record; he can't vote, can't run for public office, can't hold any professional position (lawyer, doctor, etc.), and has a near impossible task should he try to obtain a passport.

There are also those "cowards" who leave the country or desert the armed forces (the count is now twenty). Rather than submit to the dictates of the country, they leave, unable to return save under the threat of court action. Thus they are destined to spend their entire adult life in a nation completely foreign to them a nation in which they have no ties whatsoever, and no direction. In short, they must start life anew, void of any security they may have built in the past twenty years.

If courage to us is a quality equated with carrying a gun into battle, I'm afraid it's about time we reevaluated our ideals.

Better Schools Necessitate Better Universities

(ACP) — Teaching in grade and high school has changed radically in recent years with the addition of such courses as modern math and a wide range of electives formerly thought possible only in college, comments the University Daily of Texas Technological College, Lubbock.

Changed attitudes toward education among high school students have also resulted in better-qualified entering freshmen. High school remains the "blast" it always was, but competition is greater and the university-nurtured obsession with grades has taken root there. The university-bound student studies harder because he knows he must.

With such giant steps in education at lower levels, there's a danger the university may cease to provide a challenge to students unless equally impressive strides are made in higher education. With exceptions in the sciences, the university tends to maintain the status quo in course offerings and requirements for scholastic achievement.

When more is required of the high school student, more should be required of the university student; otherwise, the entering freshman may find the university merely an extension of high school rather than a new academic challenge.

Parking Bill Is Defended

To the editor:

Thursday's lead editorial discussed my parking bill. The reason I submitted that bill stems basically from the failure of the appropriate officials to permit residents of the North Quad to park in N-lot, the logical lot for them, while those same officials for the last year and a half have permitted vast empty spaces in the lot south of SBA, a lot which is equally convenient to campus for many commuters presently parking in N-lot.

The right to have cars on campus was effectively denied the seniors of the North Quad in Fall 1966, when their spaces were given to faculty and they were told to park in F-lot which is divided in two parts, each at an opposite end of campus from the North Quad. I would not condemn commuters in N-lot to such a fate in spite of Mr. Bromery's unenlightened claim. Parking in F-lot, it is often easier and quicker for a resident to walk downtown than to get his car and drive there. N-lot is the only student lot at all near the North Quad although even then relative convenience would be less than enjoyed by most other residence areas and infinitely worse than parking conditions enjoyed by commuters at their homes.

Mr Bromery claims that commuters from Springfield would be disledged by my propossal. That is utterly false. They are the last who would be moved. The number of commuters affected would scarcely dent the number parking in N-lot nor would it fill the abyss in the lot south of SBA. Those students commuting in the Amherst area in 10 or 15 minutes would find themselves within ten minutes of most academic buildings on campus and still take less time getting to class than many campus residents.

The only group seriously attempting to drive to class is the commuters, contrary to Mr. Bromery's aspersions. There are other uses for cars. There are jobs off campus which pay a legal, fair wage. There are dining facilities off campus which consistently serve good food. There are stores off campus which lack a monopoly and are thus forced to keep prices and service relatively within reason. There are friends off campus to visit who can entertain guests of the opposite sex in their rooms and who do not have to beg for such a right. Those same friends don't have to fear a hypocritical alcoholic beverage regulation which even high administrators consider best when least enforced.

In short I believe that Mr. Bromery was sadly mistaken in his editorial and that the only fair thing the Student Senate can do is to overwhelmingly approve S-49.

Rebutting Article's Opinion

To the Editor:

We are disturbed by the article (March 4) by a staff reporter discussing the series of films presented by the Faculty Group on Peace and War. The writer criticized one film in particular, Sons and Daughters, for "appealing to one's emotions rather than one's reason." We feel that the film in question did not appeal exclusively to one's emotions. More importantly, we are dismayed at the implicit assertion that the emotional perception and understanding of anything is of course misleading, erroneous, perhaps even bad. We have heard this argument from some of our academic colleagues, and it is frightening, in practice if not in theory.

One example of the eventual application of this "reason"-as-the-highest-good attitude is the military's arguments for our present policy in Vietnam of completely devastating areas which are suspected of harboring Viet Cong. This practice of mass destruction of a people and their way of life (some refer to this as genocide) is necessary, we are told, in order to save them. Efficient computer calculations show that if we lay waste so much land and displace so many people, then we will defeat the Viet Cong.

We are not invited to be "emotional" — to ask indignantly: What right do we have to play chess with the Vietnamese people? By what divine authority are we to decide what is right and what is wrong in Vietnam? (or Thailand, or the Dominican Republic, or Bolivia?)

The government officials pursuing this war have apparently sold out "reasonable thinking" to "logical thinking." Reasoning as we see it means carefully weighing all evidence and logically arriving at a conclusion. Our emotions are the source of our compassion, and compassion ought to be the basis for all morality. Our reasoning powers should encompass our compassion, not exclude it.

It is interesting that the film which the reviewer seemed to like best, The Survivors — fifteen minutes of the agony of war-mutilated Vietnamese children and civilians in inadequate hospitals — was praised "as the most moving." The audiences evidently also felt that an emotional response was appropriate and legitimate, for after the films they contributed $100 to be sent as direct aid to the Committee of Responsibility, which sponsored the film, and which brings injured Vietnamese children to the U. S. for medical treatment.

Nobel Prize Winner To Give Lectures

By RICHARD S. KLINE

Dr. Linus Pauling, recipient of two Nobel prizes and the holder of 14 medals for scientific achievement and 15 honorary advanced degrees will deliver four lectures at UMass on the 10th through the 18th of April.

Sponsored jointly by the Class of 1968 of the University and the Distinguished Visitors Program, Pauling will speak on April 10, 11, 16, and 18 on "Scientific Discovery: Its Impact on Man" and during that time meet with various groups of students and faculty.

DR. LINUS PAULING

Currently a member of the staff of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, Pauling's achievements have included the Nobel Prize for Chemistry in 1954, the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1962 and a Presidential medal for merit for outstanding services to the United States in World War II.

Early Researches

Dr. Pauling's early researches were centered about the problem of the structure of molecules and crystals and the nature of the chemical bond. It was for this work that he received his first Nobel Prize (for chemistry) in 1945.

He was given the Presidential Medal for Merit at the end of World War II for his work on rocket propellants and other explosives and on the development of a substitute for human serum in medical treatment, "among other contributions to the war effort."

Anti-War Work

In 1945, immediately after the use of atomic bombs in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Dr. Pauling began his work to abolish war, with a series of public lectures about the nature of nuclear weapons and nuclear war. His work was intensified in 1946 when he became associated with Albert Einstein and seven other scientists in the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists.

During recent years Dr. Pauling's work for world peace has for the most part been carried out in collaboration with his wife, Ava Helen Pauling. Together, they have given lectures about peace in the United States and twenty-five other countries. It was for such work, specifically, his role in influencing the signing of the limited nuclear test-ban treaty, that Dr. Pauling received his second Nobel prize (this one for peace) in 1962.

In addition to scientific articles and books, Dr. Pauling has published about one hundred articles on world peace and related subjects, and one book on the subject, entitled No More War.

Continuing Division of Germany Discussed in Great Decisions

By NEAL NOVAK
Staff Reporter

Two distinguished political scientists, Professor Peter Fliess and Professor Karl Loewenstein, were the panelists for the sixth "Great Decisions 1968" program. The discussion was broadcast live last night over WFCR from the main lounge in Webster House from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m.

Peter Fliess, a member of the Department of Government here at the University, was given the floor by the moderator, Dr. Luther Allen, also from the Department of Government here at the University. Professor Fliess directed his talk to the question of reunification of East and West Germany. He opened by saying that "today it is generally assumed that a 'detente' presupposes a disengagement, "but he asked, "is it desirable to the German people, should it occur in Europe, and is it a practical possibility?" Giving the positions of the two major world powers, the United States and the USSR, he said that the two countries are satisfied with the status quo in Germany, and that keeping it would preserve the world against nuclear war.'

Citing the problem of reunification as complex, Professor Fliess dealt with four aspects of the problem: 1) reunification as a cold war problem; 2) reunification as a problem for the Western alliance; 3) reunification as a problem for eastern Europe, and 4) reunification as a problem for Germany, itself.

"Without reunification," he stated, "explosive possibilities exist in Germany, but that just because the German peoples' desires for reunification exist, this doesn't mean that it's practical."

The possibility for reunification is marked by "intractability."

"Division of Germany," concluded Professor Fliess, "is the result of cold war and will remain divided as long as cold war exists."

Professor Karl Loewenstein, Professor of Political Science Emeritus at Amherst College, aimed his discussion to the internal conditions of Germany.

Professor Loewenstein gave a description of political progression in Germany since World War II and discussed the problem of elector reform and emergency legislation.

The "three pillars" which serve as supports for Germany's government today are, he continued, "the ministerial bureaucracy, big business, and the Catholic church." He stressed the great cultural freedom in Germany today and the rise in corruption which stems from "good connections with the members of the establishment" and that "the rearmament of Germany has given rise to corruption also."

Professor Loewenstein concluded by affirming that "Germany is a viable state—a state which cannot be eliminated. Alienation between East and West Germany has become permanent."

Newman Club Presents Open Forum on Church Today

An open forum entitled "The Church In Our Day" will be presented by the Newman Club beginning today, and every Tuesday through April 7th.

In the past few years, the Catholic Church has incorporated many new changes within itself so that it may be "in step" with ideas of the people of the twentieth century. These changes have brought about certain problems and personal conflicts within the Church's own membership.

People want to know just what the structure of the Catholic Church is today; what her function is in the contemporary world, and what the role of the laity is at this time.

It is for these reasons the open forum has been established—to try and answer the questions which have arisen in the minds of many people about the revisions of the Church.

The program will be conducted in an informal manner, rather than as a lecture series, in hopes that a clearer understanding of the Church will be gained by those who attend. The place: Newman Center Lounge, the time: Tuesday evening 9:30-10:30. These discussions are open to all students and faculty members of the campus community.

Polish Students Continue Anti-Red Riots

By MARTIN ZUCKER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP)—Students marched on Communist party headquarters in Warsaw Monday shouting "Freedom!" and "Democracy!" They clashed anew with police crying again and again "Gestapo, Gestapo."

Party members and workers watched from the windows of the gray, forbidding building as helmeted riot police used tear gas and rubber trucheons in an effort to disperse the demonstrators, numbering several thousand.

Police finally managed to disperse the shouting crowd.

It was the third outbreak of violence in Warsaw since student demonstrations began last Friday at the downtown campus of Warsaw University. On Saturday, police and youths clashed again near the Polytechnic University.

As on Saturday, the harsh police measures appeared to have been set off by rock-throwing youths.

Friday's violence began after a protest against expulsion of two Warsaw University students on the ground they took part in a demonstration Jan. 1 protesting forced closure of a popular play which had some lines construed as anti-Soviet by the censors.

McCarthy Says Johnson Put Fear Into U.S.

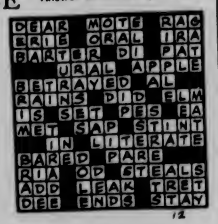
CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — New Hampshire's presidential primary battle of the precentages came to a climax Monday night with Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., charging that President Johnson has cast a pall of fear over the American people by his Vietnam war policies.

In the Republican contest, former Vice President Richard M. Nixon looked beyond his expected landslide vote here. He challenged New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller to meet him in primaries in Nebraska and Indiana as well as in the May 28 Oregon free-for-all contest.

There were strong indications that Rockefeller, who has said he would become a candidate "if the party wants me," would permit his name to stay on the Oregon ballot.

Nixon said he is not going to stand still for the New York governor's making a one-shot bid for the nomination at the Oregon ballot box.

"I'm not going to play the game in terms of letting Oregon be the only battlefield," he said.



McCarthy skipped the chance to question Secretary of State Dean Rusk in the latter's public appearance on Vietnam policies before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The Minnesota senator said that after having called for Rusk's resignation, he did not believe he should exploit the opportunity to express his anti-war views in such a setting.

McCarthy said he never thought he would arrive at the point where he would be defended by Nixon "against people in my own party" who are accusing McCarthy of giving solace to Hanoi by criticizing Johnson's Vietnam policies.

Graduate Study Fellowships Available Now

Allocation of 1,500 fellowships for grad study by prospective elementary and secondary school teachers was announced today by the U.S. Office of Education.

These fellows will participate during the 1968 - 69 academic year in 273 programs at 173 institutions of higher education in the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.

The program provides for up to two years of grad study on a full-time basis leading to an advanced degree other than a doctorate. Fellowships are awarded to students selected by the institutions they will attend.

The purpose of the awards, granted under Title V - C of the Higher Education Act of 1965, is to strengthen and improve elementary and secondary education through grad training of prospective teachers. Over one-third of the programs—105 of 273—provide training for teachers of disadvantaged children from rural, urban, or minority groups.

What happens to people nobody hires?

Nobody hires alcoholics. Or kids. Or a blind man who can't get around, let alone work. Or the 80 year old who sits on the stoop in the summer and stares at the floor in the winter. Nobody wants them. Nobody needs them. There are half a million of them. In our fair city.

It is not an economic problem. You can't buy off poverty. People have to go into the tenements. People who are revolted by tenements. People who insist that "helping" is not giving at the office and paying taxes.

Case workers are funny people. In an age when it's strictly high button shoes to do anything but make a buck... they knock themselves out for other people. And then they turn around and tell you that they're doing it for themselves.

Be a Case Worker if you're funny that way.

Good salary. $7,200 after 6 months. And all the benefits the city can give you. Any college graduate can apply.

Listen... if we can beat this thing in New York City, we can set an example for everyone. Help Thy Neighbor

Tindall's Career Totals Make UMass Basketball History

By MARTHA CURRAN
Sports Day Editor

The measure of a man isn't determined by slide rules and scales—6'5" and 185 lbs. are not the only things senior Billy Tindall has going for him. As a student he has compiled a reputable cume, as a member of the Track team he has set two Yankee Conference records, and as Captain of the Redmen Basketball team, he stands out as a giant in U-Mass athletic history.

BILLY TINDALL

Tindall, an amiable physical education major from Bedford Hills, N.Y., ended his college career with 1,277 points, ranking second at UMass. Career average of 17.3 points per game also ranks him second. Billy set a new game scoring record against Vermont this season with 41 points and 19 field goals, and ranks third in career total field goals with 496.

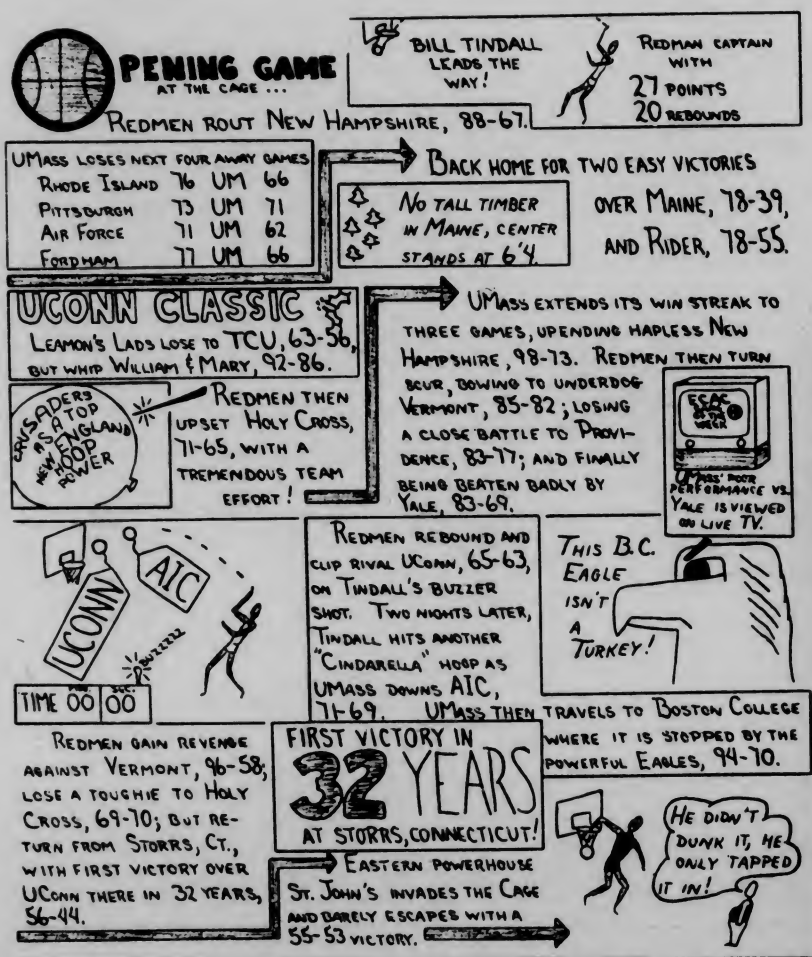
The third basketball player in UMass history to get 300 rebounds in one season, he also ranks second in total career rebounds with 837. His career total of 285 free throws ranks him second.

Record setting has become a habit: he started 74 consecutive games, played 954 minutes this season and has played a career total of 2,719 of a possible 2,970 minutes of basketball.

Named to the ECAC team four straight weeks, Tindall had a '67-'68 season scoring average of 19.6 and season rebound average of 12.0. He won three games at the buzzer against UConn, 65-63, AIC, 71-69, and Northeastern, 61-59, and paced the Redmen squad to a Yankee Conference Co-Championship with URI. The Redmen had an 8-2 Conference record and were 14-11 overall.

Chosen First Team All District One (NCAA) and All Yankee Conference and First team in both the Boston Garden and All-College (Oklahoma City) Tournaments last year, Billy is a likely choice in the Pro Draft which will take place after this year's round of tournaments later this month.

Asked if he would be interested in playing pro ball, Tindall quipped, "Yes I'd like to have a shot at it." "Pro ball," he said, "is the ultimate challenge as far as skills are concerned. It gives you a chance to see where you stand with the elite of college basketball."



"I've been playing basketball since fifth grade," Tindall said. He was recruited from Fox Lane High School in Bedford Hills by Coach Jack Leaman. Leaman was coaching at Boston University when the Fox Lane coach, Mike Cotton, was a student there. Leaman, who was an Assistant Coach here in 1964, went to New York and wound up with the best deal the Yankees have had since they bought Manhattan from the Indians for $24.

Tindall, whose parents and two sisters still live in New York, was a tap dancer and played the piano, drums, the clarinet and sax when he was a boy. He listens to Ramsey Lewis, the Supremes, Johnny Mathis, anything with soul, and has music to match every mood.

No particular psych-up marked pre-game preparation—"The coach stresses what the game means and you realize it yourself. You get your mind at ease and go out and do a good job."

"Basketball season is long," the Captain said, "it's all basketball and studies." The pace has relaxed; a banquet will close out the season on the 20th, new captains will be elected, and Tindall will concentrate on Child Psychology and Physiology courses.

Any freshman interested in trying out for the freshman tennis team please attend a meeting on Tuesday, March 12 at 4:45 in 251 Boyden.

Cross Country Captains Named: Lang, Hoss in '68

Charles Lang and Paul Hoss have been elected Co-Captains of the University of Massachusetts varsity cross-country team for the 1968 Fall season.

The two juniors led the Redmen to a second-place finish in last Fall's Yankee Conference Championship race. Hoss took individual honors while establishing a new course record at Orono, Maine. Lang, from Middleboro, finished third in Conference meet and later placed sixth in the New England Championships. Hoss, who comes from Rockland, tied for fifth in the New England's as Massachusetts placed fifth in the team standings.

Hoss and Lang competed in the mile and two-mile indoor track events this winter for Coach Ken O'Brien and will be key performers on the Spring track team.

McCarthy Close at Wire; Rocky, LBJ Ridicule Results

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Pres. Johnson apparently won the New Hampshire primary Tuesday but Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy crowded him closely at the wire to fire his anti-Vietnam war campaign into a national crusade.

Former V-Pres. Richard M. Nixon, without major opposition on the ballot, swept into the winner's circle so long denied him by rolling up around 80% of the votes in the Republican presidential preference contest.

McCARTHY

Johnson's less than satisfactory victory was accomplished by a party organization - supported write-in drive to the bitter tune of charges that a vote for the Minnesota Democrat was a ballot for appeasement of Hanoi.

McCarthy, soft-spoken challenger of the President's Asian policies, collected around 39% of the vote as the returns mounted. This was substantially more than the 30% he felt he needed to keep alive emotionally and financially his admittedly difficult drive to get the Democrats to dump Johnson.

Nixon's smashing comeback after eight years out of office marked only the first milestone in his effort to win his party's presidential nomination.

While the New Hampshire balloting represented only the fragmentary sentiment of a Northeastern state with 8 out of 1,333 votes at the August GOP convention in Miami Bch., Fla., it provided a psychological setback to his greatest potential rival, N. Y. Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

JOHNSON

Low Yield For Rocky

A belated write-in campaign for Rockefeller yielded the New York governor only about 10% of the Republican vote. This was hardly the kind of encouragement he needed to help him decide whether he will become an active candidate for the nomination by leaving his name on the May 28 Ore. primary ballot. He must decide this question within a 10-day deadline.

NIXON

In a victory statement in New York, Nixon said the votes for him and McCarthy indicated "a deep disenchantment with Lyndon Johnson on all issues, not just the war in Vietnam. He chided Rockefeller, saying the vote proved "the people on this country don't like an absentee."

He said his performance in New Hampshire "will put pressure on Rockefeller to get in or get out." He said he is leaving today to start campaigning in Wisconsin.

McCarthy's reaction was to tell a crowd of cheering supporters in Manchester, N. H., that "now it's on to Wisconsin." The Senator expressed the belief that his showing would give him fresh impetus in other primary states and would help him pick up "a substantial number of delegates" where they are being chosen in state conventions.

ROCKEFELLER

Although late tabulations would determine the outcome, McCarthy stood a chance of getting some of the 22 convention delegates being elected. Johnson had 2 chosen automatically, the Democratic National Committeeman and National Committeewoman.

Nixon carried off all eight GOP convention votes.

With 63% of the estimated vote cast, returns from 130 of the state's 302 precincts showed: Johnson 14,552, McCarthy 11,025.

In the Republican contest, with 44% of the estimated total in, the count was: Nixon 33,438, Rockefeller 4,054.

Today's Problem

Goldfinger Says City Needs Jobs, Housing

By BOB ROCHFORD

Housing and job opportunity were stated to be "the urgent needs of today's urban community" by Nathaniel Goldfinger, Research Director for the AFL-CIO. Speaking as part of the DVP Urban Affairs Symposium, he stressed the need for immediate federal grants to alleviate these problems in the modern city.

The migration of over four million Americans to cities in the last quarter century was found to be one of the main causes of urban ills. The resulting strain on low income housing and the inability of local government to cope with this situation was coupled with "severe losses in the number of unskilled and semi-skilled jobs available."

Goldfinger estimated that, as a consequence, "60 to 70 percent of all families in the ghetto have incomes below the subsistence level of $5,000 per year for a family of four." He further said "conditions are deteriorating" and "public apathy" has contributed to a present state of near inertia.

This public apathy had an academic counterpart. He emphasized "the failure of the American campus" to respond to the threat to the OEO bill as just a tiny part of the indifference social programs are receiving from the public.

Under sharp questioning by the Director of the UMass Labor and Research Department, Goldfinger declared that many of the problems facing urban legislation had been considerably increased "by the loss of 40 liberal seats" in the 1966 Congressional elections. Later he added that a similar trend this year "would in all likelihood" kill any prospects for urban reform bills.

Revitalization Corps to 'Bridge Gap' Between Ghetto and University

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

A group of 14 students met in the Plymouth Room last night for an organizational meeting of the Revitalization Corps. The meeting was highlighted by an address from national corps founder Ned Cole.

According to Cole, the Revitalization Corps (founded by the Fairfield University grad in June, 1964) has the objective of "bringing students off campus in direct involvement with poverty work while in school."

The general idea behind the corps is to combat a "war on apathy" and get people "actually doing something," continued Cole.

The Corps has 15 chapters across the country with headquarters in Hartford, and also New York and Watts. There are 1500 volunteers, half of which, according to Cole, "are Negroes."

Cole told the University of Massachusetts students that the purpose in trying to recruit college students is to "create a bridge between the ghetto and the University." The Revitalization Corps is trying to bring the "university into the street."

He listed Fairfield, Ohio State, Boston College as other schools with campus corps.

Cole credits the late President John F. Kennedy with providing an inspiration to the youth of America for working to change social conditions. According to Cole the late Kennedy told the individual "You are important. You can change things with reason and involvement."

And after Kennedy's death a kind of "negativism" and "cynicsm" set in which the Corps is trying to fight.

American society is a "sleeping giant" and it is the Revitalization Corps' plan to create a "spirit of adventure and sensitivity" to the problems. It must work to develop a "community and grass roots level of government."

The Corps leader believes that the groups lack of money (budget for the last four years has been $10,000 or less) is a big asset. "It provides a flexibility that is very important," said Cole.

Regarding the set up of a local chapter on campus, Cole sighted a clothing drive for the poor, contacts in poverty areas (such as Springfield), and narcotic rehabilitation as possible means.

Actual programs of the Corps include tutorial work in educating ghetto residents as well as in jails(job placement of exconvicts) and reform schools, juvenile delinquency and putting pressure on local government to change conditions.

Defector Faces Trial; Against War, For U.S.

by OTTO DOELLING

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — Pvt. Roy Ray Jones of Pontiac, Mich., the first European-based U.S. soldier granted asylum in Sweden, returned voluntarily Tuesday to face Army discipline. He still professes opposition to the Vietnam war but proclaimed an overriding love for America.

Jones, 21, arriving by plane with his German-born wife and 3-mo.-old son, said he had had a wonderful life for a year in Sweden but it would have been the biggest mistake of his life to stay there.

Officials in Stockholm said five American military defectors among the 35 estimated in Sweden have returned to their units or homes. Jones was the only one identified by name.

Jones had been listed as absent without leave from a 4th Armored Div. unit at Schwabach, Ger., since Jan. 1967. He went to the U.S. Embassy in Stockholm on Thursday mornond and obtained funds for the flight to Frankfurt.

"The biggest thing is I love America and do not want to run from America and its problems," Jones said during an airport news conference. "I want to go back to America to face them."

Jones, a Negro, said he also wants "the black people in America to have confidence in me."

He said Americans would have considered him a Communist if he had remained in Sweden.

Fulbright-Rusk Confrontation Is Over; Both Men Remain Solid in Own Opinions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. J. W. Fulbright failed Tuesday to win a clear administration promise to consult his Foreign Relations Committee before deciding whether to send more U.S. troops to Vietnam.

"If more troops are needed," Secretary of State Dean Rusk told the committee, "we will—as we have done in the past — consult with appropriate members of Congress."

With that, the two-day nationally televised and broadcast Rusk-Fulbright confrontation ended. Although the Arkansas Democrat told a newsman he was not satisfied with Rusk's answer on consulting Congress, he appeared publicly to accept Rusk's promise to appear in closed session with the committee to expand on his limited public explantion of the administration's Vietnam policy.

The testimony — totaling about 10½ hours over two days — produced no announced changes of minds or policy on either side.

Rusk said the United States will adhere to its present policy and stick out the war until an acceptable peace can be negotiated with North Vietnam.

But Rusk said he can offer the committee no present hope that Hanoi is interested.

"We have no reason to believe," he said, "that they will not continue military operations full-scale."

Rusk — who frequently warned the committee that U.S. allies and adversaries around the world were listening to every word of the public hearing, said the secretary of state "didn't come down in the Korean War for public hearings, talking about military operations going on in the face of the enemy. Secretary Hull didn't come down during World War II and hold public hearings and give the enemy all the information that could be developed in public hearings.

"There's nothing we could do that would be more valuable to us than if Hanoi, Peking, or Moscow were to hold public hearings portraying everything they have in mind and what their plans are for the future—"

"Mr. Secretary," Fulbright interrupted, "I apologize. I don't seem to make clear to you at all what I have in mind. I haven't the slightest interest in the day-to-day tactics of the military . . . I'm trying to raise the question of policy, of enlarging this war, to go all-out on the war, so to speak . . .

"I feel that you're confusing what I believe is a clear distinction between daily operations, or even weekly, of the military itself . . . as distinguished from whether you now make a decision that this is now so important to us, that South Vietnam is so important, that we are willing to pay any price for it."

Rusk said: "The President has only the men and money, Congress makes available . . . The President as commander in chief has to make the hard decisions about what is to be done with the men and money made available."

"Do I understand you have no intention of consulting with this committee?" Fulbright asked.

"I told you the President has not reached his conclusions," Rusk responded. "There is therefore no knowledge of what actions may be required by the Congress."

Fulbright, demanding a congressional role in deciding the future course of the war, told Rusk the conflict is "at a crucial turning point."

The war, Fulbright said, has reached a point where new decisions will determine "whether we either go down the road to all-out war or to a negotiated solution."

As I See It

Appalachia Forgotten?

by J. GUIDO GRAIFF

In reading a recent article on Appalachia in the Saturday Review, it was surprising to find that after seven years and more than seven billion of federal dollars new problems have arised, mostly as the result of the war and poor political machinery in the area.

According to Saturday Review, the average Appalachian adult has a sixth grade education, three fourths of the children who start school drop out before they complete the twelfth grade, and the statistics of human pathology-tuberculosis, silicosis and infant mortality are so high that they do not belong in the western world at all.

Poverty wasn't always characteristic of Appalachia. During World War II it's coal regions enjoyed an uncertain amount of prosperity, but when the war ended so did jobs. A rising demand for fuel seemed to bring a new prosperity, but with the demand came industrialization. 140,000 men using modern equipment can now dig more coal than 700,000 did twenty years ago. Public schools now furnish the prime source of employment.

In the more isolated counties tribal loyalties and kinships still exist. These ideals are greater than existing political ethics. The problem of politics does not end here, the school superintendent is often the political boss who controls contracts for such items as insurance, construction, and fuel. He also controls appointment to offices and employment in the school system. Because of these political situations, training programs suffer. Outsiders wouldn't be appointed by school officials for fear of uncertain new ideas being presented.

CAP, the Community Action Program, was set up to train individuals within a community, thus allowing CAP to be free from the domination of local politicians. CAP was not completely successful. In the smaller communities it was usually abandoned after local political battles destroy organizations before they can develop. Recent Congressional action indicates that control for all local CAP agencies will be given to local officials. The problem of politics is just one of many which are beginning to develop. Appalachia is not getting much better.

With President Johnson declaring that "the dole is dead", how does one explain to a person living in Appalachia that the Great Society spends close to $500,000 to kill ONE Viet Cong and less than $150 a month to support an ENTIRE FAMILY in Stinking Creek? It's quite frightening. Has Appalachia really been forgotten, or is it as Perley F. Ayer, the chairman of the Council of Southern Mountains, says, "The reason little has happened is that America doesn't have its heart in it."

American Jet Hijacked, Taken to Cuba

MIAMI, FLA. (AP) — A National Airlines jet with 58 persons aboard was hijacked at gun-point over Florida Tuesday by two men who left the plane in Havana with a third man who told passengers he was being kidnapped.

Clyde O. Johnson of Kingston, Jamaica, a passenger said the two men had automatic pistols and forced a third man to leave the plane with them.

The third man told other passengers this appeared to be the end of the rope for him, Johnson said at Miami's airport. "He didn't say why."

Stewardess Sally Sue Jackson, 26, said in Miami that one of the men who appeared to be Cuban pointed his gun at another stewardess and forced her to open the cockpit door.

The three men were met at Jose Marti Airport in Havana by Jose Abrantos, Cuban Vice minister in charge of security. They were driven away with him in a government security car.

After more than six hours on the ground in Havana, where the other passengers were fed as guests of the Cuban government, the plane was allowed to take off and return to Miami.

The plane was hijacked behind a curtain of radio silence about four minutes after takeoff from Tampa for the last leg of a flight from San Francisco to Miami. The plane landed in Havana at 12:36 p.m. It returned to Miami at 7:57 p.m.

Johnson, the passenger who told of the alleged kidnap, said all three men boarded together in Tampa. All were dressed in business suits.

It was the third commercial airliner hijacked and taken into Cuba in just 16 days. Last March 5, a Colombian airliner was seized over the Caribbean and last Feb. 21 a Delta Air Lines jet was commandeered over Florida.

"The best information we have now is that there were 51 passengers aboard and a crew of seven," said an airline spokesman at Miami International Airport, reducing the earlier count of those aboard by one.

National's Flight 28, which originated in San Francisco, was tracked by U.S. radar until it was 10 miles off the Cuban coast. Then contact was lost.

"There was no word from the plane," said Paul Boatman, area manager of the FAA.

Four minutes out of Tampa, when radio communication from the flight was cut off abruptly both to National and to Miami's Air Traffic Control Center.

"We don't have any idea how many people were involved in the hijacking," Boatman said. "They wouldn't let the pilot use his radio."

News in Brief

WASHINGTON (AP) — An increase in job-hunting teen-agers was the main factor in nudging the nation's unemployment rate up in February from the 15-yr. low of January, the Labor Dept. reported Tuesday.

The rate rose from a January figure of 3.5% - 3.7%, the same as for December and for February a year ago.

At the same time a rise in employment of women and teenagers in February pushed up the total employment figure by about 800,000 to 74.1 million.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — N. Y. Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller said Tuesday night he would decide by Mar. 22 whether to become an active, declared candidate for the Republican presidential nomination.

He observed to newsmen that Mar. 22 was the deadline for deciding whether to withdraw his name from the primary ballot in Oregon.

If he should do so, he said, it would be difficult to become a declared candidate later. To withdraw from the Oregon race, he said he would have to file a statement that he was not a candidate now and would not become one.

CHICAGO (AP)—Negro children integrated eight grades Monday at the start of a bitterly debated program to bus them from overcrowded schools.

A fire bomb hurled through the window of one school, hours before classes began, caused only slight damage and no one was injured.

Crowds of white adults gathered at three of the eight schools and there was some derisive shouting and jeering as the 249 children filed from buses through a cordon of white onlookers.

Officials reported 709 pupils were absent—almost double the normal rate — and 4,016 were present at the eight schools.

BOSTON (AP) — The Weather Bureau issued heavy snow warnings for most of New England Tuesday night with a forecast of snowfall in excess of 6 inches.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)— McGeorge Bundy, former assistant to Pres. Kennedy and Johnson, said Tuesday "the American system of government is today far too weak to do the job now assigned to it, let alone the job that it ought to be given."

Bundy, now Pres. of the Ford Foundation, said, "the powers of Congress continue to predominate over those of the President except in the most unusual moments," especially on money bills.

Campus Trend Is Turning Away from LBJ, Says Poll

Opposition to the Vietnam war and the policies of President Johnson has grown among students at the University of Massachusetts in the past year, surveys by UMass department of government students indicate.

The surveys were two polls, one taken a year ago and one this year, by political science graduate students in Prof. John Fenton's Politics and the Legislative Process seminar. In each, questions were asked of approximately 350 students, a random sampling of the 15,200 undergraduates and graduate students at UMass.

Opposition to the war has increased in the student body by about 20 percent in the past year, the surveys indicated. Last year's survey showed 83 percent of the men and 82 percent of the women felt that the U.S. should be fighting in Vietnam. The recent poll indicated that only 59 percent of the men and 52 percent of the women still hold that view.

The change in war opinion was accompanied by a drop in the popularity of President Johnson, survey comparisons indicated. Although 75 percent of students polled said they preferred him in 1964, only 27 percent indicated they would vote for him in 1968. However, 46 percent of those polled said they would vote for President Johnson if the war were ended by a military victory and 55 percent said they would support him if the war were ended by a negotiated peace.

The polls indicated opposition to the war was strongest among older students and those with better grades. Last year, 97 percent of freshmen polled favored U.S. Vietnam involvement compared to 67 percent of graduate students. This year's corresponding figures were 40 percent and 22 percent. Last year, 77 percent of the C and under students, and 25 percent of the B and over students favored the U.S. war aims; this year the corresponding figures were 46 percent and 19 percent.

Over 50 percent of the students surveyed indicated they would prefer another Democratic candidate for President. Most chose Senator Robert Kennedy, who received five times the number of votes of his nearest fellow Democrat. (Senator McCarthy was not included among the possible choices on the questionnaire.)

In a list of candidates from both parties, Senator Robert Kennedy again led the field with 25 percent of the votes. He was followed by Johnson (19.5 percent), Rockefeller (18.6 percent) Romney (11.6 percent) Nixon (10.7 percent), Percy (6.9 percent), Reagan (1.8 percent), and Humphrey (1.4 percent).

Asked which leading Republican would be most likely to defeat Johnson in the presidential election, 24.6 percent of the students chose Nixon, 24.1 percent chose Rockefeller.

Recent urban rebellions will be a significant issue in the 1968 campaign, said 81 percent of the students; 70 percent indicated that this would affect their voting in the election.

PRIMARY . . .

son poked fun at the primary results. He said the New Hampshire contest was unique because it is "the only race where anybody can enter and everybody can win."

"I think that New Hampshire is the only place where a candidate can claim 20% is a landslide and 40% is a mandate and 60% is unanimous Johnson told an audience at a V. F. W. dinner.

Under New Hampshire law, delegates can run pledged to a presidential candidate with his permission. They can become a delegate candidate "favorable" to a presidential contender without having his consent.

Gov. Rockefeller Signs Two Bills, Cuts Back Medicaid Program He Fathered

N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller signed two bills Tuesday making drastic cutbacks in the New York State program of medical assistance—a program he fathered two years ago and made into the most liberal in the nation.

The law, effective April 1, eliminates an estimated 1.5-million possible recipients from the program. It lowers the eligibility standards and denies virtually all benefits to persons aged 21 through 64.

The state program, commonly called medicaid, provides for most medical bills for persons and families deemed unable to pay for such care. Under the current program, a family of four could qualify if its net annual income after taxes and other deductions did not exceed $6,000.

The new law lowers this standard to $5,300 for this typical family.

The medicaid program, financed jointly by the state, federal and local governments, was expected to cost about $900 million next year with no changes. The new law cuts the state-local share from nearly $600 million to $300 million.

The Republican governor this year had recommended a reduction in the program in a move to appease upstate municipalities aroused by the soaring cost of the program. The legislators, however, went far beyond his recommendations.

At a time when he is trying to decide whether to seek the Republican presidential nomination, he was known to be unhappy about signing a plan to scale down a major social program he has praised.

Protecting Legal Rights

Trial by jury, not by the press is becoming a more prevalent cry among those concerned with protection of legal rights for those accused of crimes. From recent real problems involving the Oswald murder, the Candy Mosseler and Dr. Sam Shepherd trials, the American Bar Association has become increasingly concerned with press coverage during investigations, arraignments and actual trials.

Recently, the Bar Association has approved a new set of rules of conduct for trial lawyers and procedures for judges to restrict release of the news to the press. The aim is to protect a man's right to a trial on the evidence only and not possible motives and allegations. Basically, the new report will have four results. It amends the canon of ethics to make it unethical for a lawyer to disclose to the press anything about a pending case other than simple identifying facts. This also eliminates statements about previous arrests and convictions. The report suggests to law enforcement agencies that they also follow these procedures and that judges use their contempt of court powers more fully. Third, the report if adopted by the court, would make it easier for a defendant to get trial delays or transfers to other communities and to insure an unbiased jury. And fourth, the report would give the court the power to punish newsmen if they publish articles designed deliberately to affect the outcome of the trial.

The new set of standards would bar the press and the public from pre-trial hearings and from any portion of the proceedings held without the presence of the jury if defense felt it would be prejudicial to their client.

Members of the press opposed the new measures even before they were passed. The American Newspaper Publishers Association was conducting a study on the effects of publicity and hoped that the Bar Association would at least wait until the report was released before passing their resolutions.

The Bar Association has already affected press coverage. Canon 39 restricts the use of cameras and recording devices in trial proceedings and is a subject of debate among members of the press.

In covering trials and legal proceedings, the press acts as a representative of the public to insure not only that a defendant's rights are protected but that citizens will be accurately informed.

The press is the guardian of the courts and by covering their every action increases the likelihood that justice will be served. The Press does not have the right to express opinion in coverage, but if it has been at fault in the past in reporting, they must learn to police themselves.

The need to protect a man's legal rights is important and those rights can best be served by an adequate legal defense, an unbiased jury and responsible coverage by a press with restrictions imposed internally.

Student Power in the Classroom

(ACP)—Increased involvement of students in their own education is not only possible but also meaningful as a maturity program for all members of a university community, comments the Orediggor, Colorado School of Mines, Golden.

But there are two sides to student involvement, the newspaper editorial continued, and only one—the "political" side, through student representation on important committees and student government action — has been considered. The other side—the more directly "educational" side—was clearly demonstrated in an experimental manipulation of the classroom situation.

A television camera was used to study the effect of student involvement on the performance of a lecturing professor. Students were instructed, before arrival of the professor, to engage in "typical" classroom behavior (taking notes without looking at the prof, sleeping, working on another subject) for the first portion of the class. Then, at a signal, they "attended to" the professor physically through eye contact and other manifestations of interest. At a second signal they returned to "non-attending" behavior.

During the first portion, the professor lectured from his notes (only occasionally looking up to see the bored students) and remained almost motionless. After about 10 minutes, he noticed several students following his lecture closely. He became animated. He gestured, his verbal rate increased, he began to lecture without his notes and he showed a willingness to answer questions. At the second signal, students again showed little interest and he returned to his notes.

We know that students tend to become involved with courses when the professor is involved; conversely, they have little interest in a course taught by an uninvolved professor, usually blaming the professor for the boring situation. This experiment shows that if student involvement were to manifest itself as attention and response in the classroom, perhaps there would be fewer uninvolved professors.

The experiment suggests that student "power" can be a meaningful epithet for student participation in education. But professors and students must realize that the learning process is a two-way street requiring mutual awareness of shared responsibility for education.

Campus Comment

We Need Student Involvement

To the editor:

The demonstration . . . the Faculty Senate meeting . . . the Ad Hoc committee . . . the Open House Senate meeting . . . the Cage . . . discussion . . . and finally "an insult to both one's intelligence and sense of honor," (James Collins, President of the Student Senate) These are the events which have suddenly changed relations between students and administration. Chet Weinerman, Editor-Emeritus of the Collegian has suddenly become a controversial figure merely by changing the position of an Editorial from the Editorial page to the front page. Students are 'demanding' their 'rights.'

When reviewing the past few days, it is like looking 'through the looking glass' and viewing a reflection that does not present the true image. Students do have legitimate complaints, the administration is listening and yet, like the whole world, there remains a gap that increases with each closing day.

The answers to these problems are not simple, and I believe without student involvement we will not see any just solution. INVOLVEMENT with clear responsible thinking can lead to the realization of a university that will be the prophet of social reform.

A university acquired, not through 'ultimatums' of student power, but through the units of student-faculty relationship and mutual repect. This solution will not suddenly be exposed by a front page story in the Collegian, but will be seen by closer student-faculty contact. This is happening now, and as time passes will bring us the university that we all desire.

"French Culture Pervades the Corridor"

To the editor:

The French Corridor of Webster House is unusual in two senses. First, the members are accomplished students (who can claim one of the highest cume averages of any corridor on campus), containing among their ranks the Special Forces, a resident grad student (with the promise of two next Fall), an inventor, polyglots and world travellers, a recorderist, a calligrapher, several chefs, and political activists of the Left and the Right.

Second, for a single corridor, it has a notable list of accomplishments to its credit. In the past three years, the French Corridor, in cooperation at various times with the women's French Corridor of Eugene Field and with the French Department, has brought to the Amherst community Le Treteau de Paris, the native French theatre company, and worked directly with that company to produce plays; presented in alternating semesters a series of French films. It has also built up a small library of French texts, sponsored sundry lectures, and performed various plays in French.

What unites such a varied lot is the collective appreciation for French culture which pervades the corridor, an esprit de corps if you will. And it is this spirit which gives rise, for instance, to spontaneous conversation in French, under the tutelage of Mr. Tony di Ninno, to a willingness to work on the events listed above, and to the camaraderie and enjoyment which comes from being a part of it all.

The members of the corridor extend an open invitation to anyone who might like to join it next Fall. If you are interested, please see Tony di Ninno, Andre Senecal (French Department), Luther Allen (Government Department), or any of the members of the corridor.

Spectrum Needs Help

To the editor:

I would like this opportunity to object strongly to the offhand criticism of Spectrum in the Exit on March 7th. The editors of Spectrum are not making a feeble attempt at publishing the magazine; we are making a strenuous effort to gather material for a well organized publication, which will do justice to the creative talents at the University. There is, however, one major problem. We have come up against a wall of apathy — people who write good fiction or non-fiction are either hiding somewhere or just aren't interested in contributing to Spectrum.

We have advertised in the Collegian and have put up posters advertising our existence and dire need of material, but only a handful of people have contributed anything. We are trying to put out another issue this spring, but we need help. If students want to make themselves heard let them do it through Spectrum, we will give serious consideration to any article submitted to us. Creative people of UMass where are you?

Don't Let It Throw You-- Judo Is an Art

"The principle of the maximum efficient use of mind and body is the fundamental principle governing all techniques of Judo. But it is also something more. The same principle can be applied to the improvement of the human body, making it strong, healthy and useful, and so constitute a physical education. It can also be applied to the improvement of intellectual and moral power and in this way constitutes mental and moral education. It can be applied to the improvement of diet, clothing, housing, social intercourse and methods of business thus constituting a study in living. I gave this all prevading principle the name of Judo."

Jigoro Kano, founder of Judo

Jean Fielding demonstrates the Kata Guruma or shoulder wheel with Debbie Gernes.

A magic formula for throwing an unsuspecting boyfriend or someone in a dark alley—this is one of the many misconceptions girls have about Judo when they come to their first Judo class. They don't realize it's first a sport, not a means of self-defense. And most of all, few realize how much work and determination has to be put into it.

With some of these same misconceptions, Jean Fielding, a sophomore English major, went into her first Judo class. Jean, who now has a brown belt in Judo, teaches this art to girls in a co-ed class at Boyden Gymnasium on Monday and Wednesday nights.

Beginning in the first semester of her freshman year, she showed a remarkable ability for it and progressed very rapidly. She puts a great deal of time into it, practicing two hours a night, three times a week and six hours each weekend during the school year and three hours a night, five times a week during the summer months.

Jean's enthusiasm and desire for the girls in her class to learn Judo have inspired many girls to stick with it despite the work. However, Jean doesn't like to teach beginners Judo as a means of self-defense. She feels that until they develop skill in Judo and a respect for it, they will abuse it and "go out looking for trouble."

Men and women don't compete together in Judo, but they do practice together. This is possible because, as Jean said, "there is no reason why a girl can't throw a guy." She also thinks that this can be very helpful in training.

Men's competition and women's competition is very different. Men try to throw their opponents on their backs to gain a point. Women's competition is more like a gymnastic meet. They demonstrate forms gaining points for certain things.

Judo is also like a religion. It has a whole philosophy. The word Judo, believe it or not, means "gentle way." Although Jean does not think it as a religion, she is very enthusiastic about many of its coacepts. From it, she feels she has learned many things that have affected her attitudes towards different aspects of life.

As for what people think of her ability, Jean said, "I don't usually tell people."

"Some think it's stupid or they show a mild interest or they don't believe me."

Most of the boys that she dates know Judo, but she said, "It irritates me to think that a guy thinks that I can throw him, even if I can."

Cure

Morning After...

by CHRISTINE MANDRACIA

The troublesome hang-over is on its way out. Some UMass co-eds have discovered a new way of making the "morning after the night before" easier to face.

Sugar, water, milk, fruit juice, and ice are the ingredients of this "cure," which is commonly known as SHERBERT.

The coed discoverers say that lemon, lime, or orange sherbert do the job best.

Besides making the throat cool and taking the bad taste in the mouth away, the sherbert also makes the stomach feel better and the head less fuzzy.

So, next time you wake up with a heavy head, try something light. Have sherbert!

Smith Music Program Will Include Piano, Opera Concerts and Art Show

Miss Barbara Sink, a junior at Smith College, will present a piano recital in Sage Hall, Northampton, at 4:30 p.m. on Friday, March 15. The program includes Beethoven's Thirty-Two Variations in C Minor on an Original Theme, the first movement of Cesar Franck's Piano Quintet in F Minor, and Schumann's Carnival Opus 9.

Assisting Miss Sink in the Piano Quintet will be Mary Anne Englund '68, first violin, Clyde Watson '68, second violin, Laurie Brown '69, viola, and John Sessions of the music faculty, cello. The public is invited to attend.

A minor in philosophy supports Miss Sink's music major and she has achieved dean's list standing at Smith. She played last summer in the Guarnari String Quartet during a performance seminar at Harpur College in Binghampton, N. Y., and she has spent two summers accompanying faculty and gifted students in chamber music performances at the Governor's School in Winston-Salem, N. C., not far from her home in Linwood. In addition she teaches several young pupils privately.

Classical Program by Sopranos

In the Sunday evening series of concerts by members of the Smith College music faculty, soprano Adrienne Auerswald will present a program of mainly classical works on March 17. The public is invited to hear Miss Auerswald sing in Sage Hall on the Northampton campus at 8 p.m., accompanied by Patricia Monk who teaches piano at Smith.

Miss Auerswald is well-known locally for her solo, opera and oratorio performances. She has sung the role of Tatyana in the Amherst Community Opera's production of Tchaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," and her most recent appearance was as Electra in Mozarts' opera "Idomeneo," presented at Smith last October in connection with a symposium and art exhibition, "A Land Called Crete."

Organ Recital

The next musical event at Smith College will be the senior recital of Martha Holt Everett, organist, on Tuesday, April 2. Her recital will follow the ten-day spring recess of the college.

Art Museum Acquisitions

The Smith College Museum of Art has placed on view an important new acquisition, a painting by John Singer Sargent (1856-1925) entitled "My Dining Room." It was purchased with funds given by Mrs. Henry T. Curtiss (Mina Kirstein '18) in memory of William Allan Neilson, president of the college from 1917 to 1939.

Sargent's position as the leading international portrait painter of his day tended to draw attention away from those other aspects of his art which are so highly appreciated today. He painted superb interiors with small figures, informal sketches of friends and relatives, and hundreds of watercolors which serve to record his never-ending travels.

The exhibition may be seen through April 1 at the Smith College Museum of Art, Gallery IV, which is open from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. on weekdays and from 2:30 until 4:30 p.m. on Sundays. Other Sargent works will be shown in the collection.

Smith College Will Feature "Eyewitness"

Nathaniel Abraham, editor of Southern Views, the only Negro publication in South Carolina, will speak in Wright Hall, Smith College on March 14 at 7:30 p.m. His lecture, "The Orangeburg Riots and their Implications," is sponsored by the Student Lecture Committee. The public is invited to attend.

According to Diane Kittredge '68 who was visiting Benedict College in Columbia, South Carolina in February as part of the Smith College Student Exchange Program, Mr. Abraham was an eye witness to the Orangeburg massacre." When she met him on the Benedict campus several days after the incident, he described his attempts to prevent the shooting and his vain effort to reach Governor McNair by telephone in order to enlist his aid.

Mr. Abraham, son of a South Carolina sharecropper, was born and raised in Orangeburg. After high school, a job, and seven and a half years in the army, he attended South Carolina State College (1960-63) and Benedict College, (1965-66). His experiences while teaching school in some of the poorest districts of South Carolina and working as an accountant in Orangeburg factories have deepened his commitment to the cause of civil rights.

Mr. Abraham told Miss Kittredge that, because he was an eye witness and because of his reputation as an active supporter of Negro rights, he felt that it would be unsafe for him to return to Orangeburg for several weeks.

To raise funds and disseminate information, a Smith College Orangeburg Defense Fund has been formed by Abigail Erdman '69, Diane Kittredge '68 and Susan Dunn Marshall '68.

April Conference Will Discuss U.S. Changing Role

Leading scholars, journalists, businessmen, and clergy will gather at Princeton University during the first week of April to discuss the role of the United States in a revolutionary world, it was announced today.

A national conference April 2, 3, and 4, sponsored by the American Friends Service Commfttee, and the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, will bring together about 150 invited guests from a variety of backgrounds to spend three days analyzing the revolutionary aspects of today's world.

The conference will consist of a series of plenary sessions interspersed with discussion meetings, all geared to analyzing the revolutionary situation in the world today. Goal of Lacrosse Players: Beat Last Season's Record!

'Stronger at Every Position'--Garber

By PETER PASCARELLI
Staff Reporter

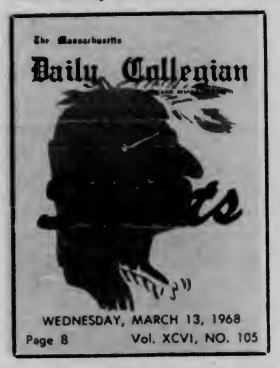
Coming off a fine 8-4 season last year and backed by a large group of returning veterans and a good crop of sophomores, this year's UMass lacrosse squad has its sights set on bettering last year' slate. Coach Dick Garber likes his team's chances.

"We're stronger at every position", said Coach Garber, and have over 50 people working out. Our only problem is a certain gap between the starters and second line."

The all-important goal position could be the deepest and best position on the squad. Leading a trio of excellent netminders will be co-captain Bill Sinclair, who played the majority of last year's schedule. Also seeing action last year and returning this season is junior Mark Schlosberg.

Expected also to see extensive action is sophomore Peter Scoville. Scoville, who was outstanding as varsity hockey goalie this past winter, was equally as outstanding last year in freshman lacrosse. Coach Garber stated. "Anyone of these two boys can do the job."

Close defense will be led by senior co-captain Walt Alessi. Also starting will be junior Tom Tufts and senior Bob Detore, who, of course played football this past fall. Coach Garber said. "You wouldn't want three better defensemen."



Behind these three, however, help is needed, as any lacrosse team needs more than three dedefensemen. There are four sophomores who are battling for backup berths. They are Fran Bositis, Bill Chevett, Bruce Fulton, who has never played lacrosse before, but in the terms of his coach, "is a real good athlete", and Paul Husted.

Scoring-wise, this year, the team appears to be in good shape. Leading the attack brigade will be last year's two leading scorers, juniors, Gary Vassar and Kevin O'Connor who together combined for 62 points a year ago. The team is still looking for a third attackman to play the vital crease position. The job probably will go to either junior Paul Mushovic, or sophomores Mike Brown and Parker Simonds.

Also expected to see action by Coach Garber will be sophomore Brad Herling and juniors John Parry and Dan Agnoli.

At the midfield spot, which in Coach Garber's terms, "is the heart of any team", the Redmen are loaded with good depth. As with any lacrosse team, three midfielders start, but the first six are the best. There also may be a third team of midfielders for specialized situations such as penalties. This is the importance of depth.

Coach Garber presently has 28 men working out at the position. The majority of these are underclassmen. There are three senior midfielders vieing for a berth, these being, Marty Kalikow, Greg Norton, and George Zebrowski.

The junior group, where the bulk of the candidates will be chosen, is, as Coach Garber puts it, "real outstanding." They are led by Steve Connolly, who started last year as a sophomore, and scored 12 goals. Also juniors, who all saw action last season, are Steve Chambers, Steve Anderson, Jerry Korgit, Stan Walker, Dan Legg, Greg Stillman and Tom Voisin. Two other juniors, Jack Hartnett and Jim McGuire, are out for the first time but have looked good.

A promising group of sophomores is also in contention for the midfield berths and any or all of them could displace veteran performers. The group includes Bob Marshall, Bob Florin, Bob Hages, Dan Bordeau and Bob LaChance.

Coach Garber is obviously pleased with the large group he has to work with. "There is good competition at every position," said Garber, "and this makes for better performances all-around." The coach was also pleased with the performance of his team in an intersquad scrimmage held Saturday.

In assessing his team at this early date, Garber said, "All in all it looks like a pretty good team. There is no team on the schedule we can't beat, but on the other hand there are no pushovers." The coach looks for the toughest test from Wesleyan, in the regular season opener, Amherst who was undefeated last year, and Dartmouth.

Before opening the regular season, however, the team will first travel to Providence, R.I., this Saturday for a scrimmage against Brown and then, during spring vacation will travel to and through New York, meeting R.P.I., CVLC, Army, CCNY, Rutgers, Nassau, and then back to this state and Harvard. The season opener is April 10 with Wesleyan.

Lacrosse is increasing both in participation, as evidenced by this year's large turnout for the team, an das a spectator sport, as was shown this past summer by the large crowd at Alumni Stadium for the North-South All-Star game. With this year's budding powerhouse and the promise of a winning season, added to the essential excitement which is the game of lacrosse, interest in this year's Redmen should be high.

NETMINDER—Co-captain Bill Sinclair is leading this season's trio of goal tenders for the Redman lacrosse team.

Women Skiers First in BU Alpine

On Saturday, March 9, the UMass Women's Ski Team took first place in the Boston University Alpine Race, the last race of the season for the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference.

The giant slalom, run on the lower three quarters of the men's course, was on soft and wet snow which worsened througout the day.

Judy Fuller, who has been very consistent all season, placed second in the Conference race. Barb Bund tied for fourth, and Judy Beers placed seventh.

At the executive meeting before the awards banquet, Miss Beers was selected Chairman of the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference, and Miss Fuller was elected a Member at Large. At the banquet, it was announced that the UMass women had placed second in the Conference for the season, and that Miss Fuller was first in individual standings for the season.

Last weekend, UMass and Mt. Holyoke College sponsored the Alden Trophy Race, and the UMass-Mt. Holyoke Slalom at Killington, Vermont.

On Saturday, due to a poor wax choice, the women placed third in the Alden Trophy Giant Slalom. They were only one and eight tenths seconds behind Boston University. Radcliffe won the race.

For individual standings, Miss Fuller placed fourth, Miss Beers eighth, and Miss Bund eleventh. The first casualty of the season occured before this race when Kay Robertson broke her leg during a warm up run.

On Sunday at the UMass-Mt. Holyoke Slalom, the women raced again at Killington. In a field of forty women, only twenty were neither disqualified, nor did not finish. Only two out of nine schools, Radcliffe and Wellesley, had enough finishers for team scores. Yet, the two UMass skiiers who finished, Miss Fuller and Miss Bund, placed fourth and seventh respectively.

The women, however, did recover at the BU Alpine, and with their coach, Miss Gail Biggle-stone, they are making plans for taking the Conference Championship next year.

Varsity Riflemen Outshoot URI, Need to Remain Unbeaten vs. UNH

Last Saturday, at the Dickinson Hall range, the Varsity Rifle Team gained an easy win over URI with a score of 1256 to 1112. In wining this match the Redmen remained undefeated in New England College Rifle League competition. They need only to defeat a weak UNH team next week to clinch the Central Division championship and go on to the League finals at MIT on April 6.

Indicative of the easy time UMass had Saturday was the fact that URI's highest score (Racine-232) was nine points power than UMass' lowest score which was Greg Terrio with a 241.

The high scorer for the Redmen was team captain Pete Gallagher with a 263, a career high for him. He was followed by Dick Coons (254), Dud Darling (252) who shot an outstanding 85 in the standing position, John Lacouture (246), and Greg Terrio.

Coach Mike Goodge stated that he was quite pleased with the team's performance. He added that it was the highest total UMass has posted since he took over as coach. With this in mind he prediticed another easy victory over UNH whom URI beat by over 100 points.

It's Houston 1st, UCLA 2nd in Final AP Poll

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — Coach Guy Lewis said Tuesday the national basketball championship voted his undefeated Houston Cougars in the final Associated Press poll is an honor that is good for the team, the school and the State of Texas.

"The boys and I are real happy about this national championship," Lewis said. "This is a great honor and it adds emphasis to our objective of going ahead and win the NCAA tournament."

Houston, with a 29-0 record for the regular season, edged UCLA, the 1967 winner, by 12 points in the season's final poll. The Cougars had held the No. 1 ranking since their 71-69 victory over UCLA Jan. 20 in the Astrodome.

The Cougars ran their record to 30-0 Saturday night with a 94-76 victory over Loyola of Chicago in the first round of the NCAA playoffs. They meet 20-6 Louisville, the No. 9 team in the final poll, Friday night in the Midwest regionals at Wichita, Kan.

Houston is the first Texas team to finish first in a final season poll. Texas Western, now the University of Texas at El Paso, won the NCAA tournament in 1966 but never held a No. 1 ranking during the regular season.

The No. 1 spot in the final poll is the third top honor to be received by the Cougars within two weeks. An earlier Associated Press poll of 322 sports writers and broadcasters had named Lewis the Coach of the Year and selected Elvin Hayes, the second highest scorer in collegiate basketball history, as Player of the Year.

The final Top Ten, with first-place votes in parentheses, season records and total points on a 10-9-8-etc. basis:

THEODORE McKELDIN

Distinguished Visitors Program To Present Theodore McKeldin

Theodore R. McKeldin, Chairman of the Urban Coalition for Baltimore, Md., former Mayor of Baltimore and former Governor of the state of Maryland will speak at the UMass campus tonight on "Intergovernmental Relations: The Local View."

Speaking in Mahar Auditorium at 8 p.m., Mr. McKeldin is one of the participants in the Distinguished Visitors Program sponsored symposium on urban affairs, "The American City: 1968 and Tomorrow."

Mr. McKeldin was elected Mayor of the City of Baltimore in May, 1963, for a term ending in December, 1967 and had previously served for two terms as Governor of Maryland from 1951 to 1959. Prior to that he had served as Mayor of the City of Baltimore from 1943 to 1947.

During his term as Mayor, Mr. McKeldin inaugurated or brought to fruition a large number of new programs to improve physical and social conditions in the City.

Mr. McKeldin has been designated by Pres. Johnson to serve on the Planning Council for The White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights." He has been an active supporter of the anti-poverty program on the national level, and a member of the Public Officials Advisory Council of the Office of Economic Opportunity. He has been called upon to consult with the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development on the new "Demonstration Cities" program and is a member of the Executive Committee of the National League of Cities.

"We Will End the War in Vietnam," Says Republican Candidate Nixon

NEW YORK (AP) — Richard M. Nixon says his presidential campaign statement, "We will end the war in Vietnam and win the peace in the Pacific," constitutes a pledge.

"The next president of the United States must end the war," Nixon said, emphasizing the "must."

The former vice president, victorious in the New Hampshire primary and now set to intensify his drive in Wisconsin, said his statement about ending the war is not a vague campaign promise.

"It's a pledge," he said.

He added that he has "no magic formula" or "gimmick."

"If I had a gimmick," Nixon said, "I would tell Lyndon Johnson. That would be a moral obligation.

"But I do have some specific ideas on how to end the war. They are primarily in the diplomatic area."

He indicated that he would spell out these thoughts when or if he wins the Republican nomination for president, but not in the campaigns in the primaries.

"I'm reserving my big guns for use against Johnson," Nixon said. "I have to adapt my strategy so as to win the primaries with the least expenditure of ammunition."

He said that he has his own private channels of information on the status of military and political events in Vietnam. He added that he does not receive briefings from the Central Intelligence Agency.

"But I have been to Vietnam so often that I do have sources there," he said. "I can't disclose them, of course. I expect to have even better sources."

Nixon made the statements in an interview in his Fifth Avenue apartment in New York. The election returns, foreshadowing his strong showing in New Hampshire, were coming in.

"I see we're only running two to one over Rockefeller in the first precinct," Nixon said. "That's not good enough. We'll have to do much better than that." He laughed and said "we will."

He has said that Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York must enter and win some pri-

Student Senate Gives Approval To Eleven-Page Revised Bylaws

By NICK COSTA
Senate Reporter

After four months of committee and Senate amending, the Student Senate, last night, gave approval to its 11 page revised by-laws.

The by-laws, presented by Senator Fred Hartwell, Chairman of the Student Government and Affairs Committee, include a new section on election of Senate officers which previously had been a manner of Senate custom. A motion of a 2/3 election quorum, introduced by Senator James Moran, was passed following last week's Senate motion for a majority quorum for regular Senate meetings.

Members of the student body may now introduce legislation by a petition signed by 1% of the student body, and may initiate a referendum by a petition of 25% of the student body.

An amendment proposed by Senators Marcus and Hartwell to require public hearings and "campus-wide publication" before final approval of budgets by the Student Senate, was passed. Following debate, the Senate decided that "at least two open meetings" would be necessary for students to discuss Senate appropriations.

Previous to by-law amendments, President James Collins announced that on April 10, 1968, senators may, if they wish, announce their candidacy for Senate offices, and the election would take place on April 16, 1968. New officers would asume their positions on May 1, 1968.

The Amateur Radio Association was given preliminary budget approval of a Student Activities Tax allotment of $1452. Senator Hartwell withdrew his original motion to spread the purchase of new equipment over a period of three years.

Senator Brad Johnson, Chairman of the Budget Committee, presented the budgets of the Flying Redmen (a drill team open to all male undergraduate students) and the Pre-Medical Society; both were amended and returned to committee.

Eight newly elected Senators were sworn into office.

Administration, Student Leaders To Meet in Donkey Basketball Game

By NORI MATON
Staff Reporter

"Players MUST NOT pull Donkeys hair, ears or tail." Thus reads rule eight of the official rules of donkey ball, the sport which will be brought to the UMass campus this Sunday evening at 8:00 p.m. in the Cage as part of Campus Chest 1968 activities.

The administration meets a star-studded cast of student leaders. In this game of basketball each participant rides a donkey. The feature game of the evening has the football team meeting the basketball team. The fast breaking basketball team may be slowed down from their usual pace attempting to follow rule thirteen which states that, "Each player is responsible for his own donkey while it is on the floor. . . ." The beanpot holders may be at no less a disadvantage trying to follow rule five which states that "players must be mounted to shoot."

Among those playing for the administration team will be Dean of Students William Field, Student Union Coordinator Gerald Scanlon, and Varsity Football coach Vic Fucia.

Playing for the student leaders team will be Class presidents Joe Tabacco, Bruce Balboni, Wayne Thomas, and Dick Wood; Senate Vice-President Fran Boronski, Senate President Jim Collins, Senior Class Secretary Claudia Dembski, Junior Class Secretary Patti Aspinwall, Daily Collegian Editor Jack Dean, and former Daily Collegian Editor Chet Weinerman. The team is coached by Daily Collegian News Editor Ron LaBrecque.

Billy Tindall and others may need some help from the leprechauns this St. Patrick's day to go along with their athletic ability and donkeymanship.

Bobby Kennedy Announces He May Still Oppose LBJ

CONCORD, N.H. (AP)—The clear protest of New Hampshire against Pres. Johnson's policies prompted Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N.Y., Wednesday to reassess the possibility of running against the man in the White House.

Kennedy met in private for 20 minutes with antiwar candidate Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., who ran surprisingly strong against Johnson in New Hampshire's Democratic primary Tuesday. The two senators discussed the possibility Kennedy may become a candidate.

Johnson's failure to muster even half of the more than 54,000 Democratic vote in a presidential popularity contest with Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., foretold the difficulties the President may face in his expected bid for re-election.

In Washington, Kennedy told reporters outside a Senate hearing room that "I am reassessing my position as to whether I'll run against Pres. Johnson for the Democratic presidential nomination."

"I think that the election in New Hampshire has indicated a great deal of concern in the Democratic party about the direction our country is going," he said.

He added that his reassessment also is based on evidence that the Johnson administration in-

State Department Probes Validity Of Pueblo Letter

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Dept. said Wednesday it hasn't decided finally whether a purported letter from crewmen of the intelligence-gathering ship 'Pueblo' is authentic.

The letter suggested that the U.S. make a public apology to No. Korea admitting violation of No. Korea's territorial waters, as a means of "assistance in our repatriation." The 82 crew members have been held since the ship was seized in January.

Press officer Robert J. McCloskey said: "Final determination or conclusion has not been reached with respect to authenticity" of purported signatures of the crewmen to the let-

Grant Awarded UMass Instructor

The college student press of America has gained an official historian.

David L. Anderson, an instructor of journalism at the University of Rhode Island, will be collecting and cataloguing materials on the college press for the Commission on the Freedoms and Responsibilities of the College Student Press in America next fall.

His work is sponsored by a grant of $2,000 by the Graduate School of the University of Massachusetts. Anderson will complete studies for the doctorate in government at UMass as a graduate assistant assigned to the Commission which is headquartered at the Amherst campus.

A study project of the National Council of College Publications Advisers, the Commission is preparing for publication a complete study of the college press, patterned after the 1947 Hutchins Commission report on the commercial press.

In announcing Anderson's appointment, Dr. Dario Politella, UMass journalism professor and coordinator of the Commission, said that Anderson will research, collect, evaluate and prepare for publication the "myriad" materials on the college student press now scattered around the country.

In his new post, Anderson will be preparing semi-monthly newsletters on the work of the Commission, as well as monthly digests of case history materials he will collect on the student press.

Formed in 1967, the Commission is made up of students, college editors, college administrators and lay persons recruited from the legal, legislative and business communities.

'Yahoo' Constitution Awaiting Approval By Administration

Yahoo's publish or perish challenge is in the hands of the University administration.

Unanimous approval has been given by the Student Senate to the new constitution of the campus humor magazine.

The Student Communications Board has also endorsed the new constitution, but has taken exception to a clause calling for presidential approval of Yahoo advisors. The senate did not agree in this exception.

Dean of Students William F. Field, President John W. Lederle and Provost Oswald Tippo must act on the constitution before it goes to the Board of Trustees.

"Although the administration has been quite cooperative this year, the senate made it clear that no undue delay will be tolerated," Yahoo Editor Peter Ward ('68) said. Even though trouble is not anticipated, the Free Press Committee is prepared to come alive again if the issue is not dealt with "fairly". Ward indicates that to be fair, the administration should treat this organization exactly as it would any other RSO activity.

As Ward sees it Yahoo staffers, a dedicated group qualified to oversee actual publication, have worked unselfishly to wipe out a "black mark" on the students' record. They consider it a failure of the student body in allowing censorship to exist for three years. The eleven Yahoo editors of the provisional government believe that the original censorship was unwarranted. "Furthermore, they do not approve of censhorship by any persons," Ward said.

Yahoo, a long established tradition at UMass, has received national recognition. Yahoo editors admit that some issues may have been of questionable quality, they are determined to improve the publication. "Material will not be used merely for its shock value. Campus conditions and events will be probed and exposed humorously," Ward said.

Chorale Tour

The University of Massachusetts Chorale will begin its most extensive spring tour to date when it leaves March 23 to give nine concerts in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois.

Under the direction of Dr. Richard du Bois, director of choral music at UM, the 60-voice a capella choir will present a repertoire of sacred and secular music from the Renaissance to the present, including religious classics, Negro spirituals, folk tunes and sea chanteys. Composers represented include Gottfried, Wagner, Bach, Palestrina, Lotti, Carrissimi, Brahms and Poulenc.

The Chamber Singers, an ensemble of ten singers who perform with the Chorale and as a solo group, will sing a selection of madrigals and chamber music by Stevens, di Lasso, Hindemith and Janequin. Selected from the Chorale for their outstanding ability, the Chamber Singers have appeared on TV and radio.

A piano solo by Roger Spadafora, a grad student in music at the University, will also be featured. He will play Scarlatti's Sonata, Brahms' Rhapsody in B minor, Schumann's "In Der Nacht," and Chopin's Scherzo No. 2.

Concert Dance Group to Perform

The University of Massachusetts Concert Dance Group, directed by UMass professor of physical education Marilyn V. Patton, will present its second concert of the year on Friday and Saturday, March 15 and 16, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Admission to the performance is free.

The 22 performing men and women will present 12 dances. Among the numbers to be performed are "Phlehem," a duet featuring Damien Kuffler from Newton and Christine Mitchell from Scituate; a group dance for four men and four women created by Priscilla Massei from Worcester; "Two in Space," by Reeva Goodman from Swampscott and Paul Shiff from Marblehead; and "Love is Blue," created by Anne Umana from East Boston.

Music for the program will be played by Anthony Crescione, musical director for the group, assisted by Allan Doty and Nick Valesquez. Mr. Crescione wrote the music for many of the dances.

Fluorescent costumes and blue light are used in a group composition "And Now," highlighting the technical designs of Paul Boliver from South Hadley and Margaret Booth from Amherst.

Performing in the concert will be Lois Ihlenberg Barclay and Marilyn Gibson from Canton, Nancy Bergsma, Myron Cook and Robert DeGuglielmo from Amherst, Amanda Carlin from North Hadley, Janet T. Craft from Hadley, Anne Drew from Norwood, Marc Katz from Holyoke, Beverly Knapik from Uxbridge, Carol Miller from South Hamilton, James Pastik from North Westport, Judy Reiherz from Everett, Joan Sanctaroce from Hopedale and Margaret Toohey from Lenox.

Also performing will be Marilyn Patton, Anne Umana, Priscilla Massei, Damien Kuffler, Reeva Goodman, Judy Cullio and Christine Mitchell.

Campus Chest Sponsors "The Bold"

From a UMass fraternity party to the Cheetah and Playboy Clubs in New York City to the Statler-Hilton in Cleveland and then back to the wilds of UMass is a partial bookings list of "The Bold", the five-man group which will appear at the Campus Chest-Class of '71 dance Friday night in the Student Ballroom.

Steve Walker—bass, Tim Griffin—drums, Mike Chmura—organ, and Bob LaPalm and Dick LaFreniere—guitar, are "The Bold". And, they are back in the college area until the end of this semester while Mike finishes school.

The group, originally organized in 1962 as "Steve and the Esquires", changed its name to "The Bold" in the summer of 1963. They played UMass fraternities and dances for three years before going on the road. Since then, they have made appearances in nightclubs and discotheques throughout New England and the Mid West. They recently finished a month's booking at the Statler-Hilton in Cleveland.

As for the future, Steve sees cutting an album a possibility in the very near future. "Right now we're in the middle of contracts. We're changing managers and record producers, since we weren't pleased with the last two cuts we did."

While trying to cater to various audiences, "The Bold" is looking to "the glory bit with the teeny boppers and the real fulfillment of playing the college audience. We especially like to play the college audience because they seem to be the most appreciative, that is they really know what's going on."

John Hancock Representative Explains Insurance Economics

by Ellen Mackenzie

If there were no life insurance companies in the United States today, many aspects of our economy which Americans consider vital to their welfare and comfort would be non-existent.

This point was one of many made in a lecture to Dr. Politella's expository writing class Friday, March 8, by Mr. Stanley Dingman, Director of Educational Research for the John Hancock Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Dingman's interest is in improving relations with his insurance company on college campuses. He stated that many college students have a negative feeling towards life insurance and also of business in general. "The life insurance business has a problem," stated Mr. Dingman. "Very few people understand what it does."

When asked what were the social functions that life insurance provided for Americans, Mr. Dingman stated that "it is difficult to find a segment of our economy in which insurance funds are not involved. Life insurance funds are used to build apartments and factories. For the individual policy holder, life insurance provides a guaranteed estate. In addition, life insurance provides employment for many Americans."

Florida Plane Hijackers Charged with Conspiracy

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Three men who stayed in Havana after flying there on a passenger jet hijacked over Florida were charged Wednesday with conspiracy to commit piracy.

Asst. U. S. Atty. Robert McGowan said the two men who threatened crew members with guns also had been charged with kidnapping the other 56 persons aboard Nat'l. Airlines Flight 28.

McGowan said the warrants were issued by U.S. Comm. Paul Game, Jr., in Tampa, the city from which the plane had just taken off on the last leg of a San Francisco-Miami flight when it was hijacked. Piracy of an airliner is a death penalty offense.

The oldest man of the trio charged Wednesday, identified as Ramon Donate, 45, sat calmly in his coach seat during the flight but went into a tantrum of fear at Havana Airport. He told a stewardess and other passengers he would be killed in Cuba and indicated he was being kidnaped.

"It didn't appear from the investigation that he took part," McGowan said of the older man. "He didn't brandish a weapon or force the detour of the plane or hold the other people captive."

The two gunmen were identified in the charges as Jesus Arnenteros, 38, and Gilberto Carranzana, 33.

maries if he wants the GOP nomination in August. Rockefeller has said he will decide within 10 days whether to permit his name to remain on the ballot in the Oregon primary, May 28.

"Rockefeller would like to make Oregon a winner-take-all affair," Nixon said, "and claim that a win there entitles him to the nomination. Of course, we're not buying that. Oregon's the only state he has ever won outside of New York."

Senator McCarthy Believes He Can Win Democratic Nomination

The optimistic McCarthy, who now says "I think I can get the nomination—we're ahead," made it clear he will not step aside for Kennedy as he once indicated he might. Kennedy said previously that the New Hampshire outcome had not at this time altered his decision to support the President actively if Johnson is renominated.

If he chose to become an active candidate, the New York senator would be in a position to challenge McCarthy without entering any primaries.

McCarthy's headquarters in Washington was claiming that the Minnesota senator actually got more votes than Johnson. They contend that there were 4,640 write-ins for him on the Republican ballot, where they said Johnson got none. That write-in vote will not be known for at least a week.

Whether this would have any effect on Johnson's seeming determination to run again or convince him that he ought to alter his policies remained speculative.

The White House fended off questions about Johnson's reaction, standing on the President's Tuesday night statement that "New Hampshire is the only place where a candidate can claim 20 per cent of the vote is a landslide and 40 per cent is a mandate and 60 per cent is unanimous." By that count both he and McCarthy got some kind of mandates.

Europe's Gold Buying Rush Neared Panic Proportions

LONDON (AP)—London bullion dealers clamped sharp restrictions on sales Wednesday as Europe's gold buying rush neared panic proportions.

The dealers' efforts to slow the gold rush and give them time to catch up on what was described as a vast backlog of orders did not appear wholly successful.

Demand in all European bullion markets continued at a stampede level throughout the day. Speculators and hoarders snatched up the metal at almost any price in the drive to get out of paper money.

Paris silver dealers refused to quote a price for that metal in a move similar to that of London gold dealers. The Paris price for silver had already soared 20 points by then.

In London, gold dealers added a full five cents onto the price at Wednesday morning's fixing, making it $35.20 an ounce, and still the demand continued. They refused to accept new requests for small orders but continued selling large amounts to regular customers.

Spokesmen emphasized the move was not a suspension of sales.

"We are applying a brake, so to speak," said one.

The action followed a spate of reports from Zurich, denied in both Rome and Washington, which claimed:

- That Italy had made a secret deal with the United States which in effect would permit the Italians to drop out of the seven-nation gold pool.
- That Washington was preparing to slap an embargo on further sales of gold.

As a hedge, Swiss bankers would only agree to new sales on the understanding that buyers would have to pay any higher free market rate which might result by delivery dates from an American embargo.

KENNEDY . . .

tends to continue on its present course in Vietnam and that former V-Pres. Richard M. Nixon is the probable GOP nominee.

Although he didn't say so, Kennedy's reassessment obviously was taking into account a possible but unlikely dropout decision from the White House.

Kennedy's decision is expected to come by Mar. 22, the deadline for deciding whether to leave his name on the Oregon primary ballot or remove it with a disclaimer that he is not and does not plan to become a candidate for president.

Debaters Bring UMass Honor In Tournament Competition

The UMass debate teams have had considerable success at intercollegiate tournaments in recent weeks. They have captured four trophies and four certificates of competition.

At Kings College, Pa., sophomore varsity debators Marlene Fine and Stephen Daggett won the first place bowl by beating thirty other eastern colleges. At Brooklyn College, the team captured fourth place in the tournament, posting a 6 win-0 loss record. In addition, Fine and Daggett were awarded individual certificates as being among the top speakers.

The novice team has participated in two tournaments. At Wayne State University in Detroit, they won a third place trophy in competition with sixty other schools. At the City College of New York, they again captured third place, with freshmen Kevin Cronin and Tim Hynes receiving individual recognition. The overall UM debate team record is 130 wins and 90 losses.

March and April will be active months for the debators, with tournaments in New York, Maryland, Washington, D. C. Virginia, and Chicago. In addition, the Forensic Society is sponsoring a debate tournament on this campus on Saturday, March 23. Coaching the teams are Ronald J. Matlon, Sandra E. Purnell, and Ruth L. Goldfard, faculty members in the Speech Department.

NYU Offers Summer Urban Workshop

A workshop in urban sociology, utilizing the immediate neighborhood as its principal area of study, will be offered this summer at the University Heights Center of New York University in the Bronx.

The six-week course will combine training in methods of inquiry with the study of a substantive area of sociology, according to Associate Prof. Sidney H. Aronson of the University College department of sociology, director of the program.

Professor Aronson said data on the area surrounding the Heights campus would be gathered from government agencies and other sources as a basis for the studies to be conducted by workshop teams. Special fields for research projects include crime and delinquency, health and social stress, geographical mobility, the urban family, urban politics, and intergroup relations.

"Let's assume a student chooses to work with a team studying the urban family in two neighborhoods near the campus," Professor Aronson explained. "After reviewing the existing material in class, the student and his team would make up a part of an omnibus questionnaire, which would include items contributed by other teams studying other aspects of the neighborhoods. With 30 students, and a quota of ten interviews per student, there would be a yield of 300 completed questionnaires, enough for a reasonably sophisticated data analysis.

Prof. Norman Miller, co-director of the workshop, said it is hoped the opportunity to study the city first-hand will attract students to the workshop from various parts of the U.S. and from other countries.

Hebrew Course Given in Amherst

A Hebrew Teachers' Training Course sponsored by the Amherst Jewish Education Committee will be held during the week of March 24-29 in Bowditch Lodge, University Drive, Amherst.

Instruction will be given to a demonstration class consisting of adult area residents and college students interested in availing themselves of this opportunity to learn to speak Hebrew. Mr. Reuven Yalon, originator of the Modern Hebrew Linguistics Program presently in use at the Amherst Jewish Sunday School, will personally conduct the course. This program emphasizes the teaching of conversational Hebrew, employing audio-visual techniques.

Students will have four hours of instruction a day and the teacher-participants will devote an additional hour to lectures and discussions. The course will run for five days, March 24-29 (University Spring Recess) from 9:00 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., and 12:30 p.m. to 2:00 p.m. for the students, and until 3:00 p.m. for the teacher-participants. The only charges are for textbooks.

Not all girl's stuff "covers up." Here's one product that does more: PAMPRIN.

PAMPRIN makes a woman look and feel better . . . without relying on "camouflage." PAMPRIN is specifically designed to get at a basic cause of pre-menstrual problems. The Pollsters

With the New Hampshire primary over and November 5 drawing ever nearer, the political bandwagons will soon shift into high gear. With them come the augurers of the American political scene—the pollsters.

Since the first public-opinion poll in 1935, the unscientific straw ballot conducted by newspapers has developed into a multi-million dollar industry that has become a tremendous social and political force in the United States. Today, polls are carried on incessantly as part of a modern, computerized, highly-refined survey.

The largest and most widely-known polls are the Gallup Poll, the Harris Survey, and the state polls conducted in Michigan, California, and Texas. The results from these surveys are spread across the country quickly and easily through the various news media. Numerous smaller polls exist for commercial and industrial purposes in addition to the polls that some political candidates direct to determine their strength with the voters in different parts of the country. The Gallup Poll is perhaps the most influential poll in existence today. Conducted by George H. Gallup, a pioneer in polling techniques, from the American Institute of Public Opinion at Princeton, this poll has had a curious influence over many political leaders as evidenced by President Johnson's recent popularity ratings.

This political significance has been the cause of much controversy over the years. Vehement condemners of the polls such as Lindsay Rogers and Warren Moscow attacked them as being inaccurate, based on a misguided philosophy, and altogether useless. Moscow called them, "a quick look out the window posing as a weather forecast." But Gallup, Harris, Elmo Roper and their colleagues adamantly maintained that the polls are indeed accurate, scientific, and useful. Aside from the Dewey blunder in 1948, the pollsters present a very impressive record of accuracy. In 1960, the Gallup Poll figures in the Kennedy-Nixon race were only nine-tenths of one per cent above the actual vote. In 1964, the poll was 2.7 per cent high. Many critics say that the polls interfere with the voting process by creating a bandwagon effect around the leading candidate. The pollsters reply that the polls are only a measure of public opinion at a particular time and have no way of gathering votes or predicting outcomes. "Polls have no measurable effect on votes," Gallup says "but I've never met a politician who didn't believe they did."

As to their usefulness, Gallup says that the polls have found "ignorance on the part of a large segment of our population regarding issues vital to their very existence . . ." Elmo Roper provided a consistent retort for the critics: "Public-opinion research is no panacea . . But it is still the best instrument known for measuring what the masses of people think. And if used wisely . . . it can be an invaluable asset in the struggle to attain a more productive, more satisfying, and more peaceful life."

Legislators and Legislatures PAT PETOW

"In Loco Constituents"

The Student Senate by its actions on its revised by-laws has apparently decided to forego most of the "in loco constituents" concept promulgated by Sen. President Jim Collins. According to the "in loco constituents" idea, the Senate, and its officers, should make sure that each member is doing his job.

Thus, on at least one occasion this year when the Senate lacked a quorum and had to adjourn, the body ordered a roll call so that those not present would be identifiable. This was both a mild censure by the body as well as a listing for the students to read.

More directly, Sen. President Collins has sent letters to residence hall governments calling attention to the quorum problem and reminding the governments of their right to initiate impeachment proceedings. Collins has also ordered the names of absent senators to be presented to the Daily Collegian every week.

Now, probably because it is second semester and the lithe members have learned how to flex their parliamentary muscles, the body voted to reduce the quorum to a bare majority and voted not to record regularly the names of senators who leave the meetings early.

One might conclude, in the face of experiencing greater constituency control and greater "in loco constituents" activity, the Senate has had enough and wishes to embrace an "every member for himself" idea:

But properly it is more an "every member for himself with the least inconvenience to the Senate" idea—which isn't really a bad philosophy of government. The Senate is sick and tired of quorum problems and of the members who create the situation. But because the Senate apparently can't effectively deal with the members, and perhaps shouldn't, the body is just making life easier for itself, abandoning the Collins "in loco constituents" role.

Let's Begin Building A Newer, Calmer World

To the editor:

Last week I wrote on "BLACK POWER—NEGRO RESURRECTION", and some of my American friends politely asked me to stop "popping my nose in some other people's business." I must admit from the onset that I hate and despise anyone who maintains that the purpose of society is not MAN but a GLORIFICATION of some abstract notion, such as 'the nation', 'the flag', 'democracy', 'communism' or even 'God'; I admire and honor anyone who realizes that some abstract notions can help MAN in groping forward toward better shores. With this conviction in mind I regard one man's problem to be everybody's problem.

I also realize that I am acquiring 'education' because it will help me to develop a more creative mind which can absorb and help solve old as well as new problems of MAN. Now, how will a young developing mind of a student be tested? By shallowing a few facts from books and then vomit them in a class or at a party? Should I not test my developing mind by responding very vigorously to the problems of MAN? As a student at UMass, should I avoid the problems facing MAN in America because I am not 'American'?

If I think I can throw light on problems facing MAN in America, should I shrink from doing so because I fail to throw light on problems facing MAN in Africa? No, if a young developing mind fails to respond vigorously to the problems that threaten the worthiness of MAN, but it is a young plant growing in a dark bell jar—it will never flower. Having put some of the misunderstandings right, let me go on to examine one of the problems that threatens the dignity of MAN. This danger is the belief on the part of some people, especially the Western people, that they have a mission for "weak, miserable people".

For the last five centuries European nations claimed themselves to have a mission for the 'savages' of Africa and Asia, and they called their mission a 'white man's burden'. Their mission, so they claimed, was to 'civilize and christianize the barbarians' of Africa and Asia. Of course, they fulfilled their mission with some praiseworthy sucess, but, to the great dismay of human mind, some shortcomings of their mission are very notorious: they include such blots on the human record as the slave trades, the atrocities of the Congo, the slow destruction of the people in the South Pacific (Remember also the decimation of the Indian population in the Americas). These blots are remembered with a guilty and defensive mind by Europeans and people of European descent but with an angry and forgiving mind by Africans and Asians.

With more peaceful communication among the peoples of the world, the world that has become very small, we would hope that the anger of the Africans and Asians would evaporate and people would live in harmony. But, what are the activities of the Western World doing in South East Asia and South East Africa? They are igniting the anger of Asian and African people. Asians and Africans are told, once more, that America, Australia, South Africa and Rhodesia (the children of Europe!) have a mission for them. The mission, so they are told, is to protect their liberty and freedom from communism.

Once more, to the great dismay of human mind, the shortcomings of this mission are very notorious; they include such evils as the killing and bombing of the Asian people, the hanging and enslaving of the African people. Asians and Africans are neither devils nor saints; they are ordinary sort of fellows, subjected to reason and prejudice. They cannot bear these missions for ever. And lo, who is so short sighted as to think that the power will be in the hands of the Western World for ever?

Fellow students, I really shudder when I think that seventy years from now my children and your children are coming to cut each others throat here on earth or on other planets because of the "wrong doings of our fathers". Fellow students, let's begin building the foundation of our own newer, friendlier and calmer world now. Oppose the war to the last of your atom.

"Do You Have The Correct Time?"

To the editor:

Time is indeed a strange, strange thing, especially in Bartlett Hall. Until recently all who entered this noble edifice were suspended in the immortal grip of 12:22 (P.M.?), the eternal lunch. But this past Monday a grand revival occurred; not only were the Bartlett clocks running, but they were correct. Joy filled my soul. At last my faith was restored in the competency of this great university. But, alas, the elation was only temporary as hallowed Old Chapel gleefully pealed forth on the half-hour.

Today Old Chapel's neurotic protest has been quelled, but the valiant Bartlett clocks are carrying on the never ending efforts of confusion at UMass. They run swiftly ahead of Eastern Standard Time, reminding laconic students that time, tide and UMass wait for no man.

Excuse me, sir, do you have the correct time?

Many Thanks To the Campus Police

To the editor:

Upon observing the fine job that the University of Massachusetts police has been doing regarding the parking problems on campus, we wish to say thank you. We have had a chance to observe their actions first hand, as some of us have received tickets, fortunately for most of us it was our first offense.

Some of us gave the policeman a lot of "lip" and the police are to be commended for their steadfastness under fire. They didn't lose their "cool" and they didn't cancel tickets under pressure. They gained our respect and appreciation of the job they are doing on campus.

Thank you again, keep up the good work.

Amherst "Afro-Am" Society Established To Bring About Racial Understanding

By NEAL NOVACK
Staff Reporter

According to the Amherst Afro-American Society, there exists within the Four College community a "vacuum" between the black and white students.

In order to discuss the reasons of this rift, and to bring about a better understanding among students on racial problems here and throughout the country, the Society will hold seminars in Converse Hall on April 4 at Amherst College.

"The Afro-Ams will try to explain most of the basic philosophy, assumptions and ideals of 'Black Power' and its role in America today," stated Calvin P. Ward (Amherst '70), one of the coordinators on a five man committee for the Society at Amherst College.

To initiate further student involvement a "Black Arts Festival" consisting of concerts, exhibits, and lectures, will be held at Springfield College on April 6 and 7.

"The goal of the Society, an educational oriented group dealing primarily with ideas and concepts," continued Calvin Ward, "is to bring about a high level of awareness to the students in the Four College area of our country's basic social problems." It is for this end that the Society was started.

The main contention of the Society is that because students do not really understand the concept of 'Black Power' and because of lack of communication, the confrontation of black and white students has failed to produce any contraction of the racial gap.

In the area of communications, the Society would like to instill cohesive contact on a group-to-group basis, rather than on a group-to-individual basis. This would enable results on a larger scale, and bring community issues into better perspective. This group-to-group or community-to-community relationship would also help to undo the conformity of Negro students to the ways of the white community and its institutions, and likewise encourage the Negro students not to take a negative attitude towards the white community and its colleges. The Negro's sense of isolation and feeling of not being able to accomplish anything would be greatly alleviated.

Analysis of NACCO Report

The recent report released by the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders has reawakened the social tensions which have lain dormant throughout the winter. With the premonition of renewed riots in our cities' streets this summer, an analogy may be drawn between the vacuum or polarization of the type described by the Society and the widening national polarization cited in the Commission's report.

The main difference distinguishing the two vacuums is the factor of violence. Just as the Society stressed the need for positive action on a community rather than individual basis, so to the Commission's report concluded that improvement of social conditions and avoidance of further riots "will require a commitment to national action—compassionate, massive and sustained . . . From every American it will require new attitudes, new understanding and, above all, new will.' Giving its reasons for the hot tin-can conditions, the report went on to say that, "White racism is essentially responsible for the explosive mixture which has been accumulating in our cities since the end of World War II."

In Newsweek (March 11), a report on the Commission's findings concluded that "the report sketches the pattern of economic exclusion, unresponsiveness by local government, abrasive police tactics and pervasive discrimination that has left the Negro uniquely isolated and embittered."

Commenting upon the sources of past disorder in the cities, it was further stated that, "Extremist agitation may have helped wet the mood for rioting . . . widespread misunderstanding and exaggeration characterized all the ghetto explosions." This general misunderstanding between white and black man is essentially the same as that stressed by the Amherst Afro-Am Society.

"If college students of today no longer see the necessity of obtaining a clear understanding of a concept of Black Power than the development of a viable solution is to be put off another generation or two. If that be the case, we should all hope the thing called 'summertime' never comes until that generation," said Calvin Ward.

Facts on Outside Health Care Now Available at Infirmary

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

In response to a number of requests from students who wish to know the cost of health care "on the outside" for medical services, they have received at the infirmary, a fact sheet on health costs. Dr. Katherine E. Reichert, a member of the infirmary staff, was responsible for compiling the information. The fact sheet is available at the nurse's station located on the first floor of the infirmary.

Dr. Reichert stated "the listed care costs represent a minimum to average charge." In regard to her sources of information, the doctor noted that Mrs. Patrick along with an infirmary pharmacist provided the estimates in the areas of x-rays, blood tests, and drugs.

Commenting on the reason why infirmary treatments can be covered by the student health fee of $25, she explained, "all medicine is bought at cost." The infirmary tries to operate economically in order to break even, which it has done. Dr. Reichert also mentioned that "Dr. Gage is dead set against raising the student health fee." But most important of all, no cutbacks are made in the treatment of students, regardless of cost. Dr. Reichert proclaimed the infirmary motto as, "what is good for the student, is good for Health Service."

The other person instrumental in the publishing and approving the fact sheet was Dr. Robert W. Gage, Director of Infirmary. In elaborating on the figures contained in fact sheets of "outside" medical costs, Dr. Gage said in an interview with the Collegian, "the quoted charges were on the Blue Cross, Blue Shield reimbursements." Selecting the item of daily physician visits costing approximately $5 a day, the doctor believes the figures may be somewhat low, since reimbursement now is approximated at $7. In the Infirmary, doctors treat an average of 30 students a day. Dr. Gage estimates that students average five visits a year.

For this reason 75% of the Infirmary budget goes toward paying staff salaries. The infirmary budget is projected for a three year period and is set up by dividing the cost of operations by the enrolled. Therefore, Dr. Gage describes the Health Services as "cooperative."

Hoping to show the Infirmary has improved in functioning economically, Dr. Gage is hindered by the imminent raises for the nurses, and in the near future, the lab technicians. But Dr. Gage feels that the Infirmary must be able to compete with "outside" wage scale in order to recruit a high quality staff. Right now, the staff is minus one doctor, but a new doctor will arrive in April with two doctors to follow in September. Since summer students have increased, the Infirmary now retains a 12 month staff.

With the expected raise in the student population, Dr. Gage sees a building addition as a necessity. At the present, the bed accommodations are sufficient. Commenting on the immediate problems, Dr. Gage stated, "there is a need for more outpatient, waiting and reception areas."

Senator Robert F. Kennedy has written a book entitled To Seek a Newer World. Speaking of the youth of America he cites the problem of communication. - Commons Mgr. to Go on World Tour

Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines, Formosa, Hong Kong, India, Spain, Germany and England are some of the countries University of Massachusetts South Dining Commons Manager Robert J. Blanchard expects to visit soon in a flying trip around the world to help evaluate U. S. Air Force mess facilities.

Blanchard plans to leave Mar. 17 on a global trip that will take about a month and will cover selected Air Force bases overseas and in this country. He will be on a four-member evaluation board inspecting Air Force dining facilities in connection with the Hennessy award program. Blanchard will be the sole civilian member of the board, serving with three Air Force food service officers.

Blanchard and the other three evaluation board members will turn in reports on all phases of the dining facilities they inspect — food quality, physical facilities, monetary management, personnel policies and other areas.

Polish Students Demonstrate, Say that "The Press Lies"

WARSAW (AP)—Antigovernment student demonstrators spread from the capital to eight Polish cities Wednesday with police in Poznan, the steel city that rioted in 1956, reportedly flailing at several thousand marchers with clubs.

In Cracow, authorities were also said to have used force in dispersing a parade of some 3,000 marchers at Jagiellonian University, Poland's oldest institution for higher education.

Informants told of other demonstrations in Gliwice, Gdansk formerly Danzig, Lublin, Wroclaw formerly Breslau, Lodz and Szczeczin formerly Stettin. Their aim was to express solidarity with students at the University of Warsaw who fought for three days during demonstrations against the closing of a popular play that might prove embarassing to the Russians.

Reliable sources said the police in Poznan waded into lines of students chanting "the press lies" and burning copies of state-controlled newspapers in front of a statue of Adam Mickiewicz, the 19th century Polish poet whose play "Dzaidy" was ordered off the stage in January.

The students charge that "the press lies" seemed to be directed at the government's attempt to blame the unrest of hooligans and "zionists." This line was stressed again Wednesday.

PAP, the Polish press agency, carried the text of a resolution issued by Foreign Trade Ministry workers saying: "We demand that our authorities stop tolerating the activities of the reactionary Zionist elements in the political, economic, cultural and social life of the country."

Tuesday the government fired three officials, believed to be Jews, whose children were accused in the press of leading the riots. They were: Jan Grudzingski, vice minister of forestry and timber; Jan Gorecki, director general of the Finance Ministry, and Fryderyk Topolski, head of a Warsaw industrial planning office.

Copper Strike Talks Again in Stalemate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Another contract proposal fell through Wednesday in White House efforts to settle the nation's eight-month-old copper industry strike. And both company and union sources reported talks back in a stalemate.

"Refusal of the coalition of 26 striking unions to finalize an agreement with Kennecott Copper Corp.'s Western mining operations until a settlement is reached for the company's lead-zinc and fabricating operations has once again resulted in a complete deadlock," a Kennecott spokesman said.

More than 50,000 workers are involved in the strike that has shut down most U. S. copper production.

Both company and union negotiators appeared to be waiting for some further move by federal officials to try to get negotiations going again.

Smith College Choir Will Tour Washington, D.C. Soon

During the last week week in March, the Smith College Choir and the Trinity College Glee Club will tour the Washington, D.C. area, presenting several joint concerts.

The groups totaling 75 voices will leave New England on March 22, to sing in the nation's capital at the Smithsonian Institution, the Washington Cathedral, Walter Reed Army Hospital, the Embassy of Great Britain, Howard University, and at Hood College in Frederick, Md.

Miss Catherine Melhorn of the Smith music faculty and Robert Gronquist of Trinity will travel with the groups and conduct the performances of works by Purcell, Monteverdi, Hindemith and Stravinsky. Elizabethan folk songs and madrigals, plus a group of American pieces including spirituals, folk and popular songs. Accompaniment will be provided by strings and winds from both colleges, the Trinity Brass Choir and the Wind Ensemble of Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore which for several years has held its summer session on the Smith campus in Northampton.

Vietnamese Volunteers Form Guerrilla Unit Under Reputable Retired Generals

SAIGON (AP)—Vietnamese volunteers are forming a guerrilla "liberation army" under several retired generals of high reputation to invade North Vietnam, the Saigon government reported Wednesday. U.S. officials expressed surprise.

Nguyen Ngoc Linh, director general of information, announced the move without spelling out how such a force could be trained, armed and ferried into action while South Vietnam is strained to build up military strength against enemy troops on its home grounds.

Linh said the invasion army would be made up of Vietnamese who are "sick and tired of those people who want to 'liberate' South Vietnam." He referred to the Viet Cong and their North Vietnamese allies.

Much of the South Vietnamese military leadership, including President Nguyen Van Thieu and Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky, is on record in favor of escalation of the war against the North.

Shortly before Linh made his announcement, the government's Vietnam Press came out with a story quoting authoritative sources as saying a "high-ranking member of the vice president's office is forming a March to the North Army."

Linh said the new force would be called the North Vietnam Liberation Army. He said it would not be a part of the regular army. He told a newsman it will look to the government for arms and ammunition.

Dr. Shockley to Speak in Engineering Auditorium

The 1956 Nobel Prize winner in physics, Dr. William Shockley, will speak on "Human Quality Problems and Research Taboos," Mon., Mar. 18 at 10:30 a.m. in the UM Engineering Auditorium. The talk is open to the public.

Dr. Shockley received his B.S. degree from Calif. Inst. of Tech. in 1932 and his Ph.D. from MIT in 1936. That same year he joined the technical staff of Bell Telephone Laboratories.

In 1956, with John Bardeen and Walter Brattain, Dr. Shockley received the Nobel Prize in physics for his invention of the junction transistor and for his other contributions to transistor physics. In 1955 he left Bell to join Beckman Instruments Inc., forming the subsidiary Shockley Transistor Corp. in 1958. Since 1962, he has been a member of the President's Science Advisory Committee Panel on Scientific and Technical Manpower.

Lindsay Comments On Riot Report

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York said Wednesday members of the President's Commission on Civil Disorders had hoped the response to its report "would be decisive and significant, not halting and half-hearted."

Lindsay, who was vice chairman of the commission, noted the commission's call for action on an unprecedented scale has brought some responses "that the time is wrong, that the money is needed elsewhere and that the program is too large."

Canniff Looks Ahead to Next Season

Ten Lettermen to Return

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff has high hopes for the '68-'69 hockey squad to improve upon this year's 5-15 record. He has several reasons for the brightening outlook.

Canniff will have most of his lettermen returning from his team of 15. He has only lost three men, team captain Frank Buckler, defenseman Dave Goldberg and center Don Robinson.

With this solid nucleus returning, Canniff can also look forward to some help from the freshman team barring an academic disaster.

A third source of help will be from three players that were redshirted this year. John Hartnett, Tom Babson, a transfer from St. Lawrence and Joe Brebbia are three strong forwards that could add some scoring punch to next year's team.

With almost all the berths on next year's team open to competition, Canniff is looking forward to the war that should prevail among the 27 players from the frosh and this year's varsity plus the red shirts for the 17 openings on the roster.

Canniff said, "Those players that come to practice in the best shape and in the right attitude have the best shot at the open spots on the roster."

One spot that will need to be filled with some new personnel is center. According to Canniff, this year's team contained no natural center ice men and this problem was compounded by the fact that Robinson, the top scoring center on the team will not return next season.

One fact that proves Canniff's assertion was that the top man in assists this season was Frank Buckler, a wing. Incidentally, his 15 assists tie him for third best in a season and his carreer total of 23 place him in a tie for sixth.

Hartnett and Babson should help in filling the center ice spots as both are natural centers. There are also several centers coming up from the frosh squad who compiled impressive scoring totals.

PILE-UP AT THE NET—Scramble in front of the UConn net prevented a goal by UM in a game which they lost, 7-4, in Feb.

Canniff is hoping to put three solid scoring lines on the ice with equal ability to put the puck into the net. Also, he plans one of these lines to be strong defensively to check the opponents' top line.

In reviewing the overall picture of his initial coaching effort at UMass, Canniff attributed his team's main fault to being defensively weak, not only on defense, but up front from forwards who failed to play defensive hockey.

Statistics point out the defensive weakness of the Redmen who gave up 114 goals. This total averages out to 5.65 goals a game, an average tough for the offense to maintain over a stretch of games.

Another fault of the team in general was their inconsistent play. The scores ranged all the way from a 15-0 thrashing of MIT early in the season to an 8-2 and a 9-1 loss to Connecticut and Colby respectively during the season. The Redmen were also inconsistent during many of their games playing two good periods but playing poorly in the other.

A good example of the inconsistency occurred in the Army and Colby games. The Redmen trailed the Cadets by 2-0 going into the final period but ended up losing 6-1. The Colby game was even worse, the Redmen, down by 3-1 after two periods, completely fell apart in the last quarter finally losing 9-1.

One player that doesn't have to worry about a berth next year is Jeff Sanborn. He led the squad in scoring with 32 points on 18 goals and 14 assists.

His 32 points this season were the fifth best for a season and his 14 assists place him fourth in that category.

Sanborn has now scored 26 goals and 26 assists in his varsity career for 52 points placing him seventh on the all-time scoring lists. He will have a good shot at Russ Kidd's number 1 total of 80 next winter. Also, Sanborn has a chance at Bill Skowyra's top career total of 39 assists.

One ironic statistic was a comparison of this year's skaters against the '66-'67 team. That team compiled an 8-11-1 card while scoring seven more goals and giving up 11 more than this season's squad.

These figures indicate that the '66-'67 team was in most of their games and won a number of close games. Canniff is hoping that next year's squad will be in more games and estimates that if they win some close ones the team will have a good chance of breaking the .500 mark for the first time in eight years.

Red Sox Lose, 5-3, to Reds

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)—The Cincinnati Reds posted their fifth victory in six exhibition starts by defeating the Boston Red Sox 5-3 yesterday on Tommy Helms' two-run single with two out in the 10th inning.

Cold weather moved into Florida in the wake of a torrential downpour, forcing the Boston Red Sox and fans to bundle up in jackets, sweaters, raincoats and anything else available. The chill and whipping wind brought the usual wise cracks.

The public address announcer set the tempo in greeting 1,173 hardy fans, "welcome to holiday on ice," he said. Then he informed everyone, between shivers, that Greenville, Maine, had 23 inches of snow.

Boston right-hander Jose Santiago comes from sunny Puerto Rice, but he proved once again that he pitches well in cool weather. Jose pitched the first five innings, allowing just one run on Tony Perez's opposite field homer to right center in the second. Santiago finished his day's work by running for about an hour in the outfield.

Carl Yastrzemski grounded to short and walked twice in three trips to the plate. The Red Sox' Triple Crown winner was all smiles, though. "I felt the best this spring," he said. "I was swinging a good quick bat. Felt real good."

Red Sox coach Eddie Popowski is nursing a virus. Former Red Sox star Dom Dimaggio coached at first. Tony Conigliaro felt better after a one-day bout with the bug. However, Tony limited his activity to batting against the automatic pitching machine and some running.

Manager Dick Williams of the Red Sox has certain classifications for his pitchers. Some are initials, such as ok. The lowest is "oc" for Ocala. That's where the Red Sox farmhands train.

The Red Sox have plenty of rooters from New England on hand. The Bosox club is in Winter Haven in force, more than 100 strong. The special trip is proving so successful that the boosters' club already is making plans for another excursion south next year.

NIT Opens Tonight in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The 31st National Invitation Tournament gets off to a running start tonight and might not slow down until the basketball tourney ends 10 days later.

Marshall, W. V., 17-7, which averages 87 points a game, and St. Peter's, N.J., which hits better than 95, will sprint onto the new Madison Square Garden floor in the first of four firstround doubleheaders.

The pace may slow only slightly in the second game when 10th-ranked Duke, one of the tourney favorites, takes on hotshot Oklahoma City with its 93 points a game.

Villanova, the fourth best defensive team in the country allowing only 60.6 points per contest, will attempt to halt Wyoming, No. 14 offensively at 86.4, in Friday's nightcap after Kansas, eighth defensively, tries the same tactic against Temple in the first game.

But the pace speeds again Saturday when Army and Notre Dame tangle and then Bradley and Long Island meet in an afternoon twinbill followed by Duquesne opposing Fordham and Dayton running with West Virginia at night.

The winners advance to the quarter-finals Monday and Tuesday. The semifinals are next Thursday with the final March 23.

Record Gold Buying Shocks World Economy

Senate Ends Gold Cover In Response to Crisis

By JOE HALL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate sent to President Johnson Thursday night the bill removing the 25% gold cover requirement for the nation's currency.

The vote was 39 to 37.

Once the measure is signed into law, the entire U. S. gold stock — now about $11.4 billion — will be freed to meet the nation's pledge to convert dollar holdings to gold at the rate of $35 an ounce.

At present there is only about $1 billion of free gold since the reserve requirements ties up approximately $10.4 billion of the supply.

Under present law, each $1 in federal reserve notes — the only paper money now made — must be backed by 25¢ in gold.

The bill, sought urgently by the administration, completely wipes out this cover requirement which has existed since the Federal Reserve Act was passed 55 years ago.

Administration forces in the Senate had been pleading for three days for quick passage of the bill.

They said it must be rushed to the President to show that Congress backs the determination of the administration to maintain the convertibility of dollars at a gold price of $35 an ounce.

The bill's sponsors insisted that the bill would be an answer to speculation which has been raging in European markets throughout the debate.

Opponents of the measure scoffed at this, insisting that the only result would be to make it possible for the gold drain to continue at a more rapid pace.

They declared that at best the bill only would buy a little time and that it was necessary to take far more fundamental steps to meet the crisis.

In the domestic field, they said, these should include a tax increase and substantial reductions in federal spending.

London Market Closed Today; Economic Summit Meeting Tomorrow

LONDON (AP)—Queen Elizabeth II proclaimed a special bank holiday for Friday after a frenzied day of gold buying in Western Europe plunged the pound sterling to a historic low in London and weakened the dollar in all major money markets but Paris.

The London Stock Market also will be closed for the day.

Informed sources said U.S. authorities asked the British to close their gold market, biggest in the world, to forestall further disorder. The British Treasury said an international meeting will be held in Washington on Saturday to consider the situation.

Gold buying in Western Europe hit a record high Thursday despite the efforts of dealers to check the stampede to get rid of paper money.

The pound slipped to a historic low in London. The dollar weakened everywhere except in Paris.

Bankers, dealers and economists said that only determined, positive action by the U.S. Treasury can stave off a world collapse of confidence in monetary values.

"What we would like now are not reassuring statements but real measures," a Swiss banker said.

The panic buying was greatest in Paris.

Sales in London, by far the biggest bullion market in the world, were estimated at more than 200 tons, Zurich's were estimated at more than 100 tons even through major banks suspended sales two hours early. Small Frankfurt market recorded tremendous sales by its scale although no figures were available.

Similar scenes were repeated in metal markets in silver, platinum, palladium and even copper.

Gold Pool's Problem

According to the best estimates available, the international gold pool has had to supply a minimum of 450 tons of gold so far this week.

How long will it last and how can it be stopped?

In London, Paris and Zurich, dealers took action of their own accord to calm nerves and make buyers stop and think.

In London they raised the price to the highest level since the formation in 1960 of the seven-nation gold pool: $35.26. They also refused to accept small orders for a gold piece or a handful of gold Napoleons. In Paris, dealers raised the price to the prohibitive level of $35.90.

U.S. Criticized

Many in British, Switzerland and elsewhere privately criticized the U.S. Other expressed irritation at what they considered to be U.S. congressional delays in enacting a 10 per cent surtax and determined action to reduce the balance of payments deficit.

Many observers saw the threat of monetary anarchy in continuance of the gold panic.

A catastrophic effect on world trade and industrial expansion was feared as private savings, which normally provide the capital for industry, were shifted into sterile gold.

The effect on the foreign exchange markets was catastrophic for the pound. In London it plunged to its lowest value in recorded history at $2.3875, forcing the Bank of England to step into the market to support it. The rate then rose to $2.39.

The pound slumped on all Continental markets. The dollar was also weak except in Paris where it closed at the year's high of 4.9340 francs.

French Go to Pool

This was taken as an indication the French were drawing on the gold supplies of the international gold pool instead of tapping the supply of the Bank of France. Frenchmen may buy local gold in French francs but have to pay in dollars for pool gold. Hence demands for dollars firmed up the U.S. currency.

Although France withdrew last year from the gold pool, set up to maintain the price at $35 an ounce, anyone can buy from the pool. Remaining in the pool

Law Advisor Lectures Students On Graduate Draft Deferments

By ELLA MOSCARITOLO
Staff Reporter

Pre-Law Advisor Kenneth Suid conducted a meeting last night in the Council Chambers of the Student Union to discuss the Draft and Military Obligation for Law School Students.

The purpose of the meeting was to clarify the problems of the draft, provide information on various means by which military obligation may be deferred until after law school and to disseminate information on deferred admissions to law school. Arthur Gentile, Associated Dean of the Graduate School at the University, was also present to contribute additional information on the subject.

The discussion centered around the current announcement on the change of status by the selective service.

Discussing this information, Mr. Gentile stated that if the draft law continues as it is now, the enrollment at the Graduate School at UMass is expected to drop from 3,200 students to 2,300. He added that the Law Schools will feel the heaviest impact of this present law.

Gentile added that Hershey's request to classify illegal anti-draft demonstrators as IA was brought to court by the National Student Association but it was decided that no legal action can be taken against Hershey's statement.

Mr. Suid continued the discussion and emphasized the significance of the absolute autonomy of the local draft boards, which never before existed. He said that individual contact with the draft boards is essential and pointed out how such contacts could be advantageous to the student.

He suggested that those students interested in applying to law school, go to their local draft boards and get some indication on the age group, and type of people they are presently inducting. Similarily, the student should obtain information on what occupations their particular draft board tends to defer.

After establishing contact with the Board, Suid said to apply for a 2S status to law school. If the student should receive a IA classification, he advised him to appeal it.

Suid continued with a discussion of the Deferred Admissions Program. If a student who intends to apply to law school is drafted, he can still write for admissions and the school may guarantee him a place which will be effective upon completion of the service.

Campus Chest Nets $1000 In Five Days of Activity

With two days remaining in Campus Chest Week, Sophomore Class President Bruce Balboni has announced that approximately $1000 has been received in this year's student fundraising drive. A door to door campus collection held Tuesday evening brought in close to $450 according to Balboni.

Remaining events include a dance in the Student Union tonight, The Bonnie and Clyde Nightclub in the Student Union tomorrow night sponsored by the Freshman Class, a Carnival in the Student Union Sunday afternoon and the Donkey basketball game which will be held in the Cage at 8:00 p.m. Sunday evening. Those playing in the basketball game Sunday evening include members from this year's varsity football and Basketball teams, Dean of students William Field, the four class presidents and former Daily Collegian Editor Chet Weinerman.

Theodore R. McKeldin, former Governor of Maryland and mayor of Baltimore addressed students in a D.V.P. lecture on Urban Government in Mahar Auditorium last night.

News in Brief

National

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an attempt to stem the European gold buying fever, the Federal Reserve Board yesterday clamped a tighter reign on credit by raising the discount rate to 5%.

The board, in announcing its action just after 6 p.m., said the increase is designed "to strengthen the international position of the dollar and to curb inflationary pressures in the domestic economy."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing the rush on gold and increasing costs of the war in Vietnam, Secretary of the Treasury Henry H. Fowler said it is necessary that Congress boost income taxes within 30 days.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sec. of the Treasury Fowler tells senators it is necessary that Congress pass a big income tax increase within 30 days. He cites the international turmoil in the gold markets.

International

HAVANA (AP) — Fidel Castro hinted that in the future he may not allow hijacked airliners to return to the United States.

The Cuban prime minister said in a speech that Cuba has the right to keep such planes since, he claimed, the United States has not returned boats hijacked or stolen in Cuba by refugees fleeing to the United States.

CRISIS . . .

are the United States, British, West Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium and the Netherlands.

The weakness of the pound was seen in part as a reflection of the speculative attacks on the dollar. Another reason was the fear that the British government's budget to be unveiled Tuesday may not provide for strong enough action to set the economy right and permit full advantage to be gained from the Nov. 18 devaluation of the pound from $2.80 to $2.40.

Despite their efforts to cool off the crisis, gold bullion dealers were making their best profits in years. Their normal commission comes to about one cent an ounce, paid by the buyer. But one dealer said: "Commission is academic at this point. You charge what the market will bear."

Banks also charge varying but usually small commissions for executing gold orders for clients.

Due to the low number of passengers carried, the shuttle bus service will be discontinued Saturday mornings, effective immediately. Service on weekdays will continue as scheduled through March 29th.

Housing Office Proposes Room Deposit and License

By DICK DICKINSON
Specials Editor

A proposal for a new room-choosing policy has been sent to the Treasurer by the Housing Office.

The proposal was outlined to the Daily Collegian in an interview last week by Mike West, Assistant Director of Housing, who drafted the plan.

Commenting on why he is releasing the proposal to the whole campus at this early date, West said, "On a campus where people are usually concerned with the administration forcing something on the students, I want every student to have the opportunity to discuss this and voice his opinion on it." He has already discussed the proposal at a meeting of house presidents and with the Student Senate Services Committee.

The major changes in the policy are a proposed license, similar to a lease, and a $50 room-holding deposit.

According to West both these measures will work to the advantage of the students. He explained, "It will list for the first time all the rules and obligations of both the University and the student as they pertain to housing."

Legal Reason

The main reason for using a license instead of a lease or a contract is that any student under 21 years of age can sign it without his parents also signing it. West also said that in this way there could be no law suits against students. There will be a "License Review Committee" set up to act as an arbiter between the students and the University where there is any question or dispute. The committee will be composed of an equal number of students and administrators.

On the matter of the room holding deposit, West again stressed that it would be to the best advantage of the student body. He described the process of holding a room as it is proposed: In April the student will receive his room application card, the license and a pamphlet describing both his obligations and those of the University to him. He will sign the license to hold the room he has chosen and have until July 1st to pay the deposit.

Seniors, students who are 21, and those with special permission, who are moving off campus, will be required to document their intentions with their Area Coordinator prior to the room choosing date.

Deposit Refund

The deposit will be held until the student graduates, leaves the University or moves off campus. At this time it will be returned in full. West said that the deposit should in no way be regarded as a damage deposit; the only time that the student might not get the money back in full is if he were leaving school and had an oustanding bill which he refused to pay. "As we have proposed it, as long as he is a full-time student and returning, we will not touch the deposit," he said.

The deposit will guarantee the student of the room of his choice and will also insure that most students will be returning. If a student fails to show up to claim his room at the beginning of the semester, he will forfeit the $50. Currently it is impossible to tell who is returning until about 24 hours after registration. It is hoped that this will also cut down on the number of triple rooms that have to be assigned, and the subsequent confusion of reassigning those students to normal occupancy rooms.

West pointed out that under the present system between four and seven per cent of the people assigned to the 10,000 spaces on campus fail to show up, and in anticipation the Housing Office sets up approximately 500 triples.

"If by August 15 the student notifies the University that he is not returning, there will be an automatic refund," according to West. After that date the license committee will determine whether there will be a refund. The purpose of the late deadline is "to give students as much time as possible, and also give Housing time to reassign the room."

Policy Exceptions

West went on to explain that "the body of the regulations in the license is drawn from present written policy and what is written in the Student Handbook, with a few exceptions."

He described the exceptions:

1.) It will establish consistent opening and closing times for the residence hall — Students "will be expected to leave" within 24 hours after their last exam, rather than they "must" leave.

2.) It will permit a partial room rent refund for those students who "go on the block" during the semester and are beyond commuting distance.

3.) Students who are involuntarily assigned to a triple and who are not reassigned to a normal occupancy room will receive a 20% refund.

West cited another advantage of the license: "It will tie all the rules and regulations together in one place—the pamphlet. There'll be no run-around."

When asked what would be done with the $500,000 collected as deposits, West explained that the Treasurer will be asked to set up a general fund through the President and the Board of Trustees. The accrued interest on the half million dollars and the forfeited deposits would be used "specifically for the benefit of the student body. This ought to be one way in which the students can clearly see the benefit." Suggestions have been made that it be used for a scholarship fund or area programming among other ideas.

As it stands now, this is just a proposal to the Treasurer who has been asked to send it to the President and the Board of Trustees.

Regarding the choice of co-captains, Coach Bill MacConnell said, "I think the team made a good choice. I expect next year's team to repeat the conference victory."

Bleeding Ben Tre Fights for Life

Ben Tre bleeds in the hot tropic sun, its wounds still bare.

A U.S. officer said Ben Tre had to be destroyed to be saved from a horde of Viet Cong. It took 45 hours of fighting to destroy 45 per cent of Ben Tre, a city of 34,000.

Now, 45 days later, the government has not provided one brick to rebuild the Mekong Delta community.

Ben Tre is a microcosm of Vietnam now, of the inertia that still lies over most of the country in the wake of the Tet offensive," a senior U.S. civilian observed in Saigon.

In Ben Tre, an American civilian official commented: "In six weeks here we have seen that the government cannot protect the people, or control them, or administer them or help them recover.

The bleak picture is brightened by one factor, a pioneer do-it-yourself attitude.

An American official said, "The local people are way ahead of the local government in getting things moving here. The people are our brightest hope." Another official echoed, "The people are our only hope."

The inertia of the Ben Tre administration stems from fear, indifference and incompetence, factors that have adversely affected the recovery of most of Vietnam from the Tet offensive.

The problems are many. Ben Tre is clogged with refugees. U.S. officials estimate that about 2,500 of the town's 8,000 families are homeless and living in bad conditions.

Viet Cong still abound in the area. U.S. officials fear another attack, and the province chief each night draws a ring of armored cars around his headquarters.

Military patrols outside the city itself are just resuming. The U.S. advisers continue thickening their bunkers against renewed attacks.

Should the Viet Cong enter Ben Tre again, the same tactics would be used. The one advantage for the population would be that they now have bunkers.

Wisconsin Democrats Want Kennedy

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (AP) — Wisconsin's Young Democrats invited Robert F. Kennedy Thursday to join personally in a Wisconsin primary campaign which already holds an assortment of potential pitfalls for President Johnson.

Kennedy himself is out of the running in the state, but his appearance could rally still more anti-administration votes in the April 2 balloting.

Kennedy was not named on the Wisconsin ballot and supporters say there will be no write-in campaign made here on his behalf. Such an effort, a Kennedy ally said, would only take votes from McCarthy and help Johnson.

Chairman Appointed for Metawampee Committee

Richard Wood, President of the senior class announced the appointment of Mike Garjian as chairman of the 1968 Metawampee Committee.

The committee is responsible for the selection of that instructor who, in the eyes of the students, has distinguished himself or herself as "most devoted" of all faculty to the educational process.

The selection will be based on student nominations.

Last year's recipient was Dr. Joseph Delagrotti. At the time of his selection he was completing his last semester at the University due to an administratively terminated contract. His selection caused administrative discontent which developed into a student-administration controversy as to whether a faculty member would sit on Metawampee Committees of the future.

When questioned about his position on this, Garjian stated, "I don't think the administration will attempt to seat a faculty member or administrator on the Committee."

"However," he added, "if I am wrong, my position is this: The Metawampee Award goes to the distinguished instructor of the year, as named by the student body. I will not have the selection of that instructor lowered to the level of a compromise between the students and other non-involved persons. I assume that any student who chooses to enter a nomination will be in full realization of that instructors background. Our final decision will be a reflection of student opinion."

The Pollsters

The bone of contention for many critics and disbelievers in the polls is the smallness of the "sample". Out of a possible 70 million persons of voting age, the polls interview only 1500 persons spread across 300 geographic areas picked randomly from thousands of political situations across the country. How can any type of conclusion drawn from such a group accurately determine voting trends?

Gallup, pointing proudly to his record of only 2.7% average error in the last 16 presidential and congressional elections, says that the answer lies in the law of probability. A point will be reached in any random sampling at which variations in the percentage of persons who take one position or another levels off. Increasing the size of the sample does not change the ratio significantly. Therefore most polisters take a "hit" of about 1500-1600 persons for their polls. This number is also chosen for economic reasons: polling is an expensive game requiring well-paid, trained interviewers and statisticians and expensively-run computers. The important thing, says Gallup, is not the size of the sample but whether the sample is representative and really random.

Both Gallup and Harris interviewers take great pains to select an accurate cross-section of the American voting population. It is of primary importance that those interviewed be likely voters and not "stay-at-homes". To this end, Gallup employs a screening process to measure the level of political interest. Harris requires that the subjects have voted in the last election. The "undecided" voter's probable vote is decided by the use of questions that determine party allegiance or particular leanings. Often, a secret ballot is even used and the subject is identified only by a sample-area code.

An important aspect of the polling process is the determination of the "intensity of interest". Gallup has used a Scalometer which measures on a ten-point scale the intensity with which the opinion is held. Such a measure of the intensity is invaluable in private polls to determine a candidate's strengths and weaknesses.

The accuracy of the poll also depends on the interviewers and their questions. The questions are carefully written and are pretested for clarity and directness. Care is taken so as not to have "loaded" questions. The interviewers are mostly middle-aged women with a considerable amount of formal education and the ability to capture the confidence of the subject. Gallup and Harris maintain about 750 of these pollsters who are required to ask questions exactly as prepared and forward the answers without judgment.

Just Calling Wolf

According to Lieut. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service Director, if 200,000 more troops are needed in Vietnam that, unless the Reserves are called up, it would probably mean that some college students would be drafted. At present, undergraduates, who are doing satisfactory work, are deferred.

Last month, President Johnson ordered a serious change in student status by ending deferments for some graduate students. College Administrators claim that this decision will cut next year's college graduate program by 40% and that next year's draftees will be made up primarily of college graduates.

General Hershey believes that the College Administrators are calling "wolf" and that the graduate schools will somehow miraculously be able to survive despite the loss of 40% of the students.

Perhaps, the schools can survive for a while but, with the possible callup of undergraduates, what is the nation to do about the intellectual drain — run itself with the aid of History 100 and English 112?

The Letters from Prison

Cher Bettnoir

I will be executed at seven o'clock on the morning of 5 May. I didn't write to you before because I wasn't sure what they were going to do with me (although I must say I expected this to be my end), and I wanted to find out for certain before I took up your time with needless speculation. They woke me early this morning (They thought they woke me! I was awake all the time! How silly they are!), and a guard dragged me out of my cell into a briefing room where they read some kind of order: "By order of the high court, you, Gabriel M., for the murder of one T. L., are sentenced to death. Your execution must be carried out in less than two months." It went something like that. I wasn't paying much attention, as I was watching the smoke from the cigarette they gave me curl up against the gray walls before it escaped out the open window. They told me I would be free to write as many letters as I liked, and that, in good faith, they would mail them for me. Then, the guard took me back to my cell. Something strange happened. As he was locking the door, I thought I glimpsed a drop of sadness in his eyes before he turned away. I had to laugh.

Before, they made me work in one of the machine shops (usually, it was the print shop, as I had training) or out on one of the rock gangs. But now, as a favor to one who has incurred the death penalty, they will let me stay in my cell, I guess to let me think over my life, to do mostly what I want. And I wanted to write to you first, to let you know that what we (you too?) suspected for so long a time has finally become a reality.

Not with a Bang, but a Whimper

To the editor:

I support the U.S. war effort in Vietnam and will not be satisfied with anything less than military or negotiated victory there. Despite Johnsonian euphuisms about waging a war to defend a small, helpless country, and despite Vietnik rantings about our purpose being genocide, I recognize the war in Vietnam for what it is: a war to halt the spread of Communism. And I believe that it is in the interest of the U.S. to halt the spread of Communism anywhere in the world. Were the Viet Cong fighting for monarchy, dictatorship, or any totalitarian regime other than Communism, I would protest any involvement of the U.S. in that country. But the Viet Cong are Communists, and I fear the spread of that philosophy. I sense no danger from some foreign country's adoption of Communistic economics, or even some foreign country's installation of a totalitarian regime. What I fear is the fact that Communists from Marx to Mao have believed in the forcible spread of their doctrine.

If South Vietnam were to fall into Communist hands, I would expect Communist guerillas to begin stepped-up operations in Cambodia and Laos, supplied and armed from Vietnam, given sanctuary in Vietnam, and even bolstered by Vietnamese troops if their losses are heavy. If a precedent is needed for this argument, let us remember that only four months ago, Che Guevera, a Cuban, was killed leading Bolivian insurgents who were being supplied by Cuba with Russian rifles.

Even today, North Vietnamese troops are in Laos supporting Soviet and Chinese armed Pathet Lao. Any Dove who is consistent in his beliefs will protest any American involvement in those countries if and when what I have described takes place. A consistent dove will protest any American effort to disrupt guerilla "wars of national liberation" in any Asian, African, or Latin American nation. He will stand and watch the underdeveloped world be overrun by Communists. He will smile as the economies of the developed nations fall to pieces in the wake of the takeover of the underdeveloped world. He will stand idle as the developed nations fall, one by one, into the Communist camp. He will see the fullfillment of his philosophy as he is led away to the collective farm.

This is the way the world ends,
Not with a bang, but a whimper.

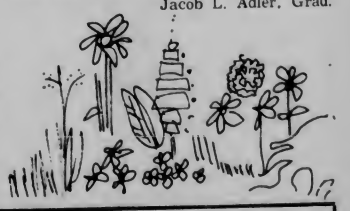
Must Negotiate with the NFL



To the editor:

President Johnson's statement that North Vietnam was no more ready to negotiate than it was one, two, or three years ago is similar to an earlier statement, "I must say that candor compels me to tell you that there has not been the slightest indication that the other side is interested in negotiation . . ." This is the position that the president has maintained in spite of all evidence to the contrary.

If we are to negotiate, we must negotiate with whom we are fighting, the National Liberation Front. This the president as studiously avoided, and thereby forstalled any possibility of negotiation.

North Vietnam is in a difficult position. As long as the National Liberation Front continues to fight, North Vietnam must supply men and material. To do otherwise would be a sellout and betrayal, but would not prevent the National Liberation Front from continuing the war. When the president says that North Vietnam is not ready to negotiate, he means that North Vietnam would rather endure American bombs than discontinue support of their men and allies in South Vietnam.

Special Dormitory Will Open; Responsibility To Be Stressed

A special residence hall will be opened in the Southwest area next semester for male students interested in living in a dormitory which stresses responsibility in maintaining the house.

The residents of this Special House will be expected to respect the rights of others living in the house by a strict observance of quiet hours, house rules and University regulations.

Quiet hours in the dorm will be observed from 7 a.m. to 10 a.m. seven days a week, rather than the usual five days. Quiet will be defined accordingly as the condition where all sounds are contained within the room.

The house rules will entail keeping the house neat and clean at all times. Residents will not clutter the lounges with papers or rearrange the furniture without replacing it before leaving. Residents will respect the property of the other members of the house.

In addition to observing the house rules, University property will be respected. Vending machines will not be defaced or vandalized in any way.

Responsibility will also include personal behavior. A responsible student is expected to behave like a gentleman. Profanity in public will not be tolerated.

SELF GOVERNMENT

The house will be established as an RSO member in accordance with the University policy. The house will have a form of self-government and function in the same manner as all other houses in Southwest.

The most important responsibility of the student is the enforcement of the policy mentioned.

A resident must be willing to stop acts of vandalism which he witnesses or, if that is impossible, to report them as soon as possible. He will agree to lodge a complaint against another resident who does not comply with the house rules. This type of cooperation will be the basis to preserve the house standards. In this way, it is hoped that counselors will be able to act as advisors and not policemen.

The University will recognize the house as a special house and arrangements will be made for the removal of students who find it impossible to live in the house. A student will appear before house judiciary, and if removal is warranted it will be effected.

The Ad Hoc committee established for the purpose of setting up the special house stated that those men who now feel frustrated living in their present dorms because of a few irresponsible men will have a chance to live and work under better conditions through cooperation.

Those men who feel that they will be able to live under the stated conditions are asked to leave their name with Mrs. Rugg in MacKimmie House in Southwest Tues. or Wed. next week.

NO MORE KP

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon has decreed an end to KP for most servicemen.

The "emancipation proclamation" is a new Defense Department directive requiring the armed services to use civilians to prepare and serve food for the troops "unless there are military essentiality requirements which dictate the use of military personnel."

The objective is to free more servicemen for military tasks and to upgrade the quality of the food service.

Senate ABC Report Made At Wednesday Nite Meeting

The implementation report of the Alcoholic Beverages Committee of the Student Senate was presented for the first time at the Wednesday night meeting. In addition to the written document, Committee Chairman Chris McGahan gave an oral report and answered questions from the members.

After spending some time considering the recommendations to make the campus wet, the Senate tabled the report for a week's study. The Alcoholic Beverages Committee favors a "21" room in the Student Union and the legalization of drinking for those 21 and over except in the public parts of the campus.

Late in the morning, Budgets Committee Chairman Brad Johnson presented a motion under special business to freeze the Student Activities Tax funds of the Ski Club. The Senate passed the motion after hearing that the Ski Club has by its own efforts earned more money than the Senate appropriated. The Student Activities Tax subsidy of the organizations, according to Johnson, has not yet been spent. He called for immediate action by the Senate to prevent the spending of the Senate-approved funds.

Two legal arguments were presented for the action: the Ski Club failed to report its outside income as required by the Financial Policy Booklet and failed to get the approval of the Senate Finance Committee for spending earnings in excess of $25.

A full investigation of the Ski Club by the Ways and Means Committee, also now investigating the Forensic Society, is expected shortly.

DVP Presents Adam Clayton Powell

By MICHAEL BRADLEY
Staff Reporter

Adam Clayton Powell Jr. will speak in Curry Hicks Cage at 8:00 P.M. on Wednesday, April 3. Powell, the controversial member of the U. S. House of Representatives, will speak as part of the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program.

Powell is a 59-year-old native of New Haven, Conn. He graduated from Colgate University in 1930, and has also attained degrees at three other universities, including an M.A. at Columbia.

His political career has been long and diverse. He began as a member of the New York City Council in 1941, elected from the Independent party. Three years later he was chosen to the U.S. House of Representatives on all tickets. He has served in the House as a Democrat ever since, ranking fifteenth in seniority among his fellow Representatives.

In 1961 he was appointed Chairman of the House Council on Education and Labor. He maintained this post for six years, during which time 60 major pieces of legislation were enacted on a wide range of material, including minimum wages, racial discrimination, employment, delinquency, poverty, and elementary education.

Adam Cayton Powell

In the 1964 election he was re-elected by an 84 per cent majority, eighth highest majority in Congressional history. This term brings his incumbency in the House to a chain of 23 consecutive years.

Outstanding Man of the Year

Powell was United States delegate to the International Labor conference in Geneva, Switzerland in 1961, 1963, 1964, and 1965. He also attended the Afro-Asian Conference at Bandung, Indonesia, in 1955. He was the only member of a Western country's legislative body to do so.

Since 1930 he has been pastor at the Abyssinian Baptist Church in New York City. He was named "Pastor of the Year" by the New England Baptist Missionary Convention in 1961.

Other honors include "Outstanding Man of the Year" award by the Veterans of Foreign Wars annual conference of 1956, for his "fight against communism." He was decorated in 1954 by Haile Selassie, Knight Commander of the Golden Cross of Ethiopia.

Powell is founder and Director of the Adam Clayton Powell Community Center. Located in Harlem, New York, the center serves residents of the area regardless of race or faith. He is also founder of the Adam Clayton Powell Foundation, involved in such projects as financing housing for the elderly in several cities. He is also a life member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Senate Elections To Be Held Thursday

The Student Senate will be holding a special election next Thursday to fill vacancies in the Patterson House, Fraternities, and Class of 1968 at large seats.

Since only two nomination papers had been returned as of yesterday, Chairman Hartwell of the Student Government Affairs (SGA) Committee extended the deadline for returning nomination papers until Monday, Mar. 18. A member of the Class of 1968 urged that the extension be made in view of the very little publicity given to the elections which concern the representation of 2500 seniors.

Any student in the respective constituencies is eligible to submit nomination papers with 25 signatures to be placed on the ballot. The nomination papers are available from the RSO office.

Petrocelli Stars as Bosox Rout Chicago, 7-1

Rico Petrocelli — A two-run double

SARASOTA, Fla (AP) — Rico Petrocelli slugged a two-run double and southpaw Dick Ellsworth worked five strong innings yesterday to pace the Boston Red Sox to a 7-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox. The triumph was the second of the spring for the Red Sox and broke their losing streak at three games.

Ellsworth, acquired in a winter deal, was nicked only for one unearned run as he became the first Red Sox pitcher to go five. Chicago scored in the third with the help of an error by Mike Andrews and a single by Sandy Alomar.

Petrocelli's double, a shot that hit the right field fence, climaxed a six-run sixth inning rally and came off Bob Shaw. Shaw had entered the game in relief of Fred Klages, a rookie right hander who had control trouble and was unable to retire any of the five men he faced in that inning.

The Boston Rally also included singles by Carl Yastrzemski and Tony Conigliaro and walks to Norm Siebern and Joe Foy. The rally was aided by two errors by Dick Littleton, Chicago rookie second baseman.

Bruins Eye NHL Playoff Berth

NEW YORK (AP)—The Boston Bruins haven't been looking more than one game ahead all season and the next one on the agenda could be their biggest in nine frustrating years.

If the Bruins beat the Maple Leafs in Toronto tomorrow night they virtually will clinch their first National Hockey League playoff berth since 1959.

They climbed into a tie with New York for second place in the East Division by edging the Rangers 2-1 Wednesday night. It was their sixth victory in seven games and they've done it without super defenseman Bobby Orr, who won't be 20 until next Wednesday.

"The defensemen have just been great since Orr injured a knee several weeks ago," said Coach Harry Sindon. "They shook off his injury like real pros. I'm not saying we don't miss Orr. We'd be much better with him, but we haven't dropped out of the race without him. Doak has done a tremendous job filling in.

"This is different from when Orr was injured for a shorter period earlier in the season. We knew he'd be back shortly then and we played as if we were sort of waiting for him."

Orr, who underwent knee surgery, is skating again and may get back in action a week from Sunday. "Perhaps," Sinden said, mentally crossing his fingers. "Perhaps."

Meanwhile, with seven games left the Bruins are not conceding a thing, even though first-place Montreal has a six-point lead and nine games to play. The Rangers have eight games left.

"We couldn't get to first so we got to second," Sinden said. "Now that we're second maybe we can get to first."

The Fifth Column

Heavy Schedules Plague the NBA

In all of major league sports, it is generally agreed that the NBA is still the most backward. Although it has progressed far beyond the dance hall days of its birth, it still has quite a ways to go.

Steve Ross

The biggest problem is the scheduling. In the past week the Celtics were scheduled to play eight games in nine nights. They went from New York to Boston to Chicago to Philadelphia, enjoyed a day off, and then went from Boston to Seattle to San Francisco to finish in San Diego.

Scheduling like this cheats the fans as well as the performers. It is impossible for a team to give the fans a top notch performance if they are merely cooling their heels between steps. The solution is a simple one that will give everyone a better game.

Next season, with the addition of Phoenix and Milwaukee, there will be two seven team divisions. Instead of adding to the current 82 game schedule the league should cut back to a 76 game slate. This could easily be achieved by having each team meet its intradivisional rivals eight times and playing the other division half as much.

Another innovation each team could try would be to play continuously on the same night. Bostonians know that Thursday and Sunday are "Bruin" nights, and regardless to the elements pack the Garden. On the other hand, the Celtics don't have a regular time and as a result can have their crowds drastically slashed by a storm.

The playoff system should be restated to the formula that was used up until last year. In that system the second and third place teams squared off in a best of five series while the divisional winners rested. Each semi-winner would meet the divisional winner in a best of seven series, and those two winners would meet for the championship.

As it now stands teams like Detroit, Baltimore, Cincinnati and even Chicago could possibly take the cake. This is a farce. Both Philadelphia and St. Louis must go through a semi-final round even though they proved their superiority over 82 games. This could hardly be rewarding excellence.

It must be noted that there is a competing league. Even though the ABA could hardly be considered a major league by its caliber of play, it must be remembered that the AFL has managed to bloom with a brand of somewhat inferior football.

If the NBA continues to dilute their product with expanded teams and an expanded schedule there is a distinct possibility that the fans will stay away. If this happens the losers will be the connoisseurs of good basketball and the owners.

Maybe the owners deserve to be losers, but what about the guy who loves great basketball?

Indoor Trackmen Break Records During Season

Future Team Prospects Look Good

By JOEL FOX
Sports Staff Reporter

Both freshman and varsity records fell during the 1968 track season. The tracksters complied a respectable invitational meet record and a 12 dual meet mark. But with only three seasons of competition and a group of outstanding freshmen, the indoor track season looks promising.

The season made up of three dual meets all in one week of Feb. and a host of invitational meets began Jan. 13 with the Knights of Columbus meet in Boston. UMass had able performers in the competition as the Redmen varsity took a first in the mile relay and a second in the two mile relay.

The frosh mile relay team was also victorious in their heat. The outstanding performer in the opener for the Redmen was frosh sprinter Walter Mayo who took fourth in the 50 yard dash. The K of C was followed by the BAA in Boston at which the trackmen again ran well. The first dual meet competition that the team faced was the intra-squad battle between the White and Maroon.

Both school and meet records were toppled in the intra-squad meet. Several freshman runners erased old frosh marks as Carl Carpenter set the high jump record at 6'4", Buzz Hiller added two inches to the pole vault record with a vault of 12'3", Ron Wayne toppled the frosh mile record in 4:23 and Gerry Spellman tied the hurdles record at 5.9 seconds.

Wayne broke his own record with a 4:21 mile at the U.S. track and field meet in New York. Also at New York, the varsity one mile relay set the school mark of 3:2.7 as they won the heat and placed ninth in a field of 47 teams. The foursome that set the record were junior Bob Hasselbaum (50.8 seconds), senior John Anderson (50.4), junior Diego Gonzalez (51.1) and sophomore Dave Evans (50.4).

The official dual meet season opened against Northeastern. The strong Huskies were too much for the Redmen as they built up a large lead in the field events and held off the UMass runners for an 80-24 win. However, four days later the team rebounded against Connecticut at Storrs.

Strong performances by both the field events men and dual runners led to a decisive win over UConn. The frosh also won at UConn after losing to North eastern. Ron Wayne starred for the frosh by running in three events, 1000, mile and two mile as he won the mile and took seconds in the other two for 11 points.

Three days after the UConn meet, the dual meet season ended at Durham, N.H., against UNH. The runners belted the UNH tracksters, 37-11, but they could not catch the advantage that the New Hampshire field men had built up. However, the Little Redmen swept the three middle distance events on the way to a 71-33 win.

The week after the short dual season ended, UMass travelled to Maine to defend the Yankee Conference title. A few bad breaks and the absence of top stars Charlie Lang and Bill Tindall turned the tables on the favored Redmen, and URI took the top spot with 49.5 points. Maine placed second on their home track with 41 points and UMass was third with 40 points.

Finishing off the 1968 indoor season was the IC4A meet in New York. Sophomore hurdler Marc Levefer starred for the Redmen at the new Madison Square Garden as he ran 7.7 seconds to set a new school hurdling mark.

In his first season track Coach Ken O'Brien, who replaced retired Head Coach Bill Footrick, did a great job. And greater things are yet to come. The team is losing only three seniors at the end of the year, but a crop of flashy freshman are coming up to replace them.

Co-captains Steve Burrell and Greg Bowman will be leaving as will John Anderson who was ranked tenth nationally in the 500 last year. All three men are strong point scorers and all have won Yankee Conference titles. Burrell won in the 100, Bowman in the half mile and Anderson in the 600.

The future is bright though for UMass track men as the returning tracksters could have a great winter season in an expanded dual meet season next year.

Sprinters Dave Marble and Steve Chase will be joined by frosh sprinting stars Mayo and Ed Heywood and Joe Burrell. Hurdlers Levefer and Spellman look unbeatable next year. Middle distance performers Evans, Gonzalez, Wayne, Yale Stevens, Hasselbaum and Clarence Gaynor will pile up many points next year and form some tough relay teams. All these men are backed by solid depth.

The longer distances will be occupied by top performers Charlie Lang, Paul Hoss, Leo Duart, Marc Gelinas and Tom Derderian. New strength will be added in the field events with freshman high jumper John Arienson and Paul Nyman who placed 1-2 in the conference meet this year. Also for the first time in awhile UMass will have strong pole vaulters in Buzz Hiller and Mike Pancione.

Next winters season is indeed bright and Coach O'Brien may well have the greatest indoor track team in UMass history, a team that has plans of winning back the Yankee Conference title.

Plans Made to Form Rugby Team

The newest sport to come to the UMass campus is rugby. Rugby is what the English play instead of football, but for roughness, the two sports are comparable. An organizational meeting will be held in the Council Chambers of the Student Union next Thurs. at 8:30 p.m.

The team will be coached by Dale Toohey, a graduate student in the physical education department, assisted by Tony Moss-Davies, a grad student in education and Jeff Freedman, a microbiology grad student.

The team is being organized by Freedman who helped to start the first rugby team at Tufts University and played on it for four years. According to him, a schedule of tentative games has been set to include Tufts and Amherst.

The first meeting will feature instructional slides of the game and films of the French rugby team on a tour through Australia.

According to Freedman, plans call for practice to begin after spring vacation. Practice will be held twice during the week with intra-squad scrimmage games on the weekend until the schedule is set. Play will take place on the Intramural Football Field.

In a statement issued to the Student Senate, membership will be open to graduate students, undergraduates, faculty and friends of the University. The team will abide by the rules of the Eastern Rugby Union of America. The team will maintain the status of a club and not fall under the jurisdiction of the Athletic Department or the NCAA.

McHugh, Kamila Named Ski Co-Captains

DAVE KAMILA

Dave Kamila and Dick McHugh were elected co-captains of the 1968-1969 ski team at an awards dinner held at the Town and Country Inn, Gorham, N.H. The ski team reigns as this year's New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference champions.

Kamila is a junior civil engineer major from Westminster who began skiing at Mt. Watchusett. This year Kamila, who has been on the team for two years, skied as the number three man on the team and finished seventh individually in the NEISC.

McHugh, also a junior, has been on the team for three years. He saw only limited action his first two years due to injuries. He broke his ankle twice and shattered it while practicing downhill his freshmen year which necessitated two operations. The Hotel restaurant major from Leominister is also a navy veteran. While in the navy, he skied in Japan and

Kennedy Candidacy Reflects Many Opinions

By JAN CURLEY
News Day Editor

An informal opinion poll was conducted by telephone yesterday by the Daily Collegian for comment on Senator Robert F. Kennedy's announced candidacy for the Presidential nomination. The poll was conducted among both faculty members and student leaders. Comment ranged from those who were pro-Kennedy to those who feel he is an "opportunist". Some also expressed favoritism for both candidates on a combined ticket.

Barton Kaplan, editor of Ye Mother of Voices, stated he would "never vote for Kennedy". Kaplan cited two main reasons for his opinion. First was Kennedy's involvement in the 1950 (Joseph) McCarthy hearings on Communism. He felt secondly that Kennedy's candidacy was "directed at McCarthy's fine campaigning in the New Hampshire primary." He went on to say that "Any young person with any political acumen would not or should not vote for such a man (Kennedy)."

Nathaniel Ackerman, president of the Young Democrats on campus stated, "I'm all for Kennedy." Ackerman, who is also vice chairman of the College Young Democrats in Massachusetts said that although this organization had endorsed McCarthy, a meeting is scheduled for the end of the month to perhaps decide on a new policy in view of Kennedy's candidacy.

Neil Whitman, former chairman of the Student Union Governing Board, said, "I'm in favor of Kennedy for his vitality and hope for the country."

Student Senate

Opinion between the President and Vice-President of the Student Senate was divided. President James Collins stated, "I'm opposed to it. It's political opportunism. I support McCarthy." He went on to say that he supported McCarthy because he "did the fighting and found the vote."

Collegian Editors

Fran Boronski, vice-president, stated that she had, "apprehensions. The idea of egoism is played up too much (referring to Kennedy). After watching Kennedy on "Meet the Press," she said, "He has so much more to offer in terms of domestic programs, whereas McCarthy has confined himself to the war.

The Daily Collegian editors, speaking for themselves, were split with one pro-Kennedy, one pro-McCarthy and one anti-Kennedy. The fourth member was pro-Kennedy and McCarthy with some reservation.

John H. Dean, editor-in-chief, said, "Kennedy entered too late. A good ticket would be McCarthy-Kennedy. I don't like the idea of him (Kennedy) trying to sneak in. He watched but did not stick his neck out." Dan Epstein managing editor, stated, "I'm all for McCarthy.

If McCarthy had not done so well in the New Hampshire primary, Kennedy would not be running now. McCarthy brought to the surface all the feelings against Johnson."

Ron LaBrecque, news editor, is for Kennedy. He went on to say, I'm upset people are calling Kennedy an opportunist. I believe he made the right move because he feels that he is the best man, he is within all ethical bounds."

Editorial chairman Bob Brill, in an opposing opinion to LaBrecque's, stated, "This was to be expected. I can agree with Governor Ronald Reagan's comment that Kennedy is an opportunist." He went on to say, "If Kennedy were really sincere and idealistic, he would have put his neck on the political block like McCarthy did in the New Hamp-

Tenants Continue Rent Strike At University Park Apartments

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

Residents of the University Park Apartments of Amherst are into their third straight week of a "rent strike" begun Friday, March 1st.

Led by student residents Paul McCarthy (University of Massachusetts)—and Dennis Helfand (Amherst College), the strike's purpose is to protest what Helfand has called the "complete mess" of living conditions of the apartments (Collegian, Mar. 1).

The apartments are owned by Mr. Joseph Rousseau of Holyoke.

According to McCarthy the strike "is still going on" with a "good amount of residents in it." He stated that of 64 apartments, 40 were still striking.

The UMass student said that an informal meeting of striking residents and their attorneys, Steven Silverman of Springfield and David Burres, assistant, of Amherst, was held last Thursday night at Amherst College.

McCarthy stated that none of management was present at the meeting.

A number of dates for possible meetings of both sides were presented at that time and McCarthy added that Rousseau also revealed through attorneys his intention to "negotiate with us." He also added that presently the tenants and their attorneys are "dealing directly with Mr. Rousseau and his lawyer." Rousseau is being represented by counselor Burton Resnic.

"All we wanted in the very beginning was to negotiate," continued McCarthy, and also that "we are not out to antagonize Mr. Rousseau at all."

He told the Collegian that the desire of his group is only to settle this whole thing as reasonably and as quickly as possible.

Owner Rousseau declared that there is "no excuse for it (the strike) to go this far."

"We are getting fed up with the whole situation. We more than did our part," continued the Holyoke businessman.

He also said however, that there are definitely "some real problems" and that he hopes "everything will turn out for the best."

"We haven't been successful so far, but we're working on it," concluded Mr. Rosseau.

Real estate manager Mrs. Margaret Wehr told the Collegian that she "doesn't know what's going to happen yet."

Asked whether any improvements had been initiated since the strike's beginning, McCarthy stated that there have been "some forms of maintainence," but that management "hasn't touched our main grievances yet." Because of this the strike is continuing according to McCarthy.

Rosseau has said that more improvements have not been made because some tenants have refused to allow workmen on the premises.

McCarthy concluded that he and the tenants' attorneys believe they have a good "case" and are in "good condition." "We feel confident," he added.

RFK To Withdraw— If LBJ Seeks Peace

NEW YORK (AP)—Sen. Robert F. Kennedy said yesterday that he told the Secretary of Defense Thursday that if President Johnson "signalled a clear-cut willingness to seek a wider path to peace in Vietnam, then my declaration of candidacy would no longer be necessary."

Kennedy said the conversation, which occurred two days before his announcement for the Democratic presidential nomination, centered on a proposed blue-ribbon commission on Vietnam.

Kennedy charged that the White House broke a confidence by making the conversation known.

Wood to Speak Tonight

At 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom Robert C. Wood will speak on "Intergovernmental Relations: The Federal View" The Distiguished Visitors Program is presenting Mr. Wood to the university as part of the symposium, "The American City: 1968 And Tomorrow."

Mr. Wood has been Undersecretary in the Department of Housing and Urban Development since January 1966. Prior to his appointment, he was a professor of Political science and head of the political science department at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and a member of the Faculty Policy Committee of the M.I.T.-Harvard Joint Center for Urban Studies.

In 1964 and 1965, Mr. Wood served as chairman of President Johnson's task forces on urban problems whose recommendations formed the basis of much recent legislation in the field of urban affairs. Mr. Wood also served, in 1961, on the pre-inaugural Task Force on Housing established by President Kennedy. He has been a consultant to several federal agencies on urban affairs and mass transportation.

Student Leaders Outscore Faculty-Administration, 4-2

By ALISSA GREENBERG & MARK SILVERMAN
Staff Reporters

Student Power was provided with its most graphic illustration in last night's Donkey Basketball game, as the Student Leaders outclassed the Faculty-Administration Establishment by a whopping score of 4-2.

Bruce Balboni opened the scoring in the first period with a spinning under-hand scoop lay-up. He immediately fell off his donkey and spent the rest of the game trying to get back on.

The rest of the first period saw no more scoring, but a vicious war broke out between Freshman Class President Joe Tabacco and his donkey, Honey Pot. Dr. Mark Noffsinger spent the quarter getting in everyone's way, including his own donkey, the petite Elvis.

The roaring crowd went wild as Collegian Editor-in-Chief, Jack "The Shot" Dean replaced Balboni who was still without his mount. Dean, the student's hatchet man, immediately picked a fight with Volatile Vic Fusia. Dean commented, "It was an unprovoked fight!" Fusia had no comment.

The second period saw the scoring run wild. Collegian Editor-Emeritus, Chet "The Jet" Weinerman, also known as Chesty, led a wild fast break and with a beautiful pass fed to cool Jim Collins for the eventual game winner. The Administration edged closer, as Vic Fusia battled his way through a pile of donkeys to score his team's lone points.

Fire Damages Chenoworth Lab

A basement food technology laboratory was heavily damaged by smoke and heat in a fire in Chenoworth Laboratory. The alarm was rounded at 11:08 p.m. Saturday night.

The damage, which was confined to Room 114, was caused by an explosion in a refrigerator according to Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty. Damage was estimated at $17,000.

Tanks of helium were stored in the room which was used by graduate students for experiments in food preservation. Hydrogen and nitrogen tanks were also stored in the room next to 114.

Firefighters were hampered in their efforts by bursting hot water pipes in the ceiling. The maintenance department was summoned to turn off the water.

Two engines, a ladder and a salvage company from the Amherst fire Department were at the scene.

Modern Dance Concert Surpasses Last Year

By ROBERT GOSCIMINSKI
Photography Editor

Modern dance is by nature an experimental medium and not in any way to be confused with the classic style of dancing. Like all experiments, the result is not always predictable. The dancers were, to my understanding, fulfilling the aims of a phys-ed class and not professional by any means. The dance troupe even included male members, which was not done in the past.

The lighting was superbly done, of course, and quite effective. The costuming was imaginative for most numbers, especially "Shatterproof."

Some of the dances, such as the Adam and Eve number, were trite and predictable. Others were close to the classic form of ballet with only a minor hint of contemporary style, such as the final number, "Love is Blue."

The most striking chorcography was in "Theme and Variation," a solo performance by Janet Craft combining classical music and a rapid smooth modern style of dance.

"Plehem," which is 'Help Me' spelled backwards, was done to electronic music which sounded like a slipping transmission. The sounds were fantastic, and with the trends in modern music, could well be the next big fad. The dancers' performance was good in execution but the total effect was one of amused wonder on the part of the audience at two radio controlled people moving mechanically around the stage. The result seemed to be the final step in computerized dating.

All in all, the concert was so far above last year's groaning display of calisthenics that they will have trouble living up to this performance in the future.

shire primary instead of waiting until he saw support."

Not as Sam Spark

Chet Weinerman and Stan Levco, speaking for themselves and not as Sam Spark were divided in their opinion. Weinerman stated, "I think realistically that Kennedy has a better chance of defeating Johnson than McCarthy has yet Kennedy is the pragmatist's pragmatist." He went on to say that Kennedy was not "a principled man because he did not want to enter the New Hampshire primary whereas McCarthy had the courage to do so with virtually no support. He said, "If the public has any kind of conscience at all they will stay with McCarthy, but I don't think the public will." He said he thought that the delegate votes would probably be turned over to Kennedy. He then said, "I will go on record that Johnson will not get the nomination and that it will be Rockefeller versus Kennedy."

Levco began by saying that "For the ultimate good of the anti-war movement, he's ruining McCarthy's chances. If McCarthy does not get the nomination, Kennedy will." In opposition to Weinerman's projected slate, Levco said, "I don't think Rockefeller can win. It does help the Republicans and makes them more powerful."

Faculty

In answer to the question, Dr. Dean Albertson of the History Department said, "I wish he (Kennedy) hadn't run; I'm for McCarthy." Mrs. Joyce Berkman, assistant professor of history stated, "I'm looking forward to wearing a Bobby-Gene button." Assistant professor of government, Sheldon Goldman, stated that Kennedy's candidacy justifies the faith in the two party system."

McKeldin Challenges Students To 'Face the Facts' in DVP

By SUSAN HAMILTON
Staff Reporter

"Face the facts," Theodore McKeldin said, in his political philosophy. "When the facts are not the same, attitudes must change," he said.

Theodore R. McKeldin, former Governor of Maryland and mayor of Baltimore, addressed students in a D.V.P. lecture on Urban Government in Mahar Auditorium Thursday night.

Radical changes in the organization of urban areas, McKeldin said, have caused the emergence of a new federalism. "We must be ready," he said," to face the facts, and give up our fear of encroachments by the federal government."

Using Baltimore as an example, McKelding cited several recent economic changes in large cities of the United States. The affluent and solvent citizens have found the city inconvenient, and have moved outside city limits, he said. Taking their place, are the poor whites from Appalachia and Negroes from the South.

Most of the new inhabitants of Baltimore, he said, are illiterate and untrained. The only thing the city can do is put them on relief, McKeldin said.

The people outside the city limits use the facilities of the city, but do not pay the city's taxes. The biggest problem, McKeldin said, is that Baltimore has no income.

"The cities need federal assistance," he said, "for the building of roads, schools and housing." The people, he said, have yet to realize this.

WHY DID ÆTNA SPEND ALMOST ONE MILLION DOLLARS LAST YEAR IN SUPPORT OF HIGHWAY SAFETY?

It makes sense to reduce auto accidents. Everybody benefits. Fewer mishaps mean fewer claims. And fewer claims help lower automobile insurance rates.

More important, it's good corporate citizenship. Ætna Life & Casualty is a leader in the business. And we think it's up to us to act like it.

We've made an honest effort over the years.

Ætna became one of the thirteen founders of the National Safety Council in 1913.

Later we helped organize the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

And we were the first to design a device to test driver reaction time.

Each year Ætna engineering services help the drivers of thousands of trucks, buses and other commercial vehicles improve their safety records.

Today, one out of every seven high school students in the country who complete a driver education course are being trained on the first successful classroom driving simulator—the Ætna Drivotrainer System.

Czech Leaders Shift Communist Line

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP)—The Old Western concept of communism, born of the cold war, does not apply in the new Czechoslovakia.

The cliches ring off key in this land where a pro-Stalinist general took off for the United States, and a top honor graduate of the Moscow party academy heads the most amazing liberallzation drive the Soviet camp has seen in more than a decade.

The old yardstick does not work in a country where the chief of state is accused of involvement in Stalinist crimes but retains his post because the new leaders are using democratic rules in their campaign to get rid of the old guard.

To top it all, the unprecedented struggle for control in this Communist nation is freely covered by press, radio and television, with few holds barred.

The defection of Maj. Gen. Jan Sejna, the dramatic suicide of Deputy Defense Minister Vladimir Janko, plus the flood of "now-it-can-be-told" stories of crime and conspiracy are hard to believe.

The 15 million people of this "westernmost outpost of Soviet power"—as an old description referred to Czechoslovakia—watch in wonder. Many are dazed, and many scared.

Some recall how the 1956 Budapest uprising was crushed by Soviet tanks. Others fear the old guard may regain power and take revenge on those who vilified them.

But the reformists seem well entrenched. And what happens in Prague these days cannot be compared with the Hungarian revolt. Czech culture is closely tied to the West. But by historic tradition, Czechs are not anti-Russian. In this country's last free election, the Communists polled more than a third of all votes.

While encouraging free discussion, the new leaders stress that the close ties with the Soviet Union are vital to this country.

"It is not absolutely necessary that you love the Russians, young friend," party Presidium member Josef Smrkovsky told a listener asking him about future Prague-Moscow relations.

"But when you get home I suggest you take a look at the map and trace our borders. I would say that if the Soviet Union did not exist I would fear for the future of our country."

Soviet bloc allies have refrained from reaction to the Czechoslovak democratization drive.

"We need Soviet support if we are to succeed," one influential reformist Czech source said. "But there is nothing that could bring back the old days. We have crossed the point of no return."

Shakespeare's Motives Sought In Play 'Merchant of Venice'

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

"For many years Shakespeare's Shylock has been a source of consternation, especially to most Jews," stated Dr. Norman Berlin, professor of English at UMass in an address to Hillel Club members Friday night.

Controversy has centered around Shakespeare's intentions in writing the play, Merchant of Venice, and his feelings toward Jewish people.

Dr. Berlin noted Shakespeare's early career was influenced by the career of the Earl of Essex and the Roderco Lopez case. Lopez, a Spanish Jew in England, was accused of plotting the murder of Queen Elizabeth. With Lopez's execution, Englishmen viewed Jews critically. Jews had been banned from England in 1290, and they came back in 1664.

Ensuing events led Christopher Marlowe, Shakespeare's contemporary, to write The Jew of Malta which received tremendous acclaim on the London stage.

Because of the clamor for stories about Jews, Dr. Berlin feels Shakespeare decided to write The Merchant of Venice. Like many of all Shakespeare's plays, it was based on past literature. Originally, an Indo-European story with a Christian as the villain, Shakespeare made the Jew a villain. The man alienated from society remained the underlying theme.

Quoting from the scenes characterizing Shylock and his relation to Christian society, Dr. Berlin pointed out the basic factors influencing Shylock, the Jewish moneylender and the Christian Antonio, the merchant of Venice. That Antonio was a Christian and that he did charge interest was the source of the hatred towards Shylock.

That Shylock was a Jew and that Shylock quoted scriptures in defense of usury was a source for Antonio's hatred. This hatred points out Shakespeare's dilemna, of 'What is a Jew?' as opposed to 'What is a Christian?' Based on the questioning of values, Dr. Berlin classified The Merchant of Venice as a problem play as well as a romantic comedy.

Another dilemna was Shylock's value of his daughter against that of his ducats. Dr. Berlin contended that his main concern was his daughter. Although some ambiguity was noted in the "ducats-daughter speech."

The presence of ambiguity vanishes in the "Trial Speech" in which Shylock argues with "insuperable logic." The question of values again comes up in Portia's "Quality of Mercy Speech", and Shylock's fate of becoming a Christian.

Although Dr. Berlin emphasizes the question of values found in the play, he does not feel that Shakespeare pleads for tolerance, rather he believes that "a mirror up to the Jew called Shylock is to hold a mirror up to a human being." Shylock is a complex character and a man of his time.

Dreaming of Utopia

The Southwest Residential College has plans for setting up a special dorm (MDC 3/15) which will give UMass its first utopia.

This new utopian project will stress all of the things lacking in so many of the dorms on campus—respect for property and individual rights along with a seven day a week quiet hours. Another expressed aim of this new dorm is to teach the residents proper public behavior.

While all of these proposals appear wonderful on paper there are strong indications that this scheme will not work. Ideals of this sort are supposed to be the norm in all dorms right now, with the exception of seven day quiet hours. They have proven to a large extent unenforceable. What makes the planners think that now with a "special dorm" these ideas will work all of a sudden just because a specified area is set aside for this purpose?

If it is possible to bring about such wonderful conditions, then the emphasis should be on implementing such changes in all dorms and not only in one "special dorm." By drawing away those who think they can live in this new dorm, the remaining dorms will lose some of the people who may have kept order and been a moderating influence. This last prospect would leave the other dorms in trouble.

The energies that are going into this "special dorm" should be redirected towards solving the problems of all dorms rather than creating a utopian situation in one. Instead of reacting to the problems, attempts should be made to find the root causes in other dormitories and solving them. This utopia like all others in the past is doomed to failure because it rests on dreams rather than reality.

Kennedy Moves In

The expected happened Saturday; Senator Robert Kennedy formally entered the Presidential race amidst shouts of political opportunism. This charge may be true, and probably is.

Senator Eugene McCarthy risked his political neck alone in the New Hampshire primary; Kennedy, it now appears, wishes to reap the benefits of the Minnesotan's hard work. Idealistically, McCarthy deserves the fruits of any anti-Johnson, anti-Vietnam support.

Politics, however, runs on a realistic plane, not an idealistic one. The hard facts indicate that only Robert Kennedy, with his money, national appeal, and inherited political organization, has a chance of defeating an incumbent President for the nomination. Since this is the ultimate objective, it is hoped that all anti-Johnson workers will unite at the convention behind the stronger of the two opposition candidates.

Potentially the stronger of the pair, Kennedy already is shrewdly looking ahead to this eventuality. Criticized by McCarthy supporters as a political opportunist, he has begun to patronize the Minnesotan Senator. Bobby will enter neither the Massachusetts nor the Wisconsin primaries as a write-in (it's too late to have his name placed on the ballots), but will support and campaign for Senator McCarthy, working for the largest anti-Johnson vote possible.

The inevitable confrontation between the two Senators will be in the Oregon primary, May 28, and the California primary a week later. If the ideal, to provide an alternative to the present administration, is adhered to, then the plan is to unite behind the winner of these battles, probably Kennedy. What type of deal will be made is pure speculation, pending Robert Kennedy's nomination (extremely difficult) and election (even harder under the circumstances).

Would you believe Eugene McCarthy, Secretary of State?

A Needed Change

Sometime within the next few years the registration procedure at UM will be changed. It will then be handled completely by mail, eliminating the endless waiting and mile long lines we all equate with Registration Day.

This method will be a great improvement, but there are a number of problems to be solved before it can become a reality. First, a program must be developed for the computer

Secondly, there is a time element involved. Each department must formulate its program earlier so that Counseling Day may be moved back, allowing more time for the actual mailing of the form by the student, and, following verification of payment, its return to him. (All course and section changes will also be processed by mail.)

Thirdly, a larger staff than usual will be needed at these times; and finally, this process will naturally be more expensive.

This is an area where alteration is desperately needed. There is no reason why the problems cannot be worked out, as they have been in other schools using this procedure now. But the problem must be handled with more dispatch than the 1970 implementation date would indicate. This ever worsening situation must be solved as rapidly as possible.

Guilty Until Proven Innocent

To the editor:

It has come to my attention that the judicial decision making-process at the University lacks the democratic values and aims of the American civil judicial system. In the American civil system the burden of proof lies with the prosecution which must prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, whereas at UMass, when the accuser is a counselor, the defendant is guilty before he appears before his dormitory judiciary.

The UMass system is relatively simple in this case. When a counselor brings charges against a fellow student (s) the judiciary will accept his testimony over the student(s) solely because of the counselor's title and position. The only exception occurs when there is proven malice (i.e. friction) between the student and the counselor.

If this exception is not satisfied, the judiciary has only one choice; regardless of the validity of the student's testimony, a counselor's charges alone are proof of guilt and the student, as such, is guilty before he appears in front of the judiciary.

Due to the counselor's selection as a personnel advisor by the administration, his qualifications may warrant a respect for his opinions and charges against his fellow students, yet his title does not warrant an exclusive opportunity to decide a student's innocence, or guilt. This is the job for the judiciary, to hear testimony from both sides, weigh the evidence equally and decide accordingly.

Reviews of the Latest New Books

CRISIS NOW
By General James Gavin (Ret.)
New Work: Random House.
184 pp. $4.95.

Everyone is agreed that the country is "troubled," "surly," "divided," "angry," or, as Pres. Johnson preferred to call it in his State of the Union message "restless." Gen. Gavin thinks the malaise runs deeper than that: he feels that "America is in crisis." Few will disagree with him. His moderate but pointed call for action analyzes the reasons for that crisis and offers his prescription for curing it.

The first thing to be said about his brief but cogent book is that it is not a "quickie" campaign document long on rhetoric but short on substance. It offers the considered views of a thinking American accompanied by bold corrective proposals. The second thing about it is that it reflects a civilian rather than a military approach. With a few exceptions, Americans do not readily turn to their soldiers for solutions to their civilian problems. Gen. Gavin—except where he is dealing specifically with military matters—speaks as a middle-of-the-road citizen distressed by the deteriorating quality of American life.

Much of the trouble he traces to the fact that we no longer face and try to understand our problems. "Instead we hide from them in a variety of ways, and, when they finally force themselves on us, we have no answer but past solutions." We are, in short, looking at our problems through a rear-view mirror.

At the core of it all, in General Gavin's view, lies the canker of Vietnam. "It is poisoning our society at home, and causing us to make serious mistakes in our conduct of international affairs. The Soviet penetration of the Middle East, the ill-will in NATO over our Vietnam policy, our marginal ability to deal with situations that arise in other parts of the world, and our near-paralysis before our domestic crisis all relate to our Vietnam involvement."

Gavin's solution for Vietnam is his now-familiar enclave plan, which requires immediate cessation of the bombing of North Vietnam and a withdrawal of our forces to strong enclaves such as Saigon and Danang. At the same time he would have the President appoint a Cabinet-rank officer of national and international reputation to negotiate with the National Liberation Front and Hanoi. "With a reasoned military strategy and the full energies of government devoted to diplomacy, Gavin confidently asserts, "I am convinced the Viet Cong and Vietminh will come to the negotiating table."

His blueprint for the domestic crisis is equally specific, though staggering in its proportions — five million new homes, a hundred thousand new schools, new services, more doctors, jobs for twenty million people, the eradication of discrimiation, etc. Gavin fully realizes what all this will entail, but replies grimly that "never before in our history have we faced a crisis of such magnitude." The moderation of his tone enhances the urgency of his diagnosis.

Where will the money come from for this colossal domestic revolution? Well, Vietnam is costing the taxpayer about four million dollars an hour, which could provide a good start. It is refreshing to find a general advocating that guns be melted down into plows and computers, but then Gavin is no ordinary general. His book deserves the attention of thoughtful readers.

Project Volunteers Help Puerto Ricans

by ELAINE SJOGUIST and SANDRA McNAMARA
Staff Reporters

Calling a doctor, buying family groceries, and obtaining a driver's license seem ordinary events to most Americans, but to the members of the Puerto Rican community of Springfield they can be major obstacles.

Helping to hurdle these obstacles is the purpose of Project Volunteers, a group of University students acting under the sponsorship of the Club Hispanico.

Utlizing the talents and abilities of the students in order to help these new citizens overcome a language barrier is the primary aim of the volunteers. Many of the students are also given the opportunity to use Spanish in a practical situation and to become acquainted with a different ethnic culture.

A training session for the project was held earlier this month. Present were Andrew Griffin, Director of NES, and Miss Catherine Ivy, Educational Director of NES. Miss Ivy defined the goals of NES, the organization with which the project is associated, and explained how the volunteers fit into their framework.

The training session was conducted by Maestros Amigos, which was represented by Mrs. Elizabeth Hazeltine, Recruitment Director, and Mrs. Karen Penalver, a volunteer instructor. Mrs. Penalver presented the group with some common problems in teaching English as a foreign language, and the possible solutions to these problems.

"If you can speak English, the Spanish Club needs you," has become the motto of the volunteers, according to Chris Czekanski, campus coordinator of the project.

New Fighting in Laos Causes Alarm in Diplomatic Quarters

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP)—The war in Laos is gaining in intensity and causing new alarm in diplomatic quarters.

Outbreaks of fighting near the touchy border of Thailand add to the alarm and to worry about a possibility that the Laos and Vietnamese situations will widen the war in Asia.

Americans here suggest that some of the reports of the Laos war are too alarmist, but a recent Communist attack on Thakhok, opposite Nakorn Phanom, a Thai military base across the Mekong River, has had a sensational impact in Thailand.

Will the Communists try to take Thakhok and thus risk perhaps a Thai intervention? Some Lao officers think not, but one ranking Lao officer snapped: "I hope they do try. If we get them in the open, we'll chew them to pieces."

The Lao government forces have air power which the North Vietnamese lack. Thus, there is a feeling that Hanoi forces are not ready to take over points like Thakhok, any more than they are ready for a general try to take over this little country.

There are, in fact, two wars in Laos. One, in the north, is a Communist quest for territory. The other, in the south, is a Communist mission primarily to guard the Ho Chi Minh trail used by North Vietnam to infiltrate troops and supplies into embattled South Vietnam.

Westerners here are convinced that the fighting in both Laos wars has been taken over almost wholly by North Vietnamese and that the Pathet Lao, calling themselves the "liberation army," are relegated to occupation duty. It is, these sources say, a North Vietnamese war.

Jeering Crowds Keep Brandt Out of National Convention

NUERNBERG, Germany (AP) — West German Foreign Minister Willy Brandt was shoved, jeered and kept out of his political party's national convention by left-wing demonstrators Sunday until police reinforcements came to the rescue.

"Traitor to the working class!" the wildly pushing mob of 500 screamed at Brandt, blocking the doors to the Neurnberg Meistersinger Hall, scene of the congress of Brandt's Social Democratic party.

Led by long-haired youths waving Viet Cong flags and chanting "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh," the demonstrators reached the hall at the same time as Brandt.

The 54-year-old foreign minister held up his hand as if to clear a path for himself but the leftists swarmed around him and blocked the doors.

Brandt, obviously angry, was surrounded by the elbowing crowd for 10 minutes before police could pry open the way for him. The foreign minister appeared unhurt although his clothing was mussed.

A plate glass window was broken during the demonstration and a policeman was reported injured.

A red, blue and gold Viet Cong flag was shoved into Brandt's face at least once during the melee. He was elbowed, pulled and shoved throughout the scuffle but no one was seen deliberately taking a punch at him.

Among the placards was one which read: "Nuernberg trial for Johnson," referring to the international war crimes trials held for German leaders after World War II in this city.

Other slogans included: "Johnson equals Hitler," "U.S. Army equals S.S." and "We want a German veto over U.S. Vietnam policy." S.S. stands for Adolf Hitler's black-shirted Elite Guard.

After Brandt and other leaders finally were escorted by police into the start of the five-day convention, demonstrators milled around the hall looking for an opportunity to crash the well-guarded doors or to pull down flags.

MONEY: THE STORY OF AN ENGINEER

We all know, of course, that in this age of technology every engineering senior is receiving fabulous offers of employment, but do we realize just how fabulous these offers are? Do we comprehend just how keenly industry is competing? To illustrate, let me cite the true and typical case of E. Pluribus Ewbank, a true and typical senior.

One day last week while strolling across the M.I.T. campus, E. Pluribus was hailed by a portly and prosperous man who sat in a yellow convertible studded with precious gem stones. "Hello," said the portly and prosperous man, "I am Portly Prosperous, president of American Xerographic Data Processing and Birth Control, Incorporated. Are you a senior?"

"Yes, sir," said E. Pluribus.

"Do you like this car?" said Portly.

"Yes, sir," said E. Pluribus.

"It's yours," said Portly.

"Thanks, hey," said E. Pluribus.

"Do you like Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades?" said Portly.

"What clean living, clean shaven American does not?" said E. Pluribus.

"Here is a pack," said Portly. "And a new pack will be delivered to you every twelve minutes as long as you live."

"Thanks, hey," said E. Pluribus.

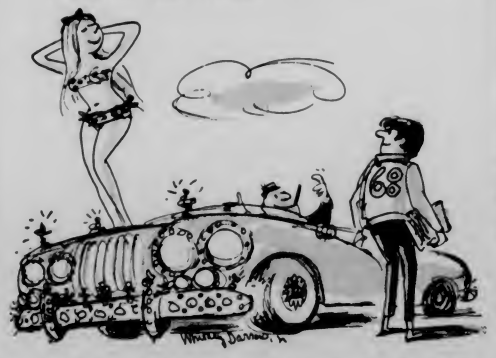
"Would your wife like a mink coat?" said Portly.

"I feel sure she would," said E. Pluribus, "but I am not married."

"Do you want to be?" said Portly.

"What clean living, clean shaven American does not?" said E. Pluribus.

Portly pressed a button on the dashboard of the convertible and the trunk opened up and out came a nubile maiden with golden hair, rosy knees, a perfect disposition, and the appendix already removed. "This is Svetlana O'Toole," said Portly. "Would you like to marry her?"



"Is her appendix out?" said E. Pluribus.

"Yes," said Portly.

"Okay, hey," said E. Pluribus.

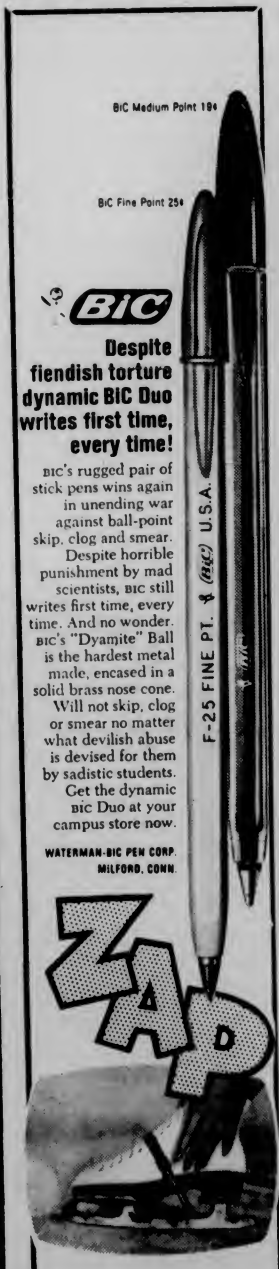
"Congratulations," said Portly. "And for the happy bride, a set of 300 monogrammed prawn forks."

"Thanks, hey," said Svetlana.

"Now then," said Portly to E. Pluribus, "let us get down to business. My company will start you at $75,000 a year. You will retire at full salary upon reaching the age of 26. We will give you an eleven-story house made of lapis lazuli, each room to be stocked with edible furniture. Your children will receive a pack of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades every twelve minutes as long as they shall live. We will keep your teeth in good repair and also the teeth of your wife and children unto the third generation. We will send your dentist a pack of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades every twelve minutes as long as he shall live, and thereafter to his heirs and assigns... Now, son, I want you to think carefully about this offer. Meanwhile here is 50 thousand dollars in small, unmarked bills which places you under no obligation whatsoever."

"Well, it certainly seems like a fair offer," said E. Pluribus. "But there is something you should know. I am not an engineer. In fact I don't go to M.I.T. at all. I just walked over here to admire the trees. I am at Harvard, majoring in Joyce Kilmer."

"Oh," said Portly.



"I guess I don't get to keep the money and the convertible and the Personnas and the broad, do I?" said E. Pluribus.

"Of course you do," said Portly. "And if you'd like the job, my offer still stands."

INTRAMURAL HANDBALL CHAMPIONSHIPS — (l-r) Frank Sherwood, Economics Dept., Independant; Mike Daley, Thatcher, Redwoods, Campus & Dormitory; George Tokarczuk, Kappa Sigma Fraternity.

The winter intramural season comes to its climax with division and campus championships held in three sports, volleyball, wrestling and swimming. All competition will be concluded by Thursday evening in order to avoid conflicts for students leaving campus for Spring Recess.

In handball, playoffs in the three divisions, fraternity independent and dormitory, between league championships, begin Monday evening and continue until Thursday night when the campus finals will be held at 7 p.m. The winning team in each division will playoff, with the possible exception of the Grad-Faculty champ, who if they win their independent division title are ineligible to compete for the campus crown.

Wrestling between Dormitory, fraternity and independent finalists will also conclude on Thursday with matches being held in the Auxiliary Gym at Boyden at 7 p.m. Under the direction of Intramural Director Ted, Schmitt, wrestling has had an encouraging participation of over 400, the most ever in the history of the intramural program.

Swimming trials begin Monday and championships will be held on Wednesday. Swimming also has seen great participation with over a 100 more participants than last year.

Redmen Nine Anxious for Season's Opening

Returning Veterans Are Cause for Rosy Outlook

By HARVEY ELMAN
Senior Reporter

UMass' varsity baseball mentor Dick Bergquist is concocting a powerful brew which may make meals indigestible for opposing coaches this season.

The recipe is simple. Take the nucleus of last year's Yankee Conference-winning squad, including three All-Conference picks, and stir with the promising potential of several capable sophomores. Mix well with powerfully consistent hitting and steadier defense. Add a dash of depth and and versatility. Then season these ingredients with an intense desire for a "return engagement" with the high-flying Eagles of Boston College in the NCAA. One playoff, and you will realize why the second-year coach is optimistically looking forward to the forthcoming campaign.

A six-game road trip opens UMass' 82nd season with a game against Erskine College (Due West, S. Carolina) on March 25. Following a game-a-day schedule, the Redmen meet Erskine again, then travel to Belmont-Abbey (Belmont, N. Carolina) for two games, and on to Randolph-Macon College (Ashland, Va.) for a single tilt, finishing with U. of Maryland March 30. As in the past two years, all Southern-trip games against four-year colleges will count in the season's records.

Last spring Bergquist guided the Conference champions to the finals of the NCAA Regional playoffs by sweeping a doubleheader from Holy Cross, 4-0 and 6-0 in the opening round. The finals, held here in early June, saw UMass drop the first game, 4-1, grab the second, 6-5 in 11 innings, then lose a heartbreaking 7-6 thriller to B.C. in 12 innings. The loss cost the Redmen a trip to Omaha for the College World Series and sets the stage for a return match with the Eagles this spring. Enroute to the playoffs, the club copped eight of ten Conference games with an overall 17-11 mark.

With the graduation of pitcher Carl Boteze, 2b Frank Stewart, and 1b Roy Lasky, the Redmen must plug these holes to defend the title. All three players were first team All-Conference choices in 1967. Boteze, especially, will be hard to replace, as he won a record high of 20 games during his varsity career, and also in 1967 hit .281 as an outfielder and third baseman. Stewart, an All-Conference selection for two years, recently signed with the Chicago Cubs and is now at spring training in Scottsdale.

Three other All-Conference selections return, however, led by Co-Captain John Canty (Dudley). The flamethrowing left-hander, an All District One first team pick, struck out 145 in 92 innings last spring, as he posted an 8-2 mark with a 1.65 ERA. Canty ranked fifth in the nation in average strikeouts per nine innings at 14.2. Slick-fielding junior shortstop Joe DiSarcina (Burlington) led the Redmen with a .39 average and earned a second-team All-New England selection.

Professional scouts already rank DiSarcina as a major league infielder. He has great range and speed, quickness in getting his throws away, and a strong arm. Bergquist feels that DiSarcina gained a lot of confidence as a starring guard for the basketball team this winter. Senior left-fielder Ted Mareno (Wollaston) hit .281 and was a top clutch performer at the plate and in the field making diving grabs.

Joining Canty as the top three hurlers will be junior Norm Elliot (Waltham) (3-2 1.60 ERA) and highly-regarded sophomore John Kitchen (Chicopee). Rich Rappoli, a junior, (0-2) has a lively arm to go with a newly-developed slider. Bergquist feels Rappoli could crack the starting rotation. In the bullpen will be senior lefty Dave Katz (1-1). Also vying for a spot is sophomore lefty Gerry Dobeck.

The catching position is wide open, as veterans Tony Chinappi (.243), Ed Lagoy (.133), and football linebacker and wrestler Ernie Smith (.273) battle for the top spot. But the surprise starter could be sophomore Chuck Newell who does the job defensively. Bergquist can sacrifice some offense here to get a catcher who "can run the club."

The infield is a prime example of the depth and versatility of this club. Several capable performers are vying for the first, second, and third base slots. DiSarcina, of course, is the key to the infield at shortstop. Battling for the second base job will be senior transfer Fred Tombor, a flashy fielder, and Chuck Espanet, a hard-hitting sophomore. Tombor, a four-year Marine veteran, is currently unable to run due to a pulled leg muscle. Espanet can also play third base and the outfield.

Co-captain Don Ferron (Southbridge) was the second-best hitter with a .317 mark and will start at third base or in right field where he played last season. Ferron is a straightaway power hitter with very quick wrists. If he can handle the third base spot, the club's offense will be greatly improved. Steve Stanford, a soph, can also play second or third. Steve Rogers, a sophomore starting safety on the football team, can pitch, play the outfield, or first base. However, he recently hurt his shoulder and Coach Bergquist may let him pitch on the Southern trip to see if his arm has responded sufficiently. Veteran Al Craig should again prove a valuable utilityman as he handles second base, shortstop, and third base capably.

Bob Hansen, a .469 slugger from last year's fine freshman squad, is the top prospect for the first base job. Big and strong at 6'1", 200, Hansen was an All-Scholastic for Boston Latin. Challenging him for the spot is fleet Ray Ellerbrook, a sophomore basketball standout who was an All-State baseball pick in New Jersey. Bergquist feels Ellerbrook is a capabe fielder and may shift him to the outfield to utilize his speed.

Joining Mareno and possibly Ferron in the outfield will be last year's center fielder Alex Vyce (Chicopee) who hit ,267 after a fine sophomore season. Coach Bergquist hopes that both Vyce and Mareno can regain their hitting form of two years ago. Both players are standouts defensively with lots of experience and baseball savvy.

Dick Pepin, another Marine veteran, is pressing hard for a starting spot. Pepin was the leading hitter for two years at Camp Lejeune, N.C. and led in RBI's. He also owns a powerful throwing arm. The outfielders are expected to produce consistently powerful hitting and Bergquist faces the pleasant problem of choosing from five or six capable performers.

"There is no reason why we can't give any club in New England a real battle," claims Bergquist. "I'm really optimistic about our offensive power which we need because we are not basically a running club except for DiSarcina and Ellerbrook. Our hitting should be as good as the Conference championship team of two years which had Hagan Anderson and Jim Babyak."

"Our road trip will be tough," continues Bergquist, "as, for example, Belmont-Abbey was the best team in the Southern District of the College Division last year with a 22-4 mark. But we'll go down there thinking we can take them all."

Co-Captains Ferron and Canty echo the same sentiment: "We're shooting for at least 20 wins this spring with our depth and improved hitting."

Bergquist sees the Yankee Conference race as being between UMass, URI, and UConn. "But all the teams are really equal this season and the Conference should produce the best baseball team in New England."

The 1968 schedule is the most difficult in UMass history. In addition to the top-flight competition in the Yankee Conference, Dartmouth, BC, and Colgate have been added to the schedule. Perenially-strong New England independents such as Holy Cross, Springfield, AIC, Williams, Amherst, and Tufts make the Redmen road to that possible rematch with BC in the playoffs a rugged one.

McGuirk to Be Honored

Arthur ("Archie") Roberts, chairman of the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame today announced that Warren F. McGuirk, Director of Athletics at the University of Massachusetts, will be the 1968 recipient of the Henry A. Butova Memorial Award to be made at the sixth annual award dinner of the local chapter to be held at Deerfield Academy on Tuesday, April 23.

DEAN WARREN MCGUIRK

The award, named after the late American International College alumnus and a charter member of the Western Mass. Football Hall of Fame chapter, is presented each year to a former football player residing in Western Massachusetts who has distinguished himself in later life.

In commenting on this year's award Roberts said, "Warren P. McGuirk, a captain on one of Boston College's few undefeated football teams, has dedicated his life to athletics in general and football in particular. His foresight has had much to do with the great strides that have been made in the athletic program and facilities at the state university during the past two decades. He has been one of the most active persons I have come across in helping promote American amateur football as an integral and wholesome part of our educational process."

This year will mark the fifth time that the Butova Award has been presented. Past recipients include Dr. Robert O'Malley, Dr. Martin F. "Tim" Murray, Howard L. Jones, and Charles 'Chick' Shea.

N. E. Stars Win with Tindall

SPRINGFIELD—UMass' Bill Tindall of the New England Stars was one of six members of his team to score in double figures, as the the six state aggregate edged the Boston-Worcester Stars, 120-111 in the 13th annual Hall of Fame Classic, Saturday at Springfield College Field House. The win gave the New England stars an 8-5 lead in the series.

Tindall scored 11 points in the contest as he notched several timely hoops which helped put the game out of reach from the city stars. The big gun for the New England team, however, and winner of the 'Stars of Stars' Trophy was Rhode Island's Art Stephenson.

Stephenson led all scorers with 28 points and also led all rebounders. Paul Romano of Springfield College had 18 for the winners in their balanced attack. Boston College shooter Steve Adelman had 18 points to lead the losers.

Lederle Stresses Student As Individual in Annual Report

A reaffirmation of commitment to the individual student, despite steady physical growth and burgeoning enrollment, keynotes University of Massachusetts President John W. Lederle's annual report to the Commonwealth on the state of its major resource of public higher education.

"We conceive of our total function as expansion of each individual's opportunity to come to grips with the best education the Commonwealth can provide," states Dr. Lederle in a 20-page document that summarizes the development and growth of the University during the 1966-67 academic year.

Not a Production-line

"Education is a singular matter," continues Lederle. "Despite record-shattering institutional growth here and elsewhere, we have no mass education programs, no capsule courses, no production-line problem solving. Mighty data-processing machines cope with mighty accumulations of data, but living people still deal with the problems of people."

President Lederle looks back nearly seven years to his inaugural address when he said, "I cannot overstress the crucial importance, from now on, in the critical times ahead of us, of the public's full understanding and full support of our state university's fundamental educational enterprise. . . The American college—or university — must be examined critically to discover whether it is worthy of its destiny . . . The University of Massachusetts welcomes, indeed invites, such public examination.'" These responsibilities have not changed in the interim says Lederle. "We are guided by the same concern today, as our tasks multiply, our goals proliferate, and our horizons are broadened."

Student-centered Orientation

Reflecting a student-centered orientation, the report outlines a basic restructuring of the student personnel services divisions that has resulted in a decentralization of responsibilities to residential area coordinators as well as increased training for heads-of-residence, residence directors and counselors. The basic objective of this restructuring has been to make staff members more readily accessible to students who have problems that require administrative guidance and advice.

In the area of student involvement and protest, President Lederle says, "We are convinced of the long-term value of academic debate. Dissent and conflict are valid pathways to agreement and order. They should sound the fanfare of creation."

Turning to the growing effectiveness and academic stature of the University faculty, Dr. Lederle credits the new Salary Relief Bill as a valuable means for keeping the Commonwealth competitive in the nationwide search for outstanding men and women in higher education.

The increasing level of academic excellence is being matched on the student level by more emphasis on independent study, honors work and student self-reliance in both academic and non-academic pursuits. "We feel that with increased student maturity come both increased freedom and increased responsibility," reports Dr. Lederle.

Academic & Student Freedom good

Lederle

Evidence of the effectiveness of this philosophy is outlined in the report: "From the standpoint of academic and student freedom, the University of Massachusetts has an enviable record. We have had no riots, no prolonged disruption of the academic life, and no mass invasions of the campus by outside forces, but at the same time we have lived and worked in the new atmosphere of student activism made evident across the na-

Dean Field Cautions Students on Drug Use

By MARTHA CURRAN
Staff Reporter

"Massachusetts law governing possession, distribution and use of narcotics and hallucinogenic drugs are unbelievably strong." William F. Field, Dean of Students at the University, made this forceful statement and emphasized the gravity of student violation of the laws.

It is the duty of Police officers, including campus police, under state and federal law, to arrest not only persons illegally in possession of narcotic drugs but also persons present at the time of arrest who know that the narcotic drug laws are being violated. Since illegal possession, distribution and use of narcotic drugs is a felony, not a misdemeanor, the University must communicate any incidence of drug law violations to state and federal authorities.

Penalties Under Law

"There is no choice," Dean Field continued, "but to arrest violators." A $200 fine or imprisonment for one year is the mildest penalty for narcotic drug law violation. The penalties increase. For a second offense, there is NO suspension of sentence and a violator is sentenced to jail.

Chapter 94, Section 205 of Massachusetts state law sets imprisonment in the state prison for not more than three and a half years or in a jail or house of correction for not more than two and a half years or a fine of not more than $1000 as the penalty for possession of any narcotic drug without lawful prescription.

Few people realize that whoever is "present where a narcotic drug is illegally kept or deposited, or whoever is in the company of a person, knowing that said person is illegally in possession of a narcotic drug or whoever conspires with another person to violate the narcotics drug laws, may be arrested WITHOUT a warrant." Punishment for such an offense is "imprisonment in the state prison for not more than five years or by imprisonment in a jail or house of correction for not more than two years or by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5000.

Marijuana Defined

Specific reference must be made to marijuana, a controversial "high." Defined legally, it is "cannabis, sometimes called marijuana, including all parts of the plant cannabis sativa L. whether growing or not, the seeds thereof, the resin extracted from any part of such plant and every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture or preparation of such plant, its seeds is a narcotic drug."

Administration Internships Available for Students

Application forms for appointment to the 1968 Administrative Internship Program may now be obtained at the Provost's Ofice, Whitmore Administration Building. The program was instituted in the summer of 1967 when a group of ten interns assumed a variety of duties in several offices throughout the University.

On an experimental basis, some have continued to work with their offices during the current academic year. The responses of participants and sponsoring offices were so enthusiastic that it was decided to further develop the program by establishing formal guidelines and extending opportunities for involvement to additional offices. The purposes of an administrative internship for undergraduates are twofold.

First, to interest and inform outstanding young people about higher education as a career. Many bright students are completely unaware of the opportunities and challenges afforded by this field; by the time they graduate, their career decisions have in many instances been formulated.

Second, to engage students in the quintessential activities of a given area or office. The concerns of every area in some way

Stage Two of Urban Development Described

By JOHN JANICKI
Staff Reporter

"What will the country do about its urban future?" Robert C. Wood, Undersecretary of Housing and Urban Development asked last night at the Student Union, and spoke of urban development as one of the major issues confronting the American people.

Emphasizing the federal view, Wood outlined the status of the national government's program and what the future holds as its role in the cities. "We are now in stage two of the development of the response to urbanization, articulation in every possible way to the commitment to the urban situation", said Wood. "In the past we were involved in discussion and intellectual discourse, we have ridden the 'tiger' of urban development, we are now preparing to tame it", he said.

As evidence of the national commitment fostered by the present administration Wood cited President Johnson's "expression of an American goal, this country should and would be prepared to build 6,000,000 housing units for disadvantaged people over the next ten years." Wood expects the federal government to eventually spend ten billion dollars in solving the urban dilemma. Wood predicts that "every unit of sub-standard housing will disappear in ten years".

There are still several questions to be answered, according to Wood. How, where, and what kind of building will be done? Do we want to and can we design the migration of rural people? How will we treat declining towns? How will we deploy industrial locations? "We are only on the verge of solving these

Professor Rudin To Read Monologues

Professor Seymour Rudin of the Department of English will read a group of varied dramatic monologues by Robert Browning, T. S. Eliot, Anne Sexton, and others in the fourth meeting of Oral Messages during the Winter Term.

The dramatic monologue, a literary form which has been considerably developed by modern poets because of its relation to stream-of-consciousness technique, is particularly well suited to spoken performance because of its dramatic structure.

Professor Rudin, who specializes in contemporary drama and is a member of the Editorial Board of The Massachusetts Review, and is particularly interested in this genre of poetry, has read publicly at Harvard University, and is travelling to the Uni-

Heavy Rains Cause Flood Danger in State

BOSTON (AP) — Soaking rains which went into their second day Monday brought flood warnings for eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

As rain began to taper off at dusk Monday, the Weather Bureau said flash flooding had already begun in the smaller streams of southern New England.

The death of a newspaper photographer was blamed on the storm. Eugene Mitchell, 56, veteran photographer of the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield, Mass., drowned after he apparently fell from a small bridge while making a picture of a rain swollen river.

Larger rivers would receive the impact of the heavy rains later in the week, the Weather Bureau said.

Winds eased Monday night from their peak of 65 m.p.h. at the storm's height.

The Blackstone River at Woonsocket, R. I., was expected to crest Tuesday morning at four

World News Roundup

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — The government reported Monday security forces killed nine members of a guerilla band that slipped into Rhodesia from Zambia. One invader was wounded and several were captured.

The Rhodesian security forces are trying to check invaders who vow to free condemned Africans and to avenge the recent hangings of five blacks convicted of murder and terrorism.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — About 1,500 students threw stones at police, who responded by spreading tear gas in a clash Monday at Lebanese University. One policeman was injured and a few students were arrested but later released.

The students had assembled to demand retention of low examination standards. They were concerned by reports the Education Ministry planned to raise the standards.

ASUNCION, Paraguay (AP) — President Alfredo Stroessner is flying to the United States on Tuesday for a four-day visit during which he will discuss with President Johnson and other officials increased U. S. aid and investments in the small, backward South American country.

LONDON (AP) — An outbreak of foot and mouth disease has been confirmed after almost a month of no new cases of the livestock plague, the Ministry of Agriculture reported Monday.

The outbreak has struck at a farm in Northwood Shropshire, which was previously infected Dec. 3. As a result, removal of restrictions on a movement of livestock planned for March 28 has been canceled.

Since the epidemic started last October, more than 422,000 cattle, sheep and pigs have had to be slaughtered.

NUERNBERG, Germany (AP)— Foreign Minister Willy Brandt declared in this old Nazi stronghold Monday it is time for Germans to face realities of Adolf Hitler's lost war and drop territorial claims against Poland.

Brandt also asked for understanding of America's difficult position in Vietnam and spoke out against terror and intolerance, whether from the German Red radicals of the right.

West Germany, in its own interest, should support efforts to halt the spread of atomic weapons, the foreign minister told cheering delegates at the national convention of his Social Democratic party.

Franz Josef Strauss, finance minister of the Bonn government, does not speak for West Germany when he resists the proposed Geneva nuclear treaty, Brandt declared. The criticism of Strauss could provoke a crisis in the coalition government of Brandt's Socialists and Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger's Christian Democrats. Strauss heads the Bavarian wing of Kiesinger's party.

Friction within the conservative side of the 15-month-old "grand coalition" also was threatened by Brandt's dramatic proposal for recognition of the long-disputed Oder-Neisse boundary with Poland.

There was no official reaction from Kiesinger's branch of the government. The applause and comments of Brandt's Social Democrats indicated considerable support within the party for Oder-Neisse recognition.

Brandt's delivered his two-hour policy speech in a forceful, confident voice. He described as "shameful" the Sunday demonstration outside the convention in which he and Herbert Wehner, deputy party chief, were roughed up by young leftist radicals chanting "traitors to the working class," and "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh."

tion."

"We realize we are not perfect," continues the Lederle report. "The University of Massachusetts is a practice world, exhibiting enough of the larger world's imperfection to make the practice useful. If the ivory tower still existed, the shock which would be sustained upon escaping it into a world of reality would make all education within its confines meaningless."

Practice World

In the continuing effort to make the "practice world" of the University more meaningful as laboratory of learning, Dr. Lederle outlines a few of the academic highlights of the 1966-67 year:

- 576 advanced degrees awarded by the Graduate School, compared with 467 the prior year and 315 two years previously.
- Existing programs in astronomy, business administration, mechanical engineering and electrical engineering were elevated to the doctoral level, bringing the total number of doctorates offered to 37.
- New Master's programs approved in astronomy and in marine sciences the latter by combining a broad spectrum of interdisciplinary resources.
- A new program initiated in polymer science and engineering, bringing together related efforts of the School of Engineering and the College of Arts and Sciences.
- The Research Computing Center developed a time-sharing system for the powerful CDC 3600 computer, featuring remote access teletypes, at a fraction of the cost of comparable systems.
- A significant increase in the number of fellowships available to graduate students made possible almost entirely through increased activity of the federal government. Fellowships provided by industry rose from three to 21; from federal sources, from 162 to 225; and from state support, from 42 to 46.
- Research activity, as measured by grants for project support, facilities and equipment, rose during the report year from 335 to 450 grants.
- The Water Resources Research Center established research programs in the arrest of the aging process in small Massachusetts lakes, use and development of small and large streams, and acceleration of the natural cleansing processes of Massachusetts' estuaries and coastal waters.
- Working with the New England labor movements, the Labor Relations and Research Center initiated a project on poverty, sponsored by the Office of Economic Opportunity, to provide training in how trade unions, including locals, can participate in the war on poverty with maximum effort.
- Efforts of the College of Agriculture in international agricultural development continue with field work in Malawi as well as the education of Malawi youth at the University, under a contract with the U.S. Agency for International Development.
- Building upon existing programs at the University, new degrees authorized in biochemistry (B.A. and B.S.), fine arts ((B.F.A.), music (B. Mus.), astronomy M.S. and Ph.D.) and statistics M.S.).
- The newly established Commonwealth Technical Resource Service (COMTECH)' forms a link between the University and the industrial, business and commercial environments of the Commonwealth.

Luce Airs Opinions In Vietnam Teach-In

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

"Trying to find an American solution to a Vietnamese problem would be like asking for a Christian solution in the Arab-Israeli War," was the analogy drawn by Mr. Donald Luce in beginning his Vietnam lecture last night.

Mr. Luce conducted a teach-in on Vietnam problems in the Alpha Zeta sponsored lecture in Hasbrook 20. His purpose was to communicate the growing Vietnamese resentment of this war to the American people. Mr. Luce, who recently returned after nine years as Director of the Intentional Voluntary Service program in Vietnam, led the activities of 160 volunteers working in agriculture, education, youth affairs, refugee work, and village development.

Rampant Frustration

Looking back at the problems facing americanization and refugees, Mr. Luce saw rampant frustration in refugee's camps located in old churches, and classrooms filled with 60 to 80 students. In 1958 when he first came to Vietnam, Mr. Luce wanted only to help the people economically and was completely non-political. But he still had to ask himself why he was attempting to help these people.

Turning to the present situation before he left Vietnam, he told the story of a typical Vietnamese woman. She had been a rice grower until defoliants were dropped on her fields. Mr. Luce asked what would be a good life, she answered "my own home and strips of field to grow rice on." She is but one of 5 million refugees in a country of 16 million who eventually end up in the streets of the major cities.

Students Hold Political Power

In cities like Saigon, refugees find inflated prices, and poor living conditions. Students, who hold the real political power in the country, point out that it is an example of "The Establishment Not Working." The Establishment refers to the Cao-Ky government.

On the military side, Mr. Luce elicited the feeling that the South Vietnamese Army fight as if it was an American war rather than a Vietnamese war. The Viet Cong are gaining more supporters since the build up of American troops Mr. Luce noted. He stated that the new members have a high nationalistic regard and consider the present South Vietnamese government corrupt and in need of social reform.

Mr. Luce concluded the lecture with a comment on the source of our problem and future in Vietnam. "Much of our problem is understanding the Vietnamese." As to our action he feels we must recognize the National Liberation Front and stop bombing immediately. A question and answer period followed the lecture.

very real questions", said Wood.

"The problem of the next generation will be to take up the task of solving the problems of urbanization. The challenge of the next 50 years is whether we will use our wealth to solve our problems rationally using reason and knowledge as our guide," Wood concluded.

UMass Theater to Present "Beyond the Bookshelf"

Beyond the Bookshelf, a new play about familiar Storyland characters, will be presented for children by the University of Massachusetts Theatre in Bartlett Hall Auditorium on the University campus March 21-23, at 7 p.m. on Thursday and Friday; and at 10:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. on Saturday.

The play is set in that wonderful land "beyond the bookshelf" where all the characters in Storyland go when they are not being read by some person in the human world.

7 Characters

Theodora Matilda—that's Cinderella's fairy godmother—is in grave trouble because she seems to have lost her magic powers. Story Master, the leader of the group, may decide she has to stay beyond the bookshelf all the time, because her loss of magic unleashes confusion wherever she goes.

The story is complicated by the arrival of a spaceman named Zoe, who comes from a faraway planet and threatens to disrupt the whole business of storytelling with his very strange mission. After some hilarious mishaps, he and Theodora Matilda find they can be of help to each other, and Storyland characters can get back to the business of being in stories.

Beyond the Bookshelf is written by Bobbye Durrett and is directed by Leslie B. Titcomb. It is the second University Children's Theatre production given during the academic year.

7 Cast

The part of Theodora Matilda is played by Karen Connolly who played the Princess in the recent production of Once Upon a Mattress. Pedro Silva, who played Jack in Puss in Boots, plays the "villain" of the story, while Peter Exford plays Story Master, Mike Kornblatt the Magic Mirror, Debbie Keller the White Rabbit, and Kathy Sophas Cinderella.

Pedro Silva, junior, plays Zoe the spaceman in UMT Children's Theater production "Beyond the Bookshelf", at Bartlett Auditorium March 21-23.

Bartlett Auditorium will be open one-half hour prior to each performance. All tickets are general admission and will be sold at the door only.

to five feet above flood stage, the Weather Bureau said. This would mean a crest of 13 to 14 feet above normal.

The Nashua River at East Pepperell was expected to crest Wednesday morning about four feet above flood stage.

The Charles River, which empties into Boston Harbor, will crest Friday morning near Needham at about four feet above flood stage, the Bureau said.

At Blue Hill, south of Boston, the Weather Bureau recorded 6.15 inches of rain. Boston had 3.72 inches in a 24-hour period, a record for March.

Providence, R. I., recorded 4.53 inches by noon Monday, and Worcester in the same period had 3.76 inches.

Skies were expected to clear Tuesday.

The storm centered in eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island. No problems with flooding were reported in western Massachusetts.

A spokesman for the New England Telephone Co. said 40,000 telephones were out of order in Massachusetts during the day but 25,000 were back in service by nightfall.

About 2,000 telephone repairmen were at work through the night in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, the spokesman said, with additional crews on the way from Maine, Vermont and western Massachusetts to help out.

Most of the affected telephones in the Bay State were in the southeastern portion of the state. Some 4,000 phones were out of order in Rhode Isalnd and another 1,000 in New Hampshire, the spokesman reported.

If the weather improved, the spokesman said service to almost all telephones could be restored by Tuesday night.

The Army Corps of Engineers said it was operating a total of 18 flood control reservoirs Monday night to ease flooding caused by two days of heavy rain in eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Elsewhere in New England, the Army said it was using dams and flood gates to keep the draining of rivers within bounds.

Flood control reservoirs at Hopkinton, N. H., and Weir, N. H., were manned Monday night to take some of the pressure from the Merrimack river basin in nearby Massachusetts, the spokesman said.

Student Power, Campus Reform, Tonight, WMUA

"Student Power at UMass" will be explored tonight on "Action '68" with Pete Ward. The program will be broadcast live over WMUA from 8:00-9:30.

Bart Kaplan, Editor of Mother of Voices, Jim Collins, President of the Student Senate, Jack Dean, Editor of the Daily Collegian, and Dean Field, Dean of Students are the special guests scheduled to appear.

Does it exist? Can it exist? Do we want it? How do we use it? Who will lead it? These are only a few questions to be discussed. Additional questions can be introduced during the program by calling 5-2876.

Mother of Voices' "father," Bart Kaplan, will be the guest of Professors Ryan Drum and Putnam Barber on their bi-weekly radio discussion tonight. The discussion, carried live on WMUA, will center around Kaplan's proposals for University reform, and his policies as editor of MOV.

Drum and Barber's program, "Open Forum," will begin at 9:30 after "Action '68."

relate to students. It is therefore desireable that students should contribute meaningfully and substantively to the work of an office. Valuable too is the understanding students develop for the issues, problems and questions which confront faculty and administration each day. With the opportunity to grapple with chronically insoluble matters, students may develop more patience with faculty and administration—or may be able to suggest creative resolutions.

For 1968-1969 ten interns will be selected from students completing their junior year at the University of Masachusetts. Successful candidates will have demonstrated interest and involvement in the University by participation in the academic life, extracurricular or student governmental organizations, and their residential halls of fraternities. Additionally, they will have shown proficiency in organizing and articulating ideas, both in speaking and writing. Those selected will arrange interviews with the sponsoring offices. These are the Dean of Administration, Admissions, School of Education, School of Engineering, School of Business Administration, Housing, Institutional Studies, News Bureau, and the Asociate Dean of Students. Each intern and office will subsequently submit their first four choices for assignment, so that interns may be matched with offices according to the wishes of each, where possible.

Interns will report to sponsoring offices on the first day of Summer Session and will be expected to work forty hours each week for the twelve week period. They will be assigned as immediate assistants to the heads of these offices, and will perform a variety of useful services. In no sense will they be considered additional clerical help. For their work, interns will receive $85.00 per week, supported by University funds. The following fall and spring semesters, interns will receive a flat weekly stipend of $20.00 for an expected ten hours of work (or more); each sponsoring office will be asked to contribute half of the intern's financial support during the academic year.

During the summer period twelve seminars will be scheduled, to acquaint interns with responsibilities and functions of offices in the central administration, in order that they may attain a first-hand familiarization with administrative patterns. It is anticipated that a three-credit seminar course in aspects of higher education will be offered during both semesters of the academic year. Application must be made by April 8, 1968.

Association Concert Tickets Selling Well

Referring to the advance ticket sales for The Association-Yardbirds Concert, Committee Chairman Tom Mason said, "People connected with the Student Union box office have told me that, at this point in our campaign, we have outsold the Johnny Carson Show, at a comparable point in its advance sales."

Student response to the show, he continued, has really been gratifying.

Both The Association and the Yardbirds, with their individual and distinctive sounds, possess qualities of interest to UMass students.

The number of hits released by The Association is quite impressive. "Along Comes Mary," "Cherish," "Windy," and "Never My Love" have all attained overwhelming popularity.

The Yardbirds, too, have a number of hits to their credit. "For Your Love," "Heart Full of Soul," and "I'm a Man" have all received public acclaim.

But the abilities of these two groups does not end with their music. They both possess the showmanship necessary for a truly enjoyable concert.

Phyllis Burgess of TEEN Magazine, in writing about The Association, has said, "They're one of the few groups who have worked up a funny, professionally tight act to entertain their audience." And the same can be said for the Yardbirds.

"The advance sales give every indication that this will be the best received of all the concerts held at UMass this year," Mason said. "Everyone appears quite enthusiastic."

SUG Meeting Approves Charge On Check Cashing

Staff Reporter
By SUSAN BERLINER

The Student Union Governing Board (SUG) last night approved the charging of a check cashing fee for those checks cashed in the SU, to be effective in June. At ten cents per check, the revenue will bring an estimated $20,000 to alleviate the projected operating deficit of the SU for next year.

SUG Board also considered the establishment of a copy service in the SU. A representative of Gnomon Copy Service pointed out the advantages of his service—not only would it be a source of income for the SU, but it would provide in contract a stable price structure with a fifty per cent savings over the copy service considered by the administration. Instead of kicking the machine when dissatisfied, the customer would be the sole judge of good copy and would have the right to resubmit copy if displeased. The service would be open only for university use. Also brought up was the critical situation of space in the SU and tabled to committee was a proposal to open the service to public bid.

The Pollsters

There is a persistent opinion that the polls undermine the public confidence. But most pollsters are of the opinion that it is the distorting and misinterpreting of the data by political reporters, analysts and commentators that is the cause of this distrust by the public. The pollsters insist that part of their job is to provide expert analysis or risk distortion of their statistics by incompetent "analysts". The Gallup and Harris polls provide such professional interpretation through their syndicated newspaper columns. But many other pollsters hand down their analysis only to their clients, who then present the findings to their best advantage.

Dr. Irving Crespi, vice president of the Gallup organization says the quality of interpretation is as important as the quality of data-collection methods. Failure to appraise the undecided vote professionally, for instance, can lead to major error, he says. For the professional pollster simply to collect data and then dump it in the laps of the press and the public would be not only dangerous but irresponsible on their part.

The Gallup and Harris polls represent the highest standards in the business. They take large enough samples to be valid and expose their techniques and problems to full view. In contrast to this are the politicians who treat them as top-secret material and refuse to divulge any information about them — often for obvious reasons. A recent incident involving a "Johnson vs. everyone else" poll was a perfect example of this type of poll-data analysis.

Polls, thus, play a major role in the political life of the country. The public, accepting statistics without applying the tests of logic, observation, and common sense, accepts polls. It gives credence to them—as the poll on polls showed — without taking into consideration the factors that influence the making of public opinion. It is important, therefore, that the data made public be responsibly presented.

Are the polls, then, really of any great value? Eric Hodgins in an article for the Saturday Review in 1953 summed up the philosophy behind the polls: "If we ever really find out how to measure public opinion we will thereby have in our possession knowledge altogether as powerful in the social sciences as the discovery of how to unlock the atom was to the physical sciences, and just as useful for good or evil."

A Significant Study

A study into the American student press roles of freedom and responsibility, announced recently by Dr. Dario Politella of the University, ought to be of sociological worth and at least a reference point for college journalists.

Dr. Politella, of Sunderland, president of the National Council of College Publications Advisers, has appointed a 15-man commission to college material on the student press. It will investigate instances of censorship and of too much permissiveness. Among its findings will be opinions on whether there should be a code of ethics.

Recorder readers may wonder how this applies to this area. For one thing, several hundreds of our youth are attending colleges and universities. UMass is just beyond the county's borders and it plays a major part in our daily lives. Greenfield Community College is an expanding factor in county society; a decade hence it will be a commanding one.

Finally, and perhaps of greatest importance, the college press often provides the young person's first really personal experience with the communications media in terms of deep meaning. Students usually become emotionally involved in college issues. How these issues are handled by the campus press can have a lasting effect upon the individual's viewpoint of news media and its relationship with the centers of social and legal authority.

One of the best college publications in this region is the Daily Collegian, published on the UM campus by the students. It is bright, perceptive and challenging most of the time. It has days of dullness and moments of youthful rebellion, depending upon events, issues and the staff reactions. Generally, it is also a very responsible and accurate mirror of the mushrooming Amherst institution.

It is only natural that some editions irritate faculty members and administration officials. This is true of students everywhere. Society is better because of youth's questioning attitudes, and educational institutions are no exception. They are training places for all aspects of democratic life and the press is a part of the system to be reviewed constantly and critically.

Dr. Politella's survey commission has, therefore, an important task and its findings are of moment here. They could very well contribute much to better understanding and to a stronger democratic system for the next generation of both college students and their parents.

An American Hero

Senator Eugene McCarthy deserves the thanks of all Americans. Whether he wins the Democratic Presidential nomination and the presidency or not, he has become an American hero.

Before he announced his candidacy, America looked doomed to a choice between two superhawks and domestic do nothings. At a time when Robert Kennedy was hamstrung and unable to run for fear of causing the death of liberal hopes in America, and when Republicans offered nothing but an echo of Johnson Senator McCarthy put his country above party and came forward.

He says he is running to prove to youth that democracy can work. His New Hampshire showing proved that Americans need not be forced to accept what they do not want in a president. His candidacy has allowed Americans to have a choice.

Thanks to Eugene McCarthy's actions we now have a choice of three fine men who can get America on the move again where before we had only two drab, irresponsive men to choose from. Thanks to McCarthy Robert Kennedy has entered the race for President, a man who more than any other in America can lead us toward being a truly great country in both the domestic and foreign arenas. Thanks to McCarthy the Republicans see that a liberal candidate is what America wants, though Rockefeller will probably have to accept a conservative running mate if he wins the nomination. Thanks to McCarthy, Lyndon Johnson and his echo, Nixon, have been repudiated.

McCarthy has opened the way for a triumph of good sense and humanity over selfishness and narrowminded policies. He has given America back faith in its best qualities. Win or lose he has opened the way for other liberals, and more importantly has Americans to express their basic common sense. He has proven that democracy works.

Chest

To the editor:

Tuesday evening March 12th members of the Scrolls, Maroon Keys and the Class of 1970 Executive Council went door - to - door in the residence halls collecting for Campus Chest.

It is with sincere and heartfelt pleasure that I publicly extend to these groups my deepest gratitude.

The Tuesday night collection was Campus Chest's biggest fund - raiser ($475.00). I also wish to express my extreme gratitude to those who contributed. The idea of door-to-door collection was somewhat doubtful as far as response is concerned but the overwhelming donations received were especially encouraging. Counting was a slight problem—8,750 pennies ! ! Apparently many people donated the penny collection they had accumulated since childhood.

Nevertheless, it was fun (Happiness is Giving . . .) and once again—I thank all involved; collectors and contributors.

Protection Needed

To the editor:

Since the University reserves the right to use student rooms during vacations the closets in the rooms should be equipped with locks.

Before Spring vacation the residents of John Q. Adams will have to find a place to store items which have value. High School Principles will be using the girl's rooms for three days during this vacation.

One room will be reserved for storage on each floor but this will create problems. The residents must remove and pack their belongings in a short period of time. The storage room will be jammed with boxes and other items and the resident will be inconvenienced until all students have returned from vacation and removed their belongings.

The closets in John Q. Adams are not designed to be locked. The folding, slat - like curtains are held closed only by a magnet. Even if there were locks, the curtains could be easily broken into since the slats are held together by string.

Only dorms with closets that can be equipped with padlocks should be opened to guests. The University will probably continue to use student's rooms during vacations thus new dorms should be equipped with 'lockable' closets.

Modern Dance Group Seen As Coming Into Own at UMass

By RICHARD STORY

One of the finest chapters to date in the lamentably short history of modern dance on this campus was written this past weekend as the University's Concert Dance Group gave its spring performance. Under the direction of Marilyn Patton, of the Women's Phys Ed Dept., this group has grown very interestingly over the past several years; but until this performance, their spirit and enthusiasm have never quite been matched by an appropriate campus response.

Innovation and Imagination

The eleven numbers making up this spring concert seem to foretell very clearly that University dance is coming into its own now — there were more marks of innovation and imagination in this concert than in any several that I can recall from the past. Three particular aspects seem to warrant special notice as indications of this new life: the use of lighting and projected visual backgrounds gave wholly new effects to several dances, a greater variety in costuming contributed to heightening the effect of some numbers, and finally, the appearance of male dancers — five, in fact — should be cause enough for a strong feeling that the "sissy" prohibition against male dancers may at last be on the way out.

Special notice should also go to Anthony Crescione who, as with some past concerts, was responsible for music, as Musical Director. Crescione, with Allan Doty and Nicholas Valesquez, provided original music for five of the numbers, with recorded music for the remaining six.

Dances Described

"Shatterproof," choreographed and performed by Marilyn Gibson, Beverly Knapik, Carol Miller and Joan Santaroce was the first of the evening to give an indication of the direction that the concert would take. The combined effect of colored foil on the costumes and especially metallic music made the impression of unbreakable, but hard fighting girls most effective.

"Exodus," by Marilyn Patton, and performed by her with Nancy Bergsma, against a background of the movie theme Exodus, was especially good dancing. The use of colored light was indispensable here; and its use made for a very effective dance.

Jim Pastik, in a piece choreographed by Anne Drew, and danced by them with Lois Barclay, Nancy Bergsma, Reeva Goodman and Judy Reinherz, was the first of the men to appear—their number, "Primitif," was very nearly the fastest and most furious of the evening. The use of even the single prop drove home the message that theirs indeed was primitive feeling actualised. The music fit the spirit perfectly.

"Most Impressive Piece"

To my thinking, the most impressive number of the evening immediately preceded the intermission. Myron Cook, with Priscilla Massei, against recorded music and spoken lines from the book of Genesis, interpreted beautifully the formation of man from the dust of the earth. The dance stirred to life in a dark blue light as Adam awoke from his sleep of creation, bringing Eve with him to meet a new world. From behind a thin curtain the two moved in close coordination to an awareness of themselves and the new life. The music for "The man he called Adam; the woman Eve" was by Mayuzumi.

"And Now," "Moving Eight" and "Two in Space" were three more for which Anthony Crescione provided original music, and it was all very well done. "And Now" and "Theme and Variation" utilized beautiful solo dance, the first amid the context of eight dancers, and the latter as Janet Croft's own full-length solo. These two also benefited from the imaginative projected backgrounds of patterns of light and color.

"Plehem," choreographed by Christine Mitchell, and danced with Damien Kuffler, presented the most unique musical number—electronically produced and augmented sounds and noises, as many 20th century composers are pointed out, can come to have a beauty of its own. These two dancers seemed, for me, to portray this very well.

Erick Hawkins and his company visited the University for three days last summer, giving several performances, a talk, and a master class. It is difficult to say just how many of our campus dancers saw, and were influenced, by his concerts; but it is less difficult to say that the spirit of excitement and intensity which he and other American companies now display seems finally to have come to Amherst to reside.

Arab Ambassador Calls Israel Mid-East Aggressor

"After Vietnam, the Middle East is the most explosive area in the world," said George Tomeh, Syrian Ambassador to the United Nations. His address was the main feature of an Arab dinner sponsored by the Arab Students Organization Friday night. Mr. Tomeh stressed the impermanency of any Middle East settlement that ignores the refugee problem. These people often categorized as "infiltrators" by the "Zionist controlled American press" were seen as, "the legal owners of Palestine up to this very moment," who "had never seceded their rights to their homeland."

MDC by Kuffert & Dedekian

The ambassador attacked Israel as an "aggressor" whose crimes had been covered up by a "U.S. press overwhelmingly pro-Zionist." "In fact," said Mr. Tomeh, "Israel desired a war, to expand her borders, and precipated one." The speaker went on to catalogue the full history of the events of the June war, including the attack on the Liberty which he described as "deliberate."

Arab resistance to negotiations with Israel was justified since "no peace can be exacted under duress," and the Arabs were "determined to deny the aggressor the use of violence." Yet the present plight of Arabs under Israeli rule was described as "pitable" and the Ambassador charged that "a systematic action is being taken by Israeli authorities to drive Arabs out of Arab lands." Mr. Tomeh went on to state that the Arabs are being "pushed back into the desert." He closed by saying "we will never accept this destiny."

Scholarship Trust Fund Set Up In Memory of Late Howard Lebow

A trust fund in memory of the late Howard M. Lebow has been established by the University of Massachusetts music department, it was announced today by Dr. Philip Bezanson, head of the department.

Lebow was a UMass professor of piano and concert artist whose untimely death in an automobile accident in January cut short a brilliant musical career. The proceeds from his memorial will be used for scholarships to assist graduate and undergraduate students in the department of music.

"The music department feels this memorial fund is a most fitting way to perpetuate the memory of Howard Lebow," Dr. Bezanson said. "He was actively interested in trying to develop scholarships for the music department. Because of his genuine interest in talented students it is most fitting that talented students should continue to receive help in his name."

Operational by Fall

The scholarships will be awarded to students, selected by a special music committee, who demonstrate musical potential according to the ideals and standards of excellence that Mr. Lebow set for himself and for his students. "It is hoped," Dr. Bezanson continued, "that these scholarships will be in operation by September of 1968."

Howard Lebow came to the University in 1965. He was graduated from the Juilliard School in 1957, received his master's degree there in 1959, and was the winner of the school's highest pianistic honor, the Morris Loeb Memorial Prize. He also studied at the well-known State Academy of Music in Hamburg, Germany; the International Institute for New Music in Darmstadt, Germany and the Mozarteum Summer Academy in Salzburg, Austria.

He studied under Edward Stepermann, a pupil of composer Ferruccio Busoni, and became well-known for his performances of Busoni's works. Prof. Lebow was highly regarded as a concert artist and played frequently for audiences all over the U.S., in many European music capitals and for major European radio networks.

Internationally acclaimed as a remarkable pianist by music critics, Prof. Lebow was widely recognized as having a faultless technique, a richly varied touch and a distinctive feeling for style.

Contributions for the Lebow fund may be sent to Robert Brand, Associate Treasurer, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002, and marked for the Howard M. Lebow memorial trust fund.
